The Object of Christ's Coming.

God anciently conversed with our fathers by the prophets; but in these latter days he hath conversed with us by his Son; whom he hath constituted Heir of all things, who in the sublimity of his glory, and the image of himself, and upholdeth all by the energy of his Word; For God hath appointed a day in which he will rule the world in righteousness by the Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead. Acts xvii. 31. And for this purpose his Son will come to earth again as he has promised.

At his first advent he was led as a sheep to the slaughter. Acts viii. 32. At his second coming he will be as the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Rev. v. 5. His second appearing will be as real as his first, for the angels told his apostles that this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go; to his disciples he said. Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix 28.

So we understand why God will raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, close up the breaches thereof, raise up his ruins, and build it as in days of old. Amos ix. 11.

Christ is to reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously, Isa. xxiv 23, and for that reason the law shall go forth from Zion. Micah iv 2. So we follow on with Daniel's statement. The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms. Dan. ii 44. And the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Dan. vii 27.

Our Savior went through every city and village, preaching the Glad Tidings of the kingdom of God. Luke viii. 1. With righteousness will he judge the poor, Isa. ix. 2, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither will they learn war any more, and then shall the earth yield her increase, the desert shall blossom as the rose, Isa. xxxv. 1. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, Isa. lv. 13. They shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. Every man can sit under his own vine and fig tree; and none shall make them afraid. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them, and the cow and the bear shall feed, their young ones shall lie down together and the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den. Isa ix 6 8.

Christ is to reign until he shall put all enemies under his feet and the last enemy, death, will be abolished; but who is he said that every thing is subject to him, it is manifest that he is excepted who subjected all to him. Then the Son himself will be subject to him who subjected all to him so that God will be all in all. The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Messiah; and he will reign forever and ever. Rev. xi.

Who shall not fear thee oh Lord, and glorify thy name? because thou only art holy and just; because all nations shall come and worship before thee, since thy righteousness hath been revealed. Rev. xv.

And I saw an angel descend from heaven having the key to the abyss and a great chain in his hand Rev. xx. 1. And he seized the dragon, the old serpent who is the deceiver and satan who seduces the whole habitable world, and he bound him a thousand years, and he cast him into the abyss, and closed and sealed upon him; so that he might deceive the nations no more until these thousand years should be completed; but he shall be loosed for a little time. Those who have a part in the first resurrection will reign with Christ a thousand years, when these are completed satan will be released from his prison, and will go forth to seduce the nations that are in the four corners of the earth, gog and magog, and to assemble them for battle, whose number is as the sands of the sea. They are going upon the breadth of the earth to compass the camp of the saints and of the beloved city; but God sends fire from heaven and consumes them.

John the Revelator says he saw a great white throne, and him that sitteth thereon, from whose presence the earth and heaven fled away, and their place was not found. And I saw the dead great and small standing before the throne; and the books were opened and another book was opened which was the Book of Life, and the dead were judged according to their deeds, and the sea gave up the dead which were in them; and death and the grave gave up the dead in them and they were judged each one according to his deeds, and death and the grave were cast into the lake of fire, this is the second death, and if any one was not found enrolled in the Book of Life he was cast into the fire. Rev. xx.

Now we are going to have a new heaven and a new earth, for the former heaven and earth have passed away, and the sea was no more.

After God has put these all away here comes the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, and I heard a great voice from heaven which said, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men; and he will dwell with them, they will be his people and God will be with them, and will be a God to them, and every tear will be wiped from their eyes, and there will be no more death nor mourning nor wailing, nor shall pain be any more, because the former things are passed away. He also said, Behold, I make all things new. Write, Because these are the faithful and true words of God, I am the beginning and the completion. To him who thirsteth will I give of the fountain of living water gratis. He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my Son. The dear Lord has given us a glimpse into the Holy City of God, through his servant John.

Oh let us all so live that we may all meet in the kingdom of God, is my prayer. Then will the prayer be answered and not till then, Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

There's a beautiful valley brought to view,
As sung by the seers of old;
With its wonderful city, lovely city,
With streets of burnished gold.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES NUMBER 54.

I do not suppose when Auntie Willard penned these—her last letters—that she thought she would speak to the household of faith through them, after she had been laid away in her narrow house. But Mr. Wince and myself have been greatly cheered and blessed in re reading them and feel that just such letters are needed in these days of peril and prayerlessness and unbelief. They cannot but help the faltering ones. May God bless and use them for the glory of his great and ever adorable name is my humble prayer.

May 16, 1899, "The time seems so long since Jesus said, 'Surely I come quickly.' And so many, many times has my heart responded, 'Even so, come.' Bro. Wince, is your faith strong? I hope mine is for, if that fails me what have I left? Tell me what is the outlook? 'Watchman, what of the night?'

This morning, while the rest were coming into worship, I read to myself the 3rd chapter of 2 Timothy and I thought, while reading the 2nd and 3rd verses, of Bro. Cook's words—"All these men are in the church!" How dreadful the thought! No wonder the power of the first Christians has no place in these days. 'Neither cold nor hot.' I look upon them as a sign that we are near the end. But so long has it been a sign that it is no longer counted such. The condition of the churches has come to be looked upon as a matter of course and is no longer noticed save by the watchers."

Feb 6, 1900, "It seems to me as I write this date that I am surely getting old, while you in my mind's eye, look yet in the freshness of middle life. What a well spring is memory! How many a dainty it refreshes us with, that would otherwise be lost to us forever. One of these I feel that I must mention, hoping that I shall not be misunderstood. It was a thanksgiving in one of your prayers, Bro. Wince, 'Lord, I thank thee that Sister Willard ever came under our roof.' You know not my brother in Christ what a comfort at that time were these words to me, for happy as I was could him but fear that my long tarry might [illegible] wearisome, even to your kind hearts, but this re-assurance set me right, to the end of my visit, and made me wish before I left Indiana to come back to my home, for home it indeed seemed to me. Thank God for such homes; they are like his other gifts of sunshine and shower, given to us just when we need them. I think this good work of yours will find a place in that 'book of remembrance' which is being written before him. In my every fear night I saw you both resolutely carrying on the work which dear Bro. Chaplin so nobly sustained while he lived and I felt Bro Wince, that you would be as dearly beloved and as highly prized when you must lay down your armor as he was. Bro. and Sister Wince I expect to spend an eternity with you, not in Pierceton nor in heaven, but in the new heavens and new earth which are promised. I do so long to see Jesus. I have not seen him but yet I believe, so I have the blessings. Accept the love of us all and excuse repetitions and failures."

Rowland says, of this letter, "It is a tribute of love, which you may easily surmise has cost mother quite an ambitious effort. Yet we count it among our greatest blessings that she thus finds a way to spend her time and become work weary so she can rest by lying down." A letter had come to Auntie Willard that very day from the dear grand-daughter at Trenton. Of this letter the father says, "It is a subject of great thanksgiving, for Lizzie May is far above the common thought of girls, hungering and thirsting to do good to those about her. Her dress and powers of body and mind are in such harmony that she is bending and influencing others to highest simplicity of the practical life and thought. She gives the credit of all this to her dear grandma to whom she says,—'To lose interest in things is to grow old—but never otherwise.' And oh, how full of practical, ennobling complimentary interest is the dear Grandma! Lizzie May's letters are full of Scripture quotations, hymns and love of God and of the beautiful things he has made.

Clara is the musician of our school and stands No. 1, in her grade, while Rowland Jr. is steadily at work at the shipyard." The date of the letter now in my hands is Feb. 5, 1900, it was evidently written just one day before the ones from which I have been quoting. Rowland had just run up with a letter from Pierceton, torn open and ready to read and she speaks of "the gratitude of her mother-heart that she had a son to thus show interest for his failing mother."

Bro. Hastings had but recently died (Oct. 21, 1899) and the tidings were [illegible] heavy laden with grief to Auntie W. [illegible] Lord. Both he and his wife were beloved and intimate friends of hers, having spent many happy days under her roof. And she had mothered one of their sons in such firm and gentle way that he was sent home quite cured of his erstwhile waywardness and novel reading propensity and ever after, while she lived, when he wrote to her, signed himself 'Your other boy John."

'Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace,—was Auntie Willard's text in reference to Bro Hastings.

Sunday School Lesson.

Omri and Ahab lead Israel into greater Sin.—I Kings xvi. 15 33.

Golden Text—"Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov xiv. 34.

During the time of this lesson which concerns the northern kingdom of Israel, Asa followed by Jehoshophat, were kings in Judah.

We have here what is primarily a lesson on the degrading effects of sin. In its study we should bear in mind two important facts:—1. To attain to success, in a life or a nation, Obedience to God's law is essential. There is absolutely no other way to attain it. 2. God gives us the power of choice—and we can choose to do right, or to do wrong. God does not force us to do wrong, neither will he force us to do right. We make a choice of our own selves.

All we know about Omri before he was called to be king is that he was the general of Israel's army. The times were troublous ones for Israel. Omri was the sixth king of Israel. Being a soldier he saw that the place called Tirzah where Jeroboam had established his throne was hard to defend, so he bought the hill of Samaria. It was a conical hill some 400 feet above the bottom of the valley, and was a superior strategic position for defence. It commanded a full view of the sea and the plain of Sharon on the one hand, and the vale of Shechem on the other. It was a strong place for a capital, and showed Omri's choice of position to be well taken.

We are told that Omri walked in all the ways of Jeroboam He sinned himself, and caused Israel to sin, and provoked the Lord to anger at their actions. He did worse than all those who had preceded him. He reigned twelve years, and was succeeded by his son Ahab.

The times of Omri and Ahab much resemble our own. It is said "the world worships the man who gets there." This was largely the case in the time we are studying as well as at the present day. Any man who succeeds is praised. The methods used to attain success do not matter—the result is what men want to see. If an obstacle is in your way throw it aside. If a competitor balks you, crush him. Never mind justice or laws or religion; crush him. Results are what the world wants, but results that are attained by oppression injustice and deceit are worse than failures.

The name Ahab means "one who closely resembles his father," and as Ahab did follow his father in military achievement, he also followed him in his idolatrous practices, and did evil 'above all that were before him." It is said by one writer that "sin, like a poisonous weed, re-sows itself, and becomes eternal by reproduction."

Ahab went to greater excesses than his father, and married Jezebel who was the daughter of Ethbaal the king of the Zidonians, and he served Baal, and built a house and temple for this heathen worship in Samaria, his own capital. Thus he added more bad companions to his household. Jezebel made herself attractive by dress and adornment, and became master of her husband, who was a mere tool in her hands.

Solomon had allowed his heathen wives to worship their various gods, but Ahab rejects Jehovah by joining the heavy laden with grief to Auntie W. [illegible] worship of Baal, the most degrading form of idolatry the world has ever known.

It is of the utmost importance if we would have clean lives that we avoid false friendships and bad companions. Our environments, the people we come in contact with, are potent factors in our lives.

While these evil companions with their influence brought Ahab down to the lowest depths, the worst result was the dragging of Israel down, and causing the people to sin as he did. He led his people away from God, causing them to stumble and fall still farther. Jesus in Luke xvii 1 2 pronounces a woe on him who shall cause another to stumble.

The fact of God demanding that men choose their own course, places the responsibility on us for the influence we exert on those about us. The question for each to ask is Am I a stumbling-block, or am I a stepping-stone? I am surely one or the other, and may God help each scholar and teacher to make the wise choice while there is time.

Editor Restitution:

Find enclosed money order for $1 50 now due on my paper for the coming year, as I think the new move by a few subscribers will have the effect of stirring up the old soldiers of the cross to your support, so that you will not have to stop printing the grand old RESTITUTION—but what shall we look for next.

Your Brother in hope,

EXOS COX.

Dear Restitution:

We are again enabled by the goodness of our Heavenly Father to renew our subscription to THE RESTITUTION for another year. I do pray that a spirit of more brotherly love will be manifested the coming year than has been in the past in the discussion of questions that only make strife and confusion. Let us strive for peace and love as brethren. If ye have love one for another, by this shall all know that ye are my disciples.

Yours in the hope,

H B FOWLER.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Christmas is past, and the old year is almost gone, never to return. What is in the past we cannot recall, and harsh words that have been written can never be erased. Oh, my Brothers and Sisters, who have taken that precious name, that we may be sons and daughters of God, don't let us take his name in vain, and let our hearts be so full of his love and spirit that no hate or malice may creep in during the New Year.

Love to all Brethren and Sisters,

AMY A. JOHNSON.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find an order for $2 00 to renew for the coming year and fifty cents for the Helping Fund. We cannot do without THE RESTITUTION, as it has been a weekly visitor for many years. May it still continue to carry the glad tidings of truth to its many readers.

Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

MISS REBECCA SWAIN.

WE trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compels all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1 50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1 50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

The Restitution.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, OFFICE EDITOR

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 11 1911.

Most of our space is given to our contributors this week.

It has been said that the report of the General Conference held at Waterloo, Iowa, last summer was not fully given in the published report. As the Editor of this paper was the Secretary of that meeting, and wrote out and published the report, this is another attempt to injure us, and we will simply relate.

When we went to that Conference we went simply to take notes of what was said and done, therefore had a supply of paper and pencils for such use. The meeting saw fit to endall us as Secretary. We [illegible] the honor, and because it gave a table instead of our knee to write on. We took note of what was said and done as we went to do. At the end of each session we wrote out a report of the proceedings of that meeting, and when the meeting reassembled, each time the Chairman called for a reading of the minutes of the previous meeting. This was given each time, and no not one was a correction or change offered. They he then present the Chairman each time approved the minutes as read.

As this was the first time we had been called upon to report meetings officially, we will confess to some misgivings at first, but as the [illegible] that meeting there were present school teachers, preachers etc. and one a lawyer. However, when not one single fault was found with the reports given, by any of these [illegible] often, we will like wise confess to a feeling of satisfaction that we have been able to please all so well. The reports of the several gatherings, as read, constituted the published report, and we deemed that to be what the general brotherhood wanted to know.

It is but right to say that during the absence of the Secretary at the very last session, Sister Eva Stearns, the very able Secretary of the Iowa Conference was called to the table and made notes of the proceedings, and we hope no one will be so unsentimentally as to find fault with her excellent work.

To be sure, we made rather curious notes of what was said by the brethren there assembled, and if any one is curious to know the exact words used by most of those who took part in the discussions, we can give them, but it better be through private request, because we feel sure that some of the brethren when cooled down, will not want to father their own words—or at least will not care to have them published. We shall not throw them in the waste basket, but have them in "cold storage" for preservation.

Query.—What would a judge hold as the best evidence: Notes taken carefully at the time, by one appointed to do so; or what some one chanced to call to mind months after? However, if any brother knows of something that was omitted in making the report, let him stop generalizing, and come down to something specific, and most gladly and cheerfully will we acknowledge any omission, oversight or error.

Question.

To R. G. Huggins, D. C. Robison, Almus Adams and all others who believe in a partial resurrection of the dead:

ACTS XXVI 8.

The Apostle Paul as he stood before king Agrippa said "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?"

Who does the Apostle refer to when he says "the dead?"

Those dead in trespass and sin?

Those who have died righteous?

Those who have died unrighteous?

Or those who have died neither righteous or unrighteous?

An answer through THE RESTITUTION, Present Truth, Last Days or a personal letter, will be appreciated by

Yours for the Truth,
O. J. ALLARD.

The above question, or questions, we presume are asked by our Brother in good faith. He has likely got into trouble in understanding what Paul was endeavoring to impress on king Agrippa, and wants the matter explained. We trust that one of the three brethren can answer in one of the four mediums named, so that our Brother's mind will be at rest on the subject, and that it will not be necessary to contend over the question so very long.

Communicated.

"The Serpent Rationally Investigated."

I recently came across the following short article from the "Jewish Occident," showing the origin of the word "serpent," which may be of help to Bible students. It endeavors to show from Isa. xiv 29. the origin of the Serpent. The following is an extract from the "Occident":

"The common and highly pernicious idea is, that the serpent which entered the Garden of Eden was a crawling and inferior animal as now bears the name of serpent. We must first try to correct this idea, and obtain the true idea of the figure which the serpent made in paradise. We will first try to prove that the serpent was a seraph. In the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah and twenty-ninth verse, we read: For out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent." If we examine the original Hebrew, we will find that the first word translated serpent in this text is nahash, and that the serpent at the end of the text is seraph in the original. Now, if serpent (nahash) generates the cockatrice, and the fruit of the latter is the flying seraph, it is not a wild conclusion that the serpent and the seraph belong to the same family. Further. Examine the Hebrew of the twenty-first chapter of Numbers and sixth verse, we will find that certain serpents are pointed out particularly as being seraphim or seraphim. The brazen serpent which Moses lifted up in the wilderness to cure the people that were bitten, was called a seraph. Theologicist, in all his searches among the strata of the earth, finds the serpent as the most marked specimen of animal degradation.

Let us suppose that the seraphim or fiery flying serpents in the time of Moses were specimens of physical degradation—a vast degradation from the seraphs that moved on the earth when Adam was still a holy being. And let us suppose that Isaiah in the vision of his sixth chapter, when he saw the heavenly seraphim before the throne of God, then saw that noble form of the serpent or seraph which it originally had on earth. How noble was the form of the seraph as Isaiah saw it! The Lord was sitting on the exalted throne, and then Isaiah saw the seraphim above: "Each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory." The interesting conjecture to which these texts lead us is, that the animal, serpent, or seraph had, before the curse of sin came on the earth, the same glorious form in which the heavenly seraphim appeared to Isaiah, that it was elegance of form and sagacity, the head of all the beasts of the field, and that it was in this glorious form that the angels of heaven visited paradise, and appeared before our first parents to hold conversation. If this conjecture is true, it follows that the lying serpent was not the first seraph that stood, or walked, or flew in paradise. Dismiss, then the pernicious idea, that it was a footless, venomous, sneaking serpent that spoke to Eve, and discussed religion with her; believe rather that it was a splendid seraph, having six wings, with two covering his face, with two covering his feet, and flying with the other two,—that it was the same figure in which the angels of light often came down from heaven and appeared before Adam."

I submit the above to the readers of THE RESTITUTION, without expressing my own convictions for the present.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.
W. H. WILSON.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

What a grand paper THE RESTITUTION is, and what a noble work Bro. Underwood has done in publishing it so long and ably. I do not see how any one can find fault with it under his management. We are none of us perfect. It is very easy to make mistakes, and still easier to fall into the habit of wearing "them" glasses that cause us to magnify the faults of others, and be blind to our own. It reminds me of a Baptist minister I once heard preach. Apparently some one had been criticising his sermons, and he said if you think it is easy to please every one "just come up here and try it." We are prone to imagine the wonderful things "I would do if I were you," but as "I'm not you, but only I" we do no better, if as well, as the one we find fault with.

If we could just get into the habit of appreciating the good we find in others, every one of us would be the happier.

"Don't look for the faults
As you go through life,
And even if you find them,
It is always kind
To be somewhat blind,
And look for the virtue behind them.

It is a great thing just to be alive and well. When we remember the vast number of "the down and out" there are in the world—when we think of what life was in the "dark ages," we ought to be more than glad to be living in the close of 1910, and very thankful that the world is nearer the coming of Jesus today than it ever has been before. The world needs him—the world is going to have him. I am afraid if Jesus should come and find us engaged in picking at those who are trying to do their level best, we would [illegible] like [illegible] to the mountains to fall upon us and hide us from his presence.

"Just do your best" to spread the truth of his coming, and let the work of a future age rest in his care. "Now we see through a glass darkly;" now we know in part; but by and by we, if worthy, shall see eye to eye and know as we are known.

"Yes leave it with Him.
The lilies all do,
And they grow sweetly grow.
They grow in the rain,
They grow in the law.
Still they grow, sweetly grow."

Don't be among the number that would put down a good work, but work shoulder to shoulder and build for eternity. United we stand, divided we fall."

We know God rules in the kingdoms of men; we have the promise that the "Judge of all the earth will do right;" "God stands within the shadow, keeping watch." His ways are not our ways. His glance sweeps eternity. His is the eye that never slumbers. His is the care that never relaxes, or grows weary; and so we trust him, knowing that he that holds the ocean in the hollow of his hand, and guides the stars in their onward course, will guide our frail craft o'er life's rough seas, into the quiet haven of eternal rest.

LILLIE H. WILLIS.

Dear Brother Underwood,

The time for my paper [illegible] soon, and I don't want to be delinquent but always on time if possible, so will send you five dollars. After deducting the proper amount for my subscription, put the balance in Helping Fund, as I realize how those might feel who cannot afford to pay for their Church paper, as I have been poor myself. My heart goes out in sympathy for all deserving poor, and our Savior said that the Gospel would be preached to the poor. I always want to do all I can for the Lord's poor, especially the isolated ones.

The compliments of the season to all the brethren.

Your Sister in hope.
LYDIA R. FREER.

Editor Restitution:

Inc. find $1.50 for which send THE RESTITUTION for 1911. I am so thankful that you will still conduct the dear old paper, for I have taken it since when it came as the Gospel Banner. I realize that my time is short, as I am in my 70th year and have poor health.

Yours in hope of the soon coming King.

ELIZA BARTLEY.

Editor Restitution:

I have seen nothing yet of our Love Feast letters that we used to have. I hope the dear brothers and sisters are not getting weary in well doing, for I think it was so lovely to thus hear from the dear ones scattered abroad. It is so nice to know that a few are looking for the return of our dear Savior. Hoping he may find faith on the earth when he comes, is my sincere wish.

Yours in the love of truth,
MRS. C. E. PERDUE.

Editor Restitution:

I am still on the land and among the living. I am keeping my eyes Zionward, as it seems from the signs of the times that it points our minds to the soon coming of our Redeemer and our King. Oh, how I wish I was where I could hear the gospel preached, for the preaching here is after the manner of man. A friend of mine was boasting about his preacher. He was such a good speaker, and preached the gospel so plain. I said I want to ask a question. In all of his preaching has he told you anything about the second coming of Christ, and the restoration of Israel, and the setting up of the kingdom on earth, and Christ's reign on the throne of his father David in Mount Zion and Jerusalem? He answered, No, he did not say anything about that. I told him his minister did not preach the gospel, for he could not preach the gospel and leave these things out. People do not like to here these things, but I must defend the truth, I can't help what others say. The truth makes me free, and I must tell it to others the best I can, and when I get a chance. People can talk about everything else, but when it comes to the Word of God they are mum.

My prayer goes out for the old wheel-horses of the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus. May the blessings of God be with them in all their good work. "Work, for the night is coming."

Your Brother waiting for the King of kings and Lord of lords, then sorrow and tears will all vanish.

JESSE HARROLD.

Dear Arthur:

That Preachers Association appears to treat you with downright contempt. There is rottenness at the bottom. Only one man in it disappoints me, that is ——— I thought better of him.

I have been out and in at your home, but I never treated you with disrespect. I have eaten at your table, and I always cherish a high regard for both you and your wife. Although we differ on some points, and I have not always approved of some things in THE RESTITUTION, yet in many respects you have conducted it better than others who have had control, and no doubt better than those who complain against its management. You have given me liberty in the paper, and I have been gentleman enough not to abuse that liberty.

Yours in hope of life,
GEO MOYER.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find money order for $3 00 to pay for THE RESTITUTION this year, and the rest for the Helping Fund, $1 25 from my mother, Mrs. Perego who is 80 years old, the rest from myself. There seems to be some contention on some points that I hope the brethren will drop. We never can all see alike on every little thing. We like the dear old RESTITUTION, your Editorials suit us exactly. May the Lord prosper and help you is our prayer.

Yours for the truth.
MRS. B. COLEMAN.

Editor Restitution:

I am sending you my subscription for 1911. We think a great deal of THE RESTITUTION, having taken it for many years. It has always been my grandfather's delight.

Your Brother in the truth.
CHAS E. ANDERSON.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

Find enclosed post office order to pay for THE RESTITUTION, as we are getting up in years with poor health, and can have the good old paper at our door, and can read it and know what is going on in the churches of like precious faith. It well paid us last week to read the paper. Let the blessed hope of our Lord's coming be our watch-word, for we know by the signs of the times that the Lord's coming is nigh, even at the door.

Brothers and Sisters, let us be waiting and watching for our Lord's return. Be steadfast, Brother Underwood, stand by your post.

Your unworthy Sister.
MARY E. ROBEY.

Editor Restitution:

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all the dear brothers and sisters. Let us all so live that we will hear the Master say Well done. I am young in the faith, having only been a member about three months. I hope I may live up to God's true Word and be counted among the righteous.

Remember me one and all in your prayers.

Yours in the hope,
FLORRIE V EPPIKE.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed find $1.50 for THE RESTITUTION for another year. It has been a weekly visitor in our home since its publication, and we always find it full of good things. May we all be found faithful when Christ comes.

Your Brother in hope.
L. F. COFFIN.

Editor Restitution:

A word to the members of that Ministerial Association: Dear brethren, I am personally acquainted with some of you, and it pains me much to see another attempt at splitting up the Church. Is the trouble because Bro. Underwood is trying to shut out controversy on subjects that are not necessary to ensure salvation? Paul said that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe. Christ says he came to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God.

Yours for the Truth,
J. B. LENT.

Editor restitution:

Bro F. V Blakely of Grand Rapids gave an able and instructive talk to the ones of the faith at Eastport, Michigan on Sunday evening, Dec. 25. As a blizzard was raging the audience was small but we of the faith felt much repaid by having the opportunity of listening to a gospel sermon again.

We realize the truth is not popular and that the time has come when people do not care to hear sound doctrine but we know there is a crown of righteousness promised to all who prove faithful and love our dear Savior's appearing. May we all be kept in the way of truth and righteousness until he comes and may he come quickly.

Your Sister in Christ.
CARRIE CHAMBERLIN.

Dear Brother Underwood:

It may be it is because I have passed through such a series of troubles that I believe were unavoidable and unmerited, that I am quick to sympathize with those that are in trouble. I am unable with all the evidence I have to pass judgment on the management of THE RESTITUTION, I will defer any such action. I became aware that there might be trouble as some time ago I met a brother who was so unliberal in his sentiments that he seemed afraid to work with one of more liberal views.

Oh brethren, let us give more attention to self purification.

Is it true that the ambitious climb higher in religion as well as in politics over the dead bones of the fallen ambitious? What havoc must result from uncurbed humanity in aspirations to leadership!

I have just had an invitation to go to Arlington and hold meetings on Christmas. My greatest ambition is to have mental, physical and spiritual strength in sufficient degrees to reach a home where I may carry the message of peace to the nations.

Much contention has darkened the way to many, and yet Christ is coming. Will it be dark till he comes? or will the voice of those who want pure light reach higher than the voice of contention?

With love for all,
W. L. SKEELS.

Christmas Report.

To the kind friends who helped in the Christmas work, the Chicago Bereans wish to report that baskets were sent to ten families, and $9 00 given in money. We gave staple rather than perishable articles, so that the help received would not be just temporary help.

To each family was sent apples, oranges, potatoes, turnips, onions, butter, sugar, rice, tapioca, beans, peas, crackers, oatmeal, graham and oatmeal—gingersnaps, chocolate drops, popcorn, peanuts, and in canned goods, corn, succotash, beans, tomatoes, and syrup.

Seven of these people are widows, who support their families by washing or scrubbing in down-town buildings, and the children in each family range from three to eight in number.

In two of the families the fathers had been out of work for a long time and one woman with six children had been deserted by her husband.

In some cases the money was more acceptable as in the case of an aged sister, in a distant city, who has room and board provided, but not a cent of money but what is given to her; and also that of an aged couple whose income is so very tiny. All were very thankful for the money received.

Three Sister Bereans sent six pairs of warm hand-knit mittens and these were delivered on Christmas morning.

We wish to thank you all for your help and trust that the New Year will draw us all nearer and closer in the love and work of the Master; keeping our lives by his commands; and let perfect love work in us, driving out everything but that which will make us the children of the King, watching and longing for his appearing.

LEILA E. WHITEHEAD.

"The trouble with too many of our prayers is that we urge that our own will be done instead of asking that God's will may be done."

THE RESTITUTION is only $1 50 per year. Try it a year.

Obituary.

Death has again entered the home of Bro. and Sister Calvin Winchester, this time taking their youngest child, the only unmarried one of eight children. She had been with her brother Roy and family, who live in South Bend, Ind., for about six months. She was sick two weeks, death resulting from a complication of diseases. Her mother was with her at the time of her death, her father having come home to Byron, to prepare the house for her soon return, as she was thought to be rapidly improving when he left her, but she became suddenly worse on Wednesday, and died before he could reach there. She was brought home, and funeral services were conducted at the home on Sunday, by the writer.

Eugenia C. Winchester was born in Byron Jan. 18, 1890, and died in South Bend, Ind., at her brother Roy's home, Dec. 18, 1910. Genie was baptized into the Christ at Dutton by Elder B. W. Woodward, three years ago last June. Her father, mother, four brothers, three sisters and many other relatives and friends will miss her genial smile, and affectionate ways, in the home and neighborhood. The following verses were read as the closing words of the funeral service. The father and mother and friends have our sympathy.

M. A. WOODWARD

I would not live always,
I ask not to stay,
Where storm after storm
Rises dark o'er the way.
The few cloudy mornings
That dawn on us here,
Are enough for life's woes
Full enough for its cheer.

Oh, who would live always Away from his God,
Away from you fair
Thrice blissful abode,
Where sickness e'er comes
And tears never flow;
Oh, I would live there.
Let me go, let me go.

I would not live always,
No, welcome the tomb,
Since Jesus has lain there
I dread not its gloom.
There sweet be my rest,
Till he bids me arise,
To hail him in triumph
Descending the skies.

Oh, I would live always
When carnage shall cease,
When strife will be hushed
In the silence of peace.
When trouble will vanish,
And sorrow be o'er,
And the song and the sound of mourning
Are heard nevermore.

Oh, I would live always
When Eden shall bloom,
And fragrance delightful
The air shall perfume.
When robes of richest verdure
Shall mantle the plain,
And beauty transcendant
Unceasingly reign.

Oh, I would live always
Triumphant o'er death,
When life is unending,
And not a mere breath.
A sighing creation
No longer shall groan,
Where age is as childhood,
And death is unknown.

Oh, I would live always
When Zion shall sing,
With concord enraptured
To Jesus her King.
One Lord shall be crowned
To the sceptre of earth,
And the ransomed of ages
Shall receive their new birth.

Oh, I want to be ready
When Jesus shall come,
To gather his people
To Eden, their home.
Oh, let me be numbered
Amidst that bright throng,
Salvation and glory
The conqueror's song.

James S. Whitcomb, son of James L. and Barbara Whitcomb, was born June 27, 1868, in Clinton Co., Indiana in the same township in which he died Jan. 2, 1911, at the age of 42. Death came as a relief from a long period of suffering from tuberculosis of the bowels. He leaves a wife, son and daughter, mother and two brothers.

Funeral services were held at the residence by the writer, on the sleep and hope of awakening, in which faith he went to rest peacefully. Ours the burden that remains "till the day dawn." May its freedom be ours with him.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

Is God Dead?

A little girl, whose father had once been very active in the work of the church, but had ceased to work or to pray, climbed on his lap one day and said, "Papa, is God dead?" "Why, no, my child; why do you ask?" "Oh you never talk to him any more, and I thought perhaps he was dead."

Perhaps from the lives of many of us the world could not be sure whether God was dead or not.

Broken Cisterns.

They have hewed out for themselves cisterns,
Broken cisterns—they can hold no water;
They have also changed God's ordinances,
And then some say it does not matter.

'Tis a trinue God they worship too,
God declares there is no one but me;
For I am God, and there is none else,
But they are blind and they cannot see.

His immortal too they claim to be.
God says that man is made from the dust,
And when his brief life has passed away
To his earth again returns he must.

To heaven at his death Christ went they say
Scripture says he was laid in the grave;
But he rose again on the third day,
And so he has now the power to save.

Christ says he will return here to reign,
And raise his dead saints to life again,
And give to them immortality.
Old faithful many of his saints were slain

By those who made the broken cisterns,
Changed the truth of God into a lie,
And got out the false creeds and systems,
For this they and their dupes will die.

The article by Brother Knapp in this issue on "Our Fellowship" has the Bible ring, and written at this time when the spirit of compromise is in the air, is most opportune.

Brother Huggins:

I have decided that I should like another one of your books as a gift, so will enclose the money in this letter.

Allow me at this time to congratulate you on the article in THE RESTITUTION, in answer to a Sister's letter, as it is just my sentiments. Our Evangelists are doing a great work, but I see the need of shepherds all over the country. I think that is the one great reason for the number of different opinions, as an Evangelist only stays long enough in one place to scatter the seed, and it grows or dies without care according to the strength in itself. I am one of the isolated ones; but feel that if more pastoral work were done our people would best younger. With best wishes.

Our Fellowship.

Society! Companionship! Whoare we to fellowship? Abide in me, and I in you, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. John xv. 4 9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. I John 1 9. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. God is light, if we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John 1 3, 7. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we being many, are one body in Christ and every one members one of another. Rom xii 4 5 Be kindly affectionate one to another with brotherly love. Rom xii 10. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body. I Cor xii 13. For God hath not appointed us to wrath but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, and be at peace among ourselves. Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thes v 9, 13, 14. Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Gal vi 1, 2. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Rom xv 1. 2. It seems to be a safe plan to fellowship with those that are led by the Spirit, and if led by the Spirit, one will see the fruits of the Spirit. Gal v 22, 23. And such fellowship will lead one to live very close to the blessed Redeemer, cause him to obey his commands, and at last reap the rich reward promised, viz. Eternal Life.

Who are we not to fellowship with? Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done in secret. Eph v 11. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth, with an infidel? Come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you. 2 Cor vi 14. 18 But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. I Cor x 20 Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions, and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned and avoid them Rom xvi 17. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard or an extortioner with such an one not to eat. I Cor v 11 Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. 13th verse, read also Deut xiii Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us, and, if any obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed 2 Thes iii 6. 14. But if he neglect to hear the church let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican. Matt xviii 15. 17. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words; from such withdraw thyself. 1 Tim vi 3, 5. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, from such turn away. 2 Tim iii 1, 5 Avoid foolish questions, a man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject. Titus i 13, 16, and iii 9, 11. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. 2 John x Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience Be ye not therefore partakers with them. Eph v 6. 7 Deliver my soul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue. Psa cxx 2.

From the above we think there are many of us, that fellowship many we ought not to. It certainly does not make a harmonious assembly, where part believe in the pre existence of Christ, part in universal salvation, part that Christ was the son of Joseph until his resurrection, and many other isms. A church divided against itself cannot stand. Any one's belief is their creed, according to Webster. And when an outsider hears so many different creeds from the same church, it make them hold back. If I was going to advise any one that was just now organizing a new church, I would advise that a declaration in the things believed, should be believed in by every one before they could be accepted into that church and have unity and harmony.

Yours in hope.

Nebraska Berean Lesson. No. 3.

THE NATURE OF MAN: SPIRIT CONSIDERED.

1. What is the "breath of life?" Compare Gen. ii 7, with Job xxvii. 3.
2. What is the spirit? Compare Eccl. xii 7, with Psa cxlvi. 4.
3. Read Gen 7th chapter. Then (a) identify the breath and spirit; (use margin in doing this) (b) show that the beasts share with man in the possession of spirit; and (c) by reason make it evident how the above two truths conflict with the immortality of the spirit.
4. What condition was man in before he had the breath or spirit of life? Jas. ii. 20. (margin.) Gen. ii 7.
5. By evidence you can call from the books and chapters subjoined show that when man dies he returns to the same condition in which he was before he existed. Gen. iii. Job x Psa. xlix Obadiah.
6. Show by reason how your answer to question number 5 destroys both the immortality of the spirit and the conscious state of the dead.
7. Solomon speaks of "the spirit of man" in Eccl 3rd chapter. Can you find in the same chapter the same expression about the beasts? If so, draw some conclusions from the fact.
8. Judging from statements in the same chapter, What is death?
9. What evidence is there in this chapter to show that man in the death state is in the same conditions as the beasts?

ANSWERS.

THE NATURE OF MAN: SPIRIT CONSIDERED.

I. In comparing Gen ii. 7. with Job xxvii. 3, in the former it speaks of the breath of life being breathed into man's nostrils, in Job xxvii. he speaks of the spirit of God being in his nostrils. the margin reads "the breath which God gave him." I take from this then that the breath is the same as the spirit.

II. In Psalms we read "His breath goeth forth" and in Ecclesiastes it is spoken of as the spirit which returned to God. The spirit is the breath.

III. (a) In Gen. vii. 22, the breath of life is again said to be the spirit of life. The breath and the spirit is one and the same.

(b) The 21st and 22nd verses say, "And all flesh, cattle, beast, fowl and man, all that hath the breath of life, (margin. the breath of the spirit of life) in his nostrils died." Both man and beast possess the spirit.

(c) Both man and beast possess the breath or spirit of life. If man's spirit is immortal there would be some difference in the spirit of man and beast. The spirit of man and beast returns to God and their bodies to the earth. Psa cxlvi and Eccl xii. 7.

IV. Man, before God put the breath of life into his nostrils was clay; he was lifeless.

V. Man was clay before he possessed the spirit of life, so after death he returns to dust, Job x. 9, and his spirit to its Giver. Psa. xlix tells us that man, like the beasts that perish, goes to the grave and is consumed.

VI. As the brain is the seat of consciousness, when man dies his body, including the brain, returns to dust. There can be no consciousness of man in death.

VII. In the 21st verse of Ecclesiastes Solomon speaks of the spirit of man and beast. He asks who knows where the spirit of man and beast goes? In the 18th and 19th verses he tells us that man is a beast, they have one breath, and goeth to one place.

VIII Death is an unconscious condition of man or beast.

IX. In the 18th and 19th verses of the same chapter we read that man is like the beast, they dieth alike, goeth to the same place and all return to dust.

LILLIAN KING.

I. The breath of life is vital principle, animal spirit, through which the body lived. Comparison of Gen. ii. 7, with Job xxvii. 3, shows that man became a living soul after the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils, and in Job iii. it shows that while the breath was sustained in him and the spirit of God in his nostrils he was a living man.

II. Spirit represents an intelligent being. A power proceeding from a living being A state of mind or feeling. The breath or spirit of life. Comparison of Eccl. xii. 7. with Psa cxlvi. 4. The spirit or breath in these texts means the life of man. When the breath or spirit goes forth he becomes dust of the ground and the spirit returns unto God who gave it. In Acts xvii 25. "He giveth to all life and breath, and all things." In James i 17. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the Father."

III (a) Gen. vii. 22nd verse identifies breath and spirit, "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died."

(b) Gen. i. 24, shows that beasts share with man in possessing spirit. The same term "living soul" or "living creature" was applied to animals in the sea and on the land before man's creation.

(c) The term "living soul" does not mean an immortal soul.

IV For when Adam died it was positive proof that he was not immortal. Eccl iii 19. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other, they all have one breath; so that a man hath no pre eminence above a beast; for all is vanity."

V. "For as the body without the spirit, (or breath) is dead, so faith without works is dead also," Jas. ii. 26. Gen. ii 7, shows that man was a lifeless soul until the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils.

VI. Job x 9, "Remember I beseech thee that thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again." Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, unto dust thou shalt return." Psa. xlix 14, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling." Obadiah 10th verse, "For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea they shall swallow down and they shall be as though they had not been."

VII. There can be no consciousness and intelligence without a living, material organism. Psa. vi. 5, "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

VIII Eccl. iii. 21st verse speaks of the spirit of man and the spirit of the beast and shows that there was no distinction between spirit of man and spirit of beast.

IX Death is the extinction of life.

X. Eccl. iii. 20. shows that man and beast are in the same condition in the death state. "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

EMMA NEWELL.

1. "The breath of life" is what God breathed into man's nostrils to make him a living soul, Gen. ii. 7. In Job xxvii. 3, Job says, "For my life is yet whole within me," and then, a fact of equal importance, (the two must go together,) "And the spirit of God is in my nostrils." The spirit of God and the breath of life were both necessary to life. Unless we accuse God of giving one kind of life to Adam and another to Job, we must admit that the "breath of life" and "spirit of God" are the same. No one will deny that the "breath of life" is the air we breathe just as the bread of life is the food we eat. Neither of these by itself is life but only the means of life. It takes the uniting of the two to produce life, just as it takes the mixture of air with the fuel in the stove to produce fire or the life of the stove. The breath of life is not life itself. The spirit is not life itself.

II. The spirit is what leaves the body at death and returns unto God. Eccl. xii 17.

III. Psa. cxlvi. 4, says that the breath "goes forth" leaves the body and man dies—goes back to dust—loses consciousness. The spirit is the breath of life.

(a) According to Gen. vii. the "breath of life" and "spirit of life" are the same. Verse 15 says, "And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life." Verse 22 says "All in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life, of all that was on dry land died." The terms are used interchangeably. The class of beings who went into the ark had the breath of life. The same class of beings that stayed outside the ark had the breath of the spirit of life in them.

(b) The beasts share with man in the possession of spirit. In verse 21, chapter vii. the different beings are enumerated that remained outside the ark, "both birds, and cattle, and beasts and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every man." In verse 22, man and beasts are included under the collective pronoun "all." "All in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life." The "all" means beasts as well as man.

(c) The spirit cannot be immortal. the spirit is the breath of life, the breath of life is the air (certain elements of it) air cannot be immortal as it does not have even life. If the spirit of man is immortal the spirits of the beasts are immortal also.

IV Before man had the "breath of life" or the spirit of life he was dead. According to Gen. ii. 7, man did not live until the breath of life was breathed into him. According to Jas. ii. 26. the body is dead without the spirit. The body is identical with the lumps of clay which God formed and is the man "God formed man of the dust of the ground." When the spirit or breath is in the body we have a live body, or man. When the spirit or breath is out of the body we have a dead body or man.

V. Evidences of man's condition when he dies as Gen. vii 21, says, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth both birds and cattle and beasts and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every man." Verse 23 "And every thing lifeless soul until the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils.

VI. Job x 9, "Remember I beseech thee that thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again." Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, unto dust thou shalt return." Psa. xlix 14, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling." Obadiah 10th verse, "For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea they shall swallow down and they shall be as though they had not been."

VII. There can be no consciousness and intelligence without a living, material organism. Psa. vi. 5, "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

VIII Eccl. iii. 21st verse speaks of the spirit of man and the spirit of the beast and shows that there was no distinction between spirit of man and spirit of beast.

IX Death is the extinction of life.

X. Eccl. iii. 20. shows that man and beast are in the same condition in the death state. "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Verse 23 "And every thing lifeless soul until the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils. Job x. 18 19 Job in uttering his complaints says "Wherefore thou hast brought me forth out of the womb? I had given up the ghost and no eye had seen me, I should have been as though I had not been." By giving up the ghost (spirit) he would have been as though he had never been. Psa. xlix 12, "He is like the beasts that perish" verse 14 "They are appointed as a flock for sheol. Death shall be their shepherd." Their beauty shall be for sheol to consume, that there is no habitation for it. Verse 20 "Is like the beasts that perish." Man is in a death state when he died. Obadiah verse 8, "Shall I not in that day, saith Jehovah, destroy the wise men out of Edom?" Verse 16, "Yea they shall drink and swallow down and shall be as though they had not been."

VI. The foregoing texts speak of death as a "destruction" as a "being as though they had not been." It would be impossible to destroy anything immortal, therefore the spirit cannot be immortal as it is a part of the living man, and if God says he destroyed a thing he means the whole thing and not a part of it. The spirit could not be conscious after death for man in death is "as though he had not been" (nothing)

VII. Eccl. iii. 21, "Who knoweth the spirit of man whether it goeth upward, or the spirit of beast whether it goeth downward to the earth." Verse 19, "They all have one breath" the margin says spirit. Conclusion. The spirit of man and the spirit of beasts were not distinguishable. The question is asked "Who knoweth?" In so many words it says they have the same breath (or spirit.)

VIII. Death is returning to the dust. Eccl. iii. 20.

IX. Eccl. iii. 19, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth the beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other, yea they all have one breath and man hath no preeminence above the beast; for all is vanity." Verse 20. "All go unto one place, all are of the dust and all (man and beast) return unto the dust." These texts prove conclusively that man and beast are in the same condition during death.

ALTA KING.

I. In Gen ii 7. God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Now it was the breath that God gave man to cause him to live Job xxvii 3 All the while my breath is in me, and the [marginal reading breath which God gave him] spirit of God is in my nostrils. Job xxvii 3, refers to Gen ii 7.

II. Eccl xii 7, then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit, (or breath) shall return unto God who gave it. Psa cxlvi 4. His breath (or spirit) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish.

III (a) Gen vii 22, All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, [marginal, the breath of the spirit of life] of all that was in the dry land died.

(b) Gen vii 21. All flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; (22 verse) all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died. This shows that the beasts possess a spirit, the same as man.

(c) Gen vii 28, states that every living substance was destroyed, both man and cattle. These all had the spirit or breath of life, and if the spirit was immortal, the man and beast could not be destroyed.

IV Gen ii 7. God formed man of the dust of the ground, so he was a form of a man without the breath, or spirit. Jas ii 26 The body without the spirit (marginal, or breath) is dead—so faith without works is dead also

V Gen iii 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

Job x 9. Remember, I beseech thee, that thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into the dust again.

Psa xlix 12, Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish.

Obadiah 16 verse. For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually; yea they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

VI The evidence we get from question number five, destroys the immortality of the spirit, also conscious condition of the dead. If the spirit was immortal and the dead conscious, they could not return to the same condition in which they were before they existed.

VII. Eccl iii 21, speaks of the spirit of the beast, the same as the spirit of man; who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beasts that goeth downward to the earth. This shows that the beasts have [illegible] of man possessed an immortal spirit the beasts do also.

[illegible] back to the same condition, that man was before he existed. Eccl iii 20. All go unto one place; all are of the dust and all turn to dust again.

IX. Eccl iii 19, For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them, as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre eminence above a beast; for all is vanity.

MISS BESSIE JENKINS.

1. In Gen ii 7, Moses tells us that God breathed into man's nostrils the "breath of life". In Job xxvii 3. we find that it speaks of the "spirit of God" being in his nostrils or margin says the breath which God gave him, thus we see that the breath or spirit is the life giving principle of man and without it he returns to the condition from which he came.

2. As stated above the spirit is the breath, and when it goeth forth, his thoughts perish and he returns to the earth.

3. a The breath and spirit are one and identically the same thing.

b In Gen vii 15, we find Noah took into the ark two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life, and in the 22nd verse it says that all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died", meaning the animals as well as the people The margin to the 22nd verse says, "the breath of the spirit of life."

c As God gave man and beast both the same breath, then if the spirit of man is immortal the spirit of the beast must also be immortal. If the immortal spirit of man passes from this life to an eternal home of happiness where then does the immortal spirit of the beast go?

4 Before man had the breath of the spirit of life breathed into his nostrils he was in a lifeless and unconscious condition

In Gen iii 19, God tells Adam how long he will have to pay the penalty for his transgression. He says "till thou return unto the ground; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." He shall pass through and endure the sorrows and trials set forth in the 17th and 18 verses until his death or the time when he shall return to the dust. Job knew and understood that he came from the dust and at death would return to the same condition as is recorded in the 10th chapter and 9th verse of his book. Although by Psalm xlix the evidence is not so strong as to the returned to the dust, still the unconscious condition is made evident in verses 10. 12. 14 19 and 20.

6 If man in the death state returns to the same condition in which he was before he existed, and he was made from the dust of the earth, he must therefore be in an unconscious condition owing to the fact that there is no consciousness in the dust.

7. In Eccl iii 21 we find the word spirit spoken of as belonging to both man and beast, and the 19th verse says they all have one breath, while the 20th says they all have gone to one place, all are of the dust, and turn to dust again. This only confirms the idea carried throughout the lesson.

8 Death is a cessation of life; not living; passing from a conscious to an unconscious condition; returning to the condition from which he came.

9 By evidence gotten from the 20th verse of the same chapter we know that man and beast in the death state are in the same condition.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies as "Principles" in fundamental propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 300 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in white cloth, with title embossed on back in gold One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1 00 each. A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died 1859 She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years and is yet full of good for all Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express a lower rate will gladly be made Brethren and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late lamented Brother John O Woodruff. We have both kinds "Bible Themes on miscellaneous subjects," and "The Word of the Kingdom." During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who can not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Bartlerton, Ohio.

BROTHER H A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal check. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say the was—so enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has been used to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, has neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

Prayer.

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray, if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray,
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.
For is the time remote from human sight
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avails the blessed time to expedite.
Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;
Pray to be perfect, though material leaven
Forbid the spirit here on earth to be;
But if for any wish thou canst not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

Extracts from New Years' Sermon, Chicago, Ill.

The following is from the sermon of A. S. Taylor, pastor of St. Marks' Reformed Episcopal church:

CHRIST THE COMING KING.

"The testimony of Jesus is the spirit (the life, the breath) of prophecy. All Scriptures directly or indirectly points to Christ as the satisfier of the world's need. Jesus himself testified that the Scriptures were his authority. When challenged by his enemies he boldly dared them to search the Scriptures, because they testified of him.

"When men were without God, having no hope, God sent his Son, Jesus Christ, who in the life of the believer is hereafter a hope of glory, that every man may be presented perfect in Christ Jesus. The Bible says there is none righteous; that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. If that is so, what every child, every young person, every man, every woman needs is Jesus Christ.

"Now the New Testament again mentions some 150 times that Jesus is coming again to assume his kingly reign and rule in righteousness. As ministers of Jesus Christ it may clear the atmosphere a little if we look once again at article 8 of our common faith:

"Of the resurrection of Christ and his second coming:

"Christ did truly rise from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature, wherewith he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth, our High Priest and Advocate, at the right hand of the Father, whence he will return to judge the world in righteousness. This second coming is the blessed hope of the church. The heavens have received him, till the times of the restitution of all things. To those who look for him he shall appear a second time without sin unto salvation. Then shall he change the body of our humiliation that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. He will take to himself his great power, and shall reign till he have put all enemies under his feet.

"Would you as a preacher during this year rob the church of Jesus Christ of its blessed hope?

"Or would you simply say that the sentence, 'Thy kingdom come,' is an empty phrase?

"Would you preach a kingdom without a King?

THERE IS BUT ONE CHOICE

"Or would you still tell that Jesus meant just what he said to those sorrowing disciples: 'I will come again and receive you unto myself'?

"Would you teach men to wait for his Son from heaven, who will come again in like manner as he went unto heaven?

"I know what I will do. I will preach a great Savior, a Risen Justifier and a Coming Glorious King.

"Yea, amen! Let all adore thee,
High on thine eternal throne.
Savior, take the power and glory;
Claim the kingdom for thine own.
O come quickly!
Hallelujah! Come, Lord, come!"

This will be my resolution for 1911."

What a splendid resolution to make this for 1911, we will preach Jesus as the coming King.

The following verse of a hymn has always been an inspiration to me at all times:

"The Lord is coming! Let this be
The herald note of Jubilee.
And often as we meet and part,
The salutation from the heart."

Dr. McElveen, Pastor of the First Congregational Church, contrasting other religions with Christianity said:

"Other religions look backward. Christianity looks forward. Its millennium is to come. Its golden age is in the future. It declares that man is not man as yet; that while nature situates in man, man is on the way to become a higher, fuller, finer being than eyes can now see or ears can now hear, or even the mind of man can now imagine. Christianity says that it doth not yet appear what man will become.

"One distinctive feature of the Bible, the great book of Christianity, is that it is all the while leading up to something better. One can't read the Bible with care without being thrilled with the feeling that the years are moving on toward some grand consummation; that something better is going to blossom on the stalk of the coming centuries.

"Other peoples are retrospective, but the Jews were expectant. The Jewish race was like the aged Simeon who waited for the consolation of Israel; or like Joseph of Arimathea, who looked for the kingdom of God. And Christians should be more expectant than Jews. The Christ in whom they believe declares, 'Behold I make all things new,' and again and again he has demonstrated his power to make men new creatures.

"The initial chapter of the Old Testament tells us of the creation of new worlds; new earths, new suns, and new stars. The New Testament tells us of the creation of new men and women and ends in telling of the new heaven wherein dwelleth righteousness.

"Christianity reveals a God of hope; a God who never despairs of any man; a God who regards no man as incorrigible. He is a God who makes every man, it matters not how disorganized and depraved, capable of beginning all over again. He is a God who delights to awaken and to resurrect the sleeping or buried powers in men to life. He is a quickened spirit.

"He is to man's spirit what springtime is to the winter chilled. He is a God who finds joy in making men and women aware of faculties and capacities in them of which they were previously in ignorance, and in showing them how they can exercise these new powers and till these new fields of the soul. He is ever imparting to men more energy. He is ever guiding men into more truth. He is ever starting something new in man and revealing something new to men.

"God is the great beginner. All God's creations are beginnings. Genesis, the first book in the Bible, tells us that God created the heavens and the earth. Revelation, the last book in the Bible, tells us that God aims to make of the old heaven and earth a new heaven and a new earth. This earth is not finished. It is in the process of becoming a better earth.

Dr. Gray, at the Moody church speaking of the New Year said:

THE NEW YEAR QUESTION.

"The question is, 'Have you the Son of God?' God offers him as a New Year gift, will you receive him by faith, just now?

"Talk about turning over a new leaf, or forming good resolutions at the beginning of a new year! The world has talked that way ever since sin came into it, and what good has it done?

"A dead man can't turn over a new leaf or form a good resolution much less keep one. 'And ye are dead in trespasses and sins,' the Bible says. But it says also that Jesus Christ came into the world 'that ye might have life, and that ye may have it more abundantly.' Come to Jesus Christ for life. This is better than a new leaf and a good resolution. It will keep clean and last longer. This is to have a happy New Year indeed. The year will be always happy and always new. This is the way to get out of the fog and to stay out, for when God begins a work of this kind in man he perfects it. He does not save you from the cruel waters and then drop you in again. He keeps you on board when he puts you there. This is what he says to them that put their trust in him: 'I will give them one heart and I will put a new spirit within you * * * that they may walk in my statutes and keep my ordinances and do them; and they shall be my people and I will be their God.'

"Such as these are never in a fog."

The following is from the sermon of L. W. Moodie, of Lewiston, Ill., on the New Vision:

"We need a real vision of God's Word; its real benefits in transforming individual life, its reshaping and reforming nations, and its power to bring peace and maintain peace among the nations of the earth.

"Like Moses, we need to stand again and again before God and receive anew the vision of the worth of an individual soul. Once Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn writer, was speaking in one of the missions in New York City. Suddenly she stopped and said, "I wonder if there is not some wandering boy in this audience this evening who would have the courage to step out and come and stand by my side so that I might put my arms around him and kiss him for his mother?'

"There was a hush upon the audience; then a boy from a rear seat started and came to the platform, and, with her arms about him and her lips against his cheek for his mother's sake, Fanny Crosby said, 'Oh, my friends, let us rescue the perishing.' From this meeting she went to her home and, sitting in her room wrote:

"Rescue the perishing,
Care for the dying,
Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave;
Weep o'er the erring one,
Lift up the fallen,
Tell them of Jesus, the mighty to save."

"Some years ago she spoke in St. Louis at a great meeting and related the incident. Before she had finished a man sprang to his feet and said, 'Miss Crosby, listen to me. I am a prosperous merchant in this city, a husband and a father, a Christian and an officer in the church. I was the boy around whom you threw your arms.' This was the result of seeing the worth of a soul in a young boy."

My personal mission for the year 1911, is to "Rescue the perishing," and warn the people against the delusive hope of the latter day liberalist.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 55.

Dec. 3-1, 1898. Dear Sister Wince:

Your letter came yesterday, and this morning I have the pleasure of acknowledging its receipt. As Brother J. B. Cook of blessed memory once said of me, so permit me to say of you, "You are up with the brethren in all present light. I thank God for your general intelligence on present truth and the signs of the times which is beautiful and clear.

This is my first letter of the season, but oh! how fearful has been the loss of life on our sea-coast, during these days of storm, one boat going down with 120 souls and not one saved and so many seamen lost. What a terrible death to die!

I hope you have come through the storm in comparative safety, and that your hearts are overflowing with praise, 'My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and let all flesh bless his holy name forever and ever.'

Lizzie May, my oldest grand-child, now 17, is at the Normal School in Trenton, N. J. She is a Christian for which above all else, I am thankful. She was born on Thanksgiving Day and it would have pleased you could you have seen her in the absence of her father go forward and lead the evening worship voluntarily. I have to clap my hands, even now at the remembrance of it. She was as composed and straightforward as a minister. She sang, read and prayed. She also talks like one growing in grace and the favor of God. Her brother Rowland, 16, and her sister Clara 14, have not yet confessed Christ. Pray for them, and pray that Lizzie may be prepared for just the work God wants her to do. She will take the three years term at the Normal.

Brother Henry T. Taylor has been spending a few days with us, 'Much to our mutual comfort,' as he expressed it on leaving this morning. He is a growing Christian, and 'wished to be remembered to you in the Lord.' Now Brother Wince, I trust you are faithful in the ministry with all your cares, and that you, dear Sister Wince, are faithful everywhere. You are your father's daughter, and faithfulness was the girdle of his reins.' I am glad he has a son-in-law who is following in his steps. Pray for us all especially for the most needy—myself.

April 19, 1899. 'In my distress I cried unto the Lord and he heard me.' 'Deliver my soul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue." Psalm cxv. 1, 2

'Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!
Pilgrim through this barren land;
I am weak, but thou art mighty,
Hold me with thy powerful hand.
Bread of heaven, bread of heaven,
Feed me till I want no more.'

"O Glory, Hallelujah, that I have a God to go to in this barren land. It is his mercy that has made himself known to me. How often I think of the tears your father shed in taking up as he did the work of God in so unfruitful a soil, with all the diffidence and shrinking there was in his timid yet widely-grasping intellect. I can truly say, 'It was God that worked in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure.' And you are using your pen to finish his work. The thought brings the tears of joy to my eyes. And Brother Wince has stepped into Brother Chaplin's shoes, and is finishing his work by word of mouth, as you by your pen, though you may feel of yourselves as John the Baptist did of himself when he uttered these words—"The latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose! (In view of the magnitude of the work that the forerunner of Jesus was called to do. I do not wonder he felt just so, but how greatly he was honored) and so I feel you could not have a greater work given you as the children of such a man as was your father. And now let me add, while the tears bedew my cheeks, how greatly do I feel the honor of having been for months a sojourner in your house, mingling my prayers with yours.

Just now as I turn my head, I see the white blossoms of a plant sent me by "The King's Daughters" and beside it a rose-geranium with its red blossoms from my beloved Sister Elfreth, President of the W. C. T. U.—(the lady who wanted to know what the Bible taught about the sleep of the dead.) So I am cheered in this 'barren land' with friends and flowers, though tied down with weary body and helpless limbs. Glory to Jesus, I shall with all the redeemed sing his praises in the new heavens and the new earth.

You Brother and Sister Wince estimate this poor dust highly, yet it comforts me to think you know to whom all our good is due. O let us ever magnify his name."

Auntie Willard's eyes were now growing dim, yet she still wrote a remarkably legible hand for a woman of her 85 years. Speaking of her failing sight she said, "Sister Sarah Stauliff Furry wrote to us until we were obliged to request her to have some one act as her amanuensis, and we never heard from her afterwards. I was truly grieved. Can you tell me anything of her or of Brother Furry?" "You are one of a thousand to answer letter questions."

Yours in Christian bonds.—E. S. Willard.

Just as Auntie Willard was closing this letter a lovely bouquet of Daffodils from a Mrs. Williams of Haddonfield, was brought in and set on her stand; then came a Miss Bancroft and a charming Easter Lily.

And so it went on from day to day, her room being scarce ever without flowers. One afternoon Rowland came running up and said, "Mother, young Evans has brought you another bird." "Indeed" she replied, and taking a Bible that she had laid by on purpose for the boy. She said "Give him this."

March 30, 1899.—"First let me magnify the patience and love of God to me, that he has not become weary of me and cast me off as an unprofitable servant. As David says, 'It is of his mercy we are not consumed.' I feel this so much in my own case and this helps me to be patient with others. I have many mercies to record though I cannot walk. My health has become good, I am cheerful and thankful for all that is done for me. I love all that are about me and try to smooth their way as much as in me lies. All this tends to my own personal happiness, and it is all of the Lord.

My Bible is such a source of comfort to me. I think I never before prized it so highly. It is truly an unspeakable treasure."

In this letter Auntie Willard spoke of my step-mother's terrible fall at the time of her second husband's death, she having fainted and pitched from the top of the stairs to the floor. She wished to know how she was, and how her dear little girl was doing, and wished also to be remembered to the many kind friends she saw and loved while at Plymouth.

She spoke again of Lizzie May Willard: said "She was a growing Christian, and that her letters to her parents were remarkable, more like a parent and teacher than a child and withal so loving and kind." Rowland Willard, Junior was now learning the ship-building trade.

AUNTIE WINCE.

Whom Sayest Thou That I the Son of Man am?

Now the birth of Christ, was on this wise, when as his mother was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost, then Joseph her husband being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example was minded to put her away privily, but while he thought on these things, Behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee, Mary, thy wife, for that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghost, and she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled, which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet (Isaiah vii 14) saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel, which being interpreted is GOD WITH US. Then Joseph being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife, and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name Jesus. This is the reading of Matt i 18 to end; I suppose some of the up to date people, think we are rather old fashioned for quoting this chapter, as proof that Jesus (our foundation on which we stand) is the Son of God and not the son of Joseph. While not a follower of the fashions, we generally see them, as they come and go. I believe the higher critics or "higher criticism" of the Bible, is one of the latest fads of fashions for men, as the bobble skirt is for the women of fashion. These "higher critics" deny whatever part of God's Word, as not INSPIRED, that disagrees with their theories. Some say, "You can prove anything by the Bible. The critic sees the sculptor bring the beatiful image, out of the square marble, by the use of the hammer and chisel, so he thinks to bring out his image, or theories, by chiseling and gouging out, and hewing down any part of the Word of God, to try to prove his point; but foolish critic, the material he is working on is better metal than his tools. I believe those who hold the theory of Jesus being the natural son of Joseph, have cast aside as uninspired this quotation from Matthew, but it fully agrees with xvi 16-17 which reads, "when Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples saying, whom do men say that I, the Son of man am? and they said, some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets, he saith unto them but whom say ye that I am? and Simon Peter answered and said, thou art the Christ the Son of the living God, and Jesus answered and said unto him, blessed art thou Simon Bar Jona for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." And again, "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him." So reads 1 John iv 9. St. John v 16 19 reads, "And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the Sabbath day. But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God." His only begotten Son came down from heaven. Read St. John iii 13-19. Also God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh; see Rom. viii 3, 32. Also he that denies the Sonship of Jesus is antichrist, read 1 John ii 22 23, it says, "Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ, he is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son, whosoever denieth the Son the same hath not the Father, but he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also."

We cannot think he is meaning Joseph when he speaks of his Father in St. John xvii. 25-28." Some will not believe in the miraculous conception, it is beyond their comprehension.

"But these speak evil of those things which they know not, but what they know naturally as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves," so reads the 10th verse of Jude. Sarah could not at first comprehend that she should be a "mother of nations," after she was "old and well stricken in age" and "Abraham fell upon his face and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? And shall Sarah, that is ninety years old bear?" So Isaac's birth was miraculous also.

If Jesus is not the Son of God we could not be children of God by him, or through him. "But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God even to them that believe on his name, which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man—but of God." St. John i. 12; viii. 42, 43 By reading Gal. iv. 4, we are not led to believe with the Josephite. It reads, "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law." Why was it said "made of a woman" if he had a natural father like all other sons of men? Please read 2 Peter i. 16 to end, and Rev. xxii. 18 20.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

Through the kindness of Brother Underwood I take this method of expressing my appreciation and thanks to the dear ones of like precious faith, who so kindly presented me with a copy of the Emphatic Diaglott as a New Year gift. My endeavor in the future as in the past, will be to study God's Word, and to stay close to what is written.

May the Lord bless those dear ones abundantly, and may they be permitted to sit with Christ on his throne when he comes to establish his kingdom, and reign on earth as universal King.

Your Sister in hope,
MRS. A. J. MARTIN.

Life through his name. This is the keynote of the gospel. We need to hold fast to this simple truth. If saved at all, the Son must save us.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the reformation of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA. JAN. 18 1911.

ANOTHER instance proving that Russia makes treaties only to break them, occurred last week. The movements of the nations is just at this time startling, and constitutes one of the most interesting of studies. We do wish some of our able writers could tear off many of the subjects being discussed, and give us an outline of what is transpiring, the condition and position of the nations, et c what changes may be looked for soon, with a view to showing how we are approaching the time when our Lord may come. Why brethren, when the things that are constantly coming up in the world's affairs are brought to our notice, we can hardly keep from shouting out, so plainly do they indicate a heading up of affairs for this dispensation, and ushering in of a new. Brother Halstead, Brother Wagoner, Brother Woodward, Brother Robison, Brother Huggins, Brother Allard, Brother Adams, Brother Wilson, Brother Lindsay, don't you see the things happening? Surely you can hear the thunder rumbling? Destruction is nearly and growing angrier every day. It is something to do, to be ready, and the whole Brotherhood of the Church of God will thank you and rejoice.

New Years Greeting.

To all the faithful in Christ Jesus, greeting. I wish you a Happy New Year. 1910 is in the eternity of the past. Its pleasures, its pains, sorrow and tears are among the things that have been. We are to commence the duties of another year. What will its record be? Time only can tell—God only knows; but one thing we do now, we are one year nearer the promised reward of a home in the kingdom. A little while and the blessed Master will come, and bring the promised gift of God, even Eternal Life with him, for eternal life is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Only a little while and the earth will be filled with his glory. A little while, and that long-looked for time will come, when God will wipe away all tears from weeping eyes, remove all cause for tears. Blessed consolation! There shall be no more death neither sorrow nor crying, for the former things have passed away, and behold I make all things new. When the Restorer comes the lion and the lamb will lie down together. He will judge the poor and the needy, and break in pieces the oppressor. He will come down like rain upon the mown grass, as showers that waters the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him, for he shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper. Now the poor are forgotten of their neighbors. The present rulers of this world can bring about no such results, but when our blessed Reformer comes he will be able to reform. He will be able to fill the whole earth with his glory.

Lift up your heads, despondent pilgrims. Think of the joys when Christ shall reign. A world redeemed from the curse, Satan chained, temptations all taken out of the way, the earth yielding her increase. No more sickness or death, no more open graves, and we poor mortals made immortal, equal to the angels, be permitted to walk the golden streets of the City of the Great King amid the groves of Paradise made fragrant with the perfumes of undying flowers. All these precious promises are for us to enjoy if we only prove faithful. May God help us to endure to the end.

Your Brother in Christ,
B. W. WOODWARD.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I herein send you post office order for THE RESTITUTION, that paper that is next to the Bible with so many of the dear brothers and sisters. It is the only preaching many of us have, being so far away from any of the churches. I only wish it could be sent to every family in the land.

May THE RESTITUTION still continue to proclaim the glad tidings of truth and love to its many readers.

Your Brother waiting for the coming of the Just One—the Lord Jesus Christ.

A Few Words on Resurrection.

Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in good works of the Lord. What was it that called forth this admonition from Paul? He in his first Corinthian letter, had been teaching them concerning the resurrection. It seems that he knew that some of them in the Church at Corinth did not believe in it, and he felt called upon to correct the false doctrine.

He says in his letter to them, I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

You see, Paul goes back to the Old Testament writings to prove what he had preached to them. They were all the Scriptures they had at the time. To prove that Jesus had been seen since his resurrection, he brought forward over five hundred witnesses. Now that is pretty good proof, over five hundred telling the same thing. It ought to make the evidence sure; besides he told them the greater part remain unto this present time. Now he says, if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead. It seems he could not understand why they doubted, who there seemed to be such good proof that Christ had risen, for as he said to satisfy Agrippa this thing was not done in a corner. Later when before Agrippa it seemed that it was because of his teaching the resurrection that he was accused. He called it the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

It appears that Agrippa did not believe in the resurrection, because Paul says Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead? So with the Corinthian brethren, some of them at least, did not believe. Error at that early day, had crept into the Church the same as now. Paul and the other disciples tried hard to eradicate it out of the Church. He reasons so logically all through. Hear him. If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen; and if Christ is not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

Paul and all the rest of the apostles had testified that they had seen Christ after his resurrection. He told them if Christ had not risen they were false witnesses, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

But the crowning point of his argument is this: If Christ be not risen then them that sleep in Jesus have perished.

This is the rock I struck years ago when I first gave up the idea of an immortal soul. I shall always remember that day. I was busy about my work, thinking of the subject of the resurrection, when these words came to me. Although I had read them very many times I never understood them until then. This is one reason why I can have patience with others who do not understand. It is because we do not understand that there are so many differences.

Let us go back to Paul's argument. But now, he says, is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. How boldly he seemed to speak, as though he did not expect to be contradicted. Then as though a second thought came to him he said, But some will say, how are the dead raised up? It seemed he understood before what they would want to know. After giving them instruction as to this and other questions, he says, Behold I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

It is preached in these later times that when a person dies it is only his body dies, but his soul is taken to heaven. This is preached in most of the churches of today. It is taught in our schools, and in our school books. In our magazines. It is taught in most of our reading of the day. It is no wonder the young grow up believing it. It is instilled in their minds from the cradle to the grave.

If people would be more like the Bereans of old, and examine the Scriptures to see if these things are so, there would be more real religion in this broad world of ours. If what is taught today is true, why did Paul spend so much precious time trying to prove the resurrection of the dead, when there was no particular need of it if people receive their reward at death?

Paul believed in the resurrection, and taught it plainly that even the righteous had perished if the dead rise not. So he tells the brethren in his closing argument to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

ALMIRA BROOKS.

Doubts.

Having had an experience of more than sixty years in church and public work, I have observed this: That it is much easier to create doubts in people's minds than to remove them. For instance, a good word spoken of an individual has its influence for good, but very little is said about it; but once tell in question that person's veracity or morals, and like the thistle down it cannot be gathered again. The evil word has gone forth, and whether it be true or false, the work has been done, and how hard to banish the unkind words from the mind—and the person is always to suffer for it. How cruel then ought we to be to speak evil of no man.

Especially ought this principle to be true by public teachers and writers in the gospel work, lest doubts arise in the minds of many, and they be lost for whom Christ died.

There has been a special effort made of late to dispose of a real genuine personal devil, by what is termed the Higher Critics, and from all appearances the malady has not stopped there, but like the Canada thistle has reached the rural districts, and city country are alike affected, and doubts have come into many minds, and of late questions are coming in from the brethren of long experience in the faith, and others who have only just started to study the Word. Brother Woodward, what about this devil question? Well, for myself personally I answer, If there is a Christ there is a devil. The evidence is as strong to prove one as the other. The world is full of skepticism, and while laboring to persuade men there is no such a thing as his satanic majesty some one has succeeded in filling many minds with grave doubts of the Word of God, and they are about ready to think the sacred story of Christ, the cross, and his glorious resurrection, are simply a myth. The forty days of trial, battling with satan is all figured away, and we are wondering if the next thing will not be to get rid of the Abrahamic covenant.

What is the use of all this—why not accept the record? For instance when we read in Luke x. 18, where Christ said to them "I beheld satan as lightning fall from heaven." That must have been at a very early period as the human race started out with a God and a devil. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. Rev. xii. 12. Now is his opportunity. He is working with all signs and lying wonders, 2 Thess. ii. 9, hence strong delusions, the result being to be condemned. Here is a prophecy to be fulfilled just before Christ's second appearing. For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, Rev. xvi. 14, and immediately in connection with satan's last great effort, come the comforting words to earth's weary toilers, Behold I come as a thief.

With these and other plain statements I am bound to believe the record that God has given us, and if I accept it in part I must in full. Christ says in Matthew v. 5, Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. It does not need any fixing up for me to believe that, neither does it for me to believe Luke x. 18. When we begin to doubt the record where will we end? The only safe way is to tell them to resist the devil and he will flee from you; draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you.

But some one will say, Bro. Woodward I cannot understand some of those Scriptures as you do. Very well, you are not to blame because your head was not rounded up the same as mine, but I am not going to disfellowship you, brother or sister because we cannot understand everything alike. As long as we believe the grand cardinal principles of the gospel alike, you are my brother and my sister.

Here are two saints of God, both sleeping now, Brother Wiley Jones and Brother M. Joblin; both fine scholarly God-fearing men. Several years before they died they had a discussion through THE RESTITUTION on the pre-existence of Christ. I thought then, and I still think Brother Jones had the best of the argument. Did it make me love the gentle, devoted Brother Joblin any the less because he differed from Brother Jones or myself? No! The test of fellowship then among our people was, Do you believe in life only through Christ? Do you believe in the gospel of the kingdom as taught by Christ and his apostles? Not Do you believe in a personal devil, or the pre-existence of Christ?

I have been greatly astonished of late to hear that certain self constituted dictators, from whose decision there seems to be no appeal, make the statement, I will not fellowship any one who believes in the pre-existence of Christ or in a personal devil. When and by whom was the test of fellowship changed, that would throw out so many of the Church of God? Here is an old soldier of the truth, who was preaching the gospel of the kingdom before many of you were born. He has traveled thousands of miles, baptized hundreds of intelligent people into the all saving name, gone through snow four feet deep, rode or walked through drenching rain, for the purpose of carrying the good news of life eternal to the dying world, and now at 80 years of age, broken down in health, but loving the truth as well as ever, he must be disfellowshiped because he believes in a personal devil, a simple record given in the Bible. Reverse this ultimatum, and what would he say, or how would he feel. I sometimes feel that beautiful and much needed grace is hard to find.

O brethren, the thing most needed and that God demands of you and me, is more love instead of so much argument. Love to God, love and consideration to our fellowman. This is the basis of all true Christianity. I may have all knowledge, and all faith, even give my body to be burned, and with all this sacrifice, without love I am nothing.

Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another in love; and above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

Yours hoping for eternal life,
B. W. WOODWARD.

Brotherly Love.

I open the Scriptures to seek comfort, and I read "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, —because he is born of God." 1 John iii 9.

As I read these words, my heart sinks within, because I know we are all born with evil in our blood, and have a law in our members warring against the law of our mind, which if not removed will bring us into captivity to the law of sin and death.

Many of us profess to have embraced the faith once delivered unto the saints; but let it be more than a profession; or our words will be only as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. We must avoid all shams, all Phariseeism, and be true to our calling. In Matt v 16, we read, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

I believe we of the Church of God understand more of God's plan than other people, and if we understand and do not do right ourselves others will not see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt vii 21.

It will be only to those who are in him, and who have transformed into his moral likeness. It will not be any who know him only in a superficial way, who do not do his commandments, while professing to belong to him. Jesus was pure and holy, free from all taint; so we cannot be true followers of him if that same beautiful spirit does not dwell within. May we be enabled to say, "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." 2 Cor x 3.

The Psalmist wrote: "Scatter thou the people that delight in war." We seek restoration, not scattering, therefore we must be men of peace if we wish the blessing. The peacemakers shall be called the children of God. We are commanded to have fervent love among ourselves, so will do well to heed Joseph's advice to his brethren. See, said he, that ye fall not out by the way. So let love be the ruling passion of our lives, for God is love. When we come to strife and blows, when we speak or believe evil of one another we break the first and great commandment. Where there is lack of love something is wrong; then let us have fervent love among ourselves, for love shall cover a multitude of sins. It is certainly a Christian duty, as well as brotherly love, to keep our knowledge of evil or unpleasant things of one another. If brother or sister is overtaken in a fault, we will not tell it abroad; we will not keep casting it into their teeth; but will go to them with love and kindness, weep and pray over it, and try to restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; and if they have any of the same love in them, they will receive us kindly.

Let us not forget that, "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger." Prov xv 1. If we do not love our brother in the truest sense of the word, we deceive ourselves if we think we love God. Let us strive with ourselves, and quit ourselves like men. We pray for God's kingdom to come; but what would be the result if it came to us now? Are we prepared for it? The body must be cleansed from all evil before it can abide Christ's coming. We need preparation, let us get on the narrow way, and solemnly quit the works of darkness. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God." Rom xii 1. That is the command. But we cannot be far on the road towards that if we are not at peace with our fellows. How are we starting this new year? If there is the least lingering hate or animosity towards any, first be reconciled to the brethren, and then come and offer our gift to God. He is particular about this matter, let us not deceive ourselves, "God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Gal vi 7. Wise men may argue over creeds and obscure meanings, but let us get more interested in our own salvation and those that are still out of Christ. It seems impossible for all to see alike on all questions that arise; so let us do less investigating and follow out the truths we find in the wonderful sermon on the Mount. If those admonitions were put into practice in the Church, it might be truly said, as of old, "Behold how these brethren love one another."

Awake! Arise! Be filled with the Spirit.

Nebraska December Report.

We were at Freedom when we last reported. On account of corn picking being the order of the day, the farmers could not very well attend, so they asked us to close until another time. They are now asking when I will be back. The interest was splendid.

We next went to Moorefield, started the meeting December 1st. We had a good attendance and good interest as is always the case here. A little too much Christmas preparation detracted a little from the general interest, but it was teaching the children in another way, so was for the best. As we had been constantly at work, but nearly every night in the two months of this trip, when we closed there we came home for a little rest. We lost just one night during the two months, on account of weather. I have learned by experience that as a rule it is time wasted to hold meeting during holidays.

We organized a Berean Society at Moorefield of ten members. All are interested in learning the truth.

The Bereans Column.

[Copy Supplied by Illinois Bereans.]

Dear Bereans:

With new year greetings to all we wish to say a few words in regard to our Berean column in THE RESTITUTION that we try to fill once a month. Let us try to bear in mind that we all have a responsibility in regard to this and that it does not rest altogether upon the committee. When we are called upon to contribute let us respond with alacrity and look upon it as a privilege, rather than a duty, to say a word for our Master, he whom we all profess to love and serve. We cannot afford to let any ordinary duties, or business of our own, stand between us and an opportunity to let our light shine; ought we not to be about our Father's business first, and our own afterwards?

Of course we are not all writers, we have not the same talents, but there is not one among us who cannot write something, a message of love, an exhortation, or a word of encouragement to cheer as on our way, and how we do appreciate having a contribution for our column sent us unsolicited! Remember this Bereans, but we do not ask or expect it, all we ask is that you will be responsive when we do ask you.

Now that we have entered upon another new year let us resolve to do well our part and thus aid

YOUR COMMITTEE.

Dear Bereans:

Here are a few thoughts that came to me while about my daily work, these thoughts come to us sometimes when we are so very busy about our worldly affairs, it is then I often ask myself, are they sent to us as warning admonitions to beware lest worldly duties crowd out of our hearts and our actions our Father's business? I have lately been thinking so much about the gospel, that sweet and blessed message of God to his children, that precious message, which includes the wondrous themes of the kingdom and the Name, the joyous hope of Christ's reign, the redemption, with all that word means, through Christ's name, pardon and sin-covering.

Oh, dear young members of Christ's body, let us prayerfully consider these two most precious gifts; pardon, it fills our souls with ecstacy and love; sin covering, I know not how to express to you what fills my being when I think of these two words, they express life in every sense of the word, they are everything to us. If this glorious gospel is so precious to us shall we not try to teach it to others, study how to present it in the most attractive way?

Let your whole soul and body and spirit be so steeped in its beauties that you must sound it out with consecrated lips and lives. Oh, how I desire that our young people could devise some attractive way to lure others unto the devoted life for Jesus. At our last Conference 1 Thes. chapter v. recited in concert by the Bereans, tells us to pray without ceasing. Do we cease to pray as a daily practice? This will help us as nothing else can.

ALICE KERR.

Dear Bereans:

In the twelfth chapter of 1 Cor. Paul gives a comparison between the members of the Church of Christ, and the members of the human body. As the different members of the body are necessary to the harmony of the whole system, so are all the members of the church (or body) of Christ equally necessary in their respective places.

The hand, the eye, the foot and ear, all have need of the other and if one of these members becomes injured and suffers how quickly all the others sympathize. So with the members of Christ (who is the Head of the body) if one member is honored all the members rejoice with it. If one suffers all are affected by it.

It is very easy for us to feel that we have no talents to use for the cause of Christ—that we are of no especial use or help, but there is one thing that we can each of us do and that is to be faithful in each duty, however humble that may be. It has been said that a man may be as great in God's sight in the humblest walks of life as in the highest. It is the same with work in the cause of Christ. It is the way in which we work that makes the work acceptable to God. Christ said, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

May each one of us do our part that we may be worthy to hear, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The matter for this department of THE HERALD is compiled by Brother Robert G. Hopkins, of 1 023 Lee Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Please send all letters and communications intended for this section direct to him, and save Abby.

For the first time since we have been pastored the Church of God in Cleveland, death has invaded our ranks. On January 6th we were called by telegram from our meetings in Salem to attend the funeral of Brother John Sanford. In the afternoon his funeral was held in the Church, Gen. xxv. 8, being used as the text of the sermon. Brother Sanford made his home with us, and died at our home after an illness of seven weeks.

He was born in Sydned, Gloucestershire, England, February 28, 1828. March 1 Maria Wall, from which union twelve children were born, five of whom are living, namely, Mrs. Mary Taylor, James, Samuel, Harry and D. M. Sanford, three of whom reside in Cleveland.

He left England in the year 1872. Six years later he settled in Cleveland. He was formerly a very ardent Methodist, acting as local preacher for that body a number of years. Through the efforts of Brother Scott Elton he was brought to see the truth of the gospel, and having obeyed it some twenty years ago, has since been a loyal and faithful brother, always ready to give a reason for the hope that was within him. He lived 82 years, 10 months and 7 days, "an old man and full of years; and was gathered to his people." Gen. xxviii. 8

The Kingdom of Righteousness.

The most prominent note in the preaching of the old prophets was a call to righteousness, and in their vision of the Messiah's kingdom the characteristic most strongly emphasized was that it was to be a rule of righteousness.

Isaiah declared, "With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and decide with equity for the meek of the earth, and righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins." "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in justice." Amos in rebuking the people for their sins cries, "Let justice roll down as water, and righteousness as a mighty stream." John the Baptist, when he came preaching in the wilderness caught up the same strain and proclaimed a Kingdom of righteousness, and the Kingdom of heaven that Jesus came to usher in and to establish is a kingdom of righteousness.

There are no stronger words in the Sermon on the Mount than these, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." "Seek first his kingdom, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The righteousness upon which Jesus insisted was something more than a mere formal outward observance of the requirements of the law. It is a righteousness that has its seat in the heart, that comes as a result of a man's living in right relations to God and to his fellow men. It is that sort of righteousness that will impel a man to do right, not because some higher authority has commanded him to do it right, not because he fears the penalty attached to wrong doing, but he is impelled to do right because right is right, and he choses righteousness for its own sake without regard to consequences. The righteousness of the kingdom of heaven means right dealing between man and man in all the relations of life and in all human society.

One cannot be absolutely just unless he is in sympathy with the one with whom he is dealing. Righteousness is not a cold-blooded weighing of scales and dividing of balances, but back of it lies a warm heart throbbing with human sympathy, it is such a righteousness as that is to prevail in the kingdom of heaven, and may you and I be there to enjoy it.

L. G. BARTLETT.

The Angels that Sinned.

The word angelos (angel) means "a messenger, one who is sent, in order to announce, teach, perform or explore anything." (Robinson.) It will be seen from this that the word describes an office rather than the nature of the official. It may, therefore, apply to a celestial or human being. Its Hebrew equivalent malak is frequently applied to men in the Old Testament. See 2 Kings vi. 32; Job i. 14, Hag. i 13; Mal. ii. 7; iii. 1. Angelos is rendered "messenger" in the New Testament. See Matt xi. 10; Mark i. 3; Luke vii. 24, 27; ix. 52; 2 Cor. vii. 25.

The connection in which this passage stands does not favor its application to celestial beings. These angels, the Sodomites and the "old world" are all contrasted with Noah and Lot, who kept their first estate, or remained true to God. It would hardly seem fitting to join celestial and human beings in contrast to Noah and Lot. Again it is evident that Jude refers to the same parties, and the definition of their sin forbids its application to celestial beings. He says, "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains unto darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner" (to these angels) "giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." (Ver. 6, 7.) The constitution of angelic society does not admit of a sin of this nature. It applies, then, to men.

There are two views as to whom are meant.

1. That reference is had to spies who were sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan. We copy the following from Halstead's "Theology of the Bible:" "As to the Greek word angelos. I give, further Jude vs 6, Greek te as, or, and, angelous—messengers—tous, those, not giving attention to observation, or, spying, the of themselves (i e., their own people) —eis to, for, krisis, a decision, final issue, crisis, of a great day (i.e., a day when it should appear by actual trial) whether the land they were sent to spy could be taken or not,) In demois, bonds, perpetual with, or, under, darkness, or, obscurity, zofo, zofo, beguarded (as prisoners, says Donnegan.) In Gen. xl 2, we have the Greek word desmoterion, defined bonds, fetters, a prison (i e, a place where desmoi bonds, fetters, are imposed.) In Num. xiii. we are told that Jehovah commanded Moses to send a man from each tribe, twelve in all, to search the land of Canaan. Ten of these angeli, messengers—all but Caleb and Joshua, reported that the land could not be taken.....Jude says they were put in perpetual bonds, etc. As to what became of them afterwards, it is said Num xiv. 37, Hebrew, "They died of a plague before Jehovah." In a foot note in the "Improved Version" of the New Testament, upon the basis of Archbishop Newcomb's translation, published in 1809, we find the following upon 2 Peter ii. 8. "Or if God spared not the messengers who had sinned, i. e., the spies who were sent to explore the land of Canaan."

2. The second view, and the one which we think the more probable, is that reference is made to the sons of Seth, who were led to commit the sin referred to. In favor of this view there is the fact that these men were called the "sons of God." (Gen. vi. 2.) The celestial angels are also called "sons of God." Job xxxviii. 7.) On the same principle it is proper to speak of these men as angels. The daughters of Cain are called the "daughters of men." (Gen. vi. 2.) These "sons of God," and "daughters of men" were all members of the human family, but the first descended from parents who, believing the promise made to Adam of a righteous Seed, were in covenant relation with God and hence his children. The others were the "children of men." These sons of God were the bearers of whatever truth God had to reveal, and hence the "messengers" or "angels." They could have married the "daughters of God," and retained their integrity; but they went "after a strange flesh," and hence fell from their "first estate," or "left their own habitation." On this last phrase Dr. Bloomfield says, "Some doubts exist as to the sense of it. Later commentators explain it, 'their original dignity' (as if he should say,) did not preserve their prerogatives as sons of God, and the original excellence with which they were created."

The Bible furnishes no clue to the locality of tartarus (rendered "hell" in the text,) the word being used in this instance only. We are dependent upon Greek classical writers and heathen mythology for its meaning, therefore we should be careful not to make such a passage the main support of a doctrine. Robinson says of this word, "A verb (tartaroo) formed from the pronoun tartaros, which in Greek mythology was the lower part or abyss of hades, where the shades of the wicked were imprisoned and tormented; in Jewish usage i q., gehenna, (Jos. Ant. xviii. 1, 3.")

Bloomfield says tartarus is "an intensive reduplication of the very old word tar which in the earliest dialects signified dark."

Parkhurst says, "It appears from a passage in Lucian that by tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds of the material creation.

Dr. Whately says, "tartarus is to be understood of our dark earth with its dull clouds, foul vapors and misty atmosphere."

Grotius says "That is called tartarus which is lowest in anything; whether in earth or in the water, or, as here, in the air."

It will be seen that its precise meaning is quite uncertain, some applying it to the outer bounds of our creation, some to the atmosphere immediately above the earth, and some to the Jewish hades—under the earth. Though the word itself may denote a locality, we think that it is used here to indicate a state of condemnation into which these angels fell, and in which they are represented as prisoners under guard. The word sheol literally means the universal grave (kebar denoting an individual grave,) but it came to represent the state of death. In 1 Peter iii 18 20 we read of the preaching (by the Spirit through Noah) to the "spirits in prison." On this passage Adam Clarke says, "The inhabitants of the antediluvian world, who, having been disobedient and convicted of the most flagrant transgression against God, were sentenced by his just law to destruction. But their punishment was delayed to see if they would repent; and the long-suffering of God waited one hundred and twenty years, which were granted to them for this purpose, during which time, as criminals, tried and convicted, they are represented as being in prison detained under the arrest of divine justice, which waited either for their repentance or the expiration of the respite, that the punishment pronounced might be inflicted. This I have believed to be the sense of this difficult passage, and no other that I have seen is so consistent with the whole scope of the place." We find, therefore, that both place and time are used to represent states, and so we regard the word tartarus In this state of condemnation they were reserved until the judgment. * *

3. We understand the "chains" (R. V. "pits") and "darkness" to be figures in keeping with the idea of the prison and the prisoners. To understand them literally would make an absurdity, applied either to angels or men. God has certainly never bound man in this way; and even those who claim that the passage refers to celestial angels, and understand tartarus to apply to the "bounds of our earth," or the atmosphere, will hardly contend for the literal idea, for they represent these angels as moving about and tempting men to evil.—The Herald of Life.

Selections.

Unload Your Cares.

A very beautiful thought is brought out by the French translation of a verse in the First Epistle of Peter. The words are: "Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you." Where our version reads "casting" the French translation is unloading (déchargeant) The difference of meaning is made plain by an illustration we have somewhere seen. The writer said: "The word 'cast' might seem to bring to our mind the action of taking up something and throwing it over on Jesus; but many times, dear friends, have you not found the cares too heavy to fling? Have you ever seen a coal cart unload? The man took out of the front of the heavy cart a little iron pin, and the cart was so balanced on the axle that then, with a slight pressure on the back of the cart, it would tip up, and the whole load slide off to the ground, and the pony would trot away with a light step. You do not have to take it up; just take out the little pin of your endeavors to help matters, and, with your hands of faith and committal, tip up the big load, and then run on, for 'he takes care of you.'"

Unload the cares you carry on your shoulders. Unload the cares you carry on your head. Unload the cares you carry on your heart. God has no children without sorrow, and in many cases the load seems too heavy to be borne; but his own invitation is, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."

But the thing that can most surely unload the heart is to come into consciousness of the fact so plainly stated, "He careth for you." That means that he loves us and sympathizes with us and will exercise his strength in our behalf. Whatever the burdens that bear down upon us, to know that God has not left us out of mind or out of sight, but that he is "keeping watch over his own," and "will make all things work together for our good," cannot fail to lighten the weight and give a sense of security and a glad hope of final good. Unload your cares! —G. B. F. Hallock.

Be Always Ready.

Admiral Porter, when at the head of the American Navy, had a young staff officer whom he never could catch napping. No matter what day or what hour of the day or night this young man was wanted by the admiral, he promptly turned up, dressed correctly, looking natty, a smile on his lips, and himself ready for duty.

One day the admiral said to him half jocosely that he would recommend him for promotion if he would tell him the secret of his being always ready for service. To this the youngster replied:

"Waking or sleeping, I have trained myself to be ready, no matter what the emergency. When awake I plan what I must do if called when asleep. When I am asleep I do not need to worry. I am drilled for the call. There is no secret about it, sir."

The young man got his promotion in six months' time, and for many years after this story cropped out was known to the jackies as "Always Ready."—The Boy's World.

The Glory in the Cloud.

Phillips Brooks once preached a sermon from the text: "Who passing through the valley of weeping make it a well." He said there were two ways of treating sorrow. One may say: "This I have to bear is hard, but the clouds will break and there will come better days. Compensation is in store for me It may not be in this world but some time it will all be made up to me." Or he may say: "I will do just what Scripture tells me to do. I will make of my valleys of weeping well-springs of joy. I will turn sadness into occasions of rejoicing."

The apostle says: "In everything give thanks." Assuredly we cannot be thankful for everything, but in every experience that comes to us we may find some reason for giving thanks. When Jeremy Taylor's house had been plundered, all his worldly possessions squandered, his family turned out of doors, he congratulated himself that his enemies had left him "the sun and moon, a loving wife, many friends to pity and relieve, the providence of God, all the promises of the gospel, my religion, my hope of the kingdom and my charity toward my enemies."

Can you see the glory of the Lord in the cloud?—The Standard.

Alone With God.

Conscious, emphatic individuality is the pivot of a true life. So far as a man is true to himself, to his own convictions and to his God, he has attained to genuine manhood, and no farther. The tendency is to aggregate ourselves, float with the current, merge the man into the multitude. It is so in religion. Churchism has always been preferred to individualism; but the real unit of the Christian life is not the church, but the individual. The very idea of the church as expressed in our version of the Bible is erroneous, because it makes the organization primary, the structure, the kirk or building, the unit. Ecclesia makes the individual primary, the organization secondary, and that is the word the Spirit always uses when referring to the assemblies of the saints. One by one God deals with man. He that sins dies, he that repents and believes on Christ lives. Each for himself receives grace, bears the voice of God, trusts, hopes, lives. The individual profits by association, and belongs to society, has a mission in it, and cannot be isolated, but his weight in society is in exact proportion to his personal strength. If he has not learned to walk with God, to stand erect in the liberty of his own soul before the cross, he is not yet a man.

The earth was made for man. So far as revelation shows, no other is designed for man. Angels are mentioned "in heaven." In no single instance, in the Old Testament or New can a case be referred to in which man is said to be in heaven. This is a remarkable fact. We are not to go to heaven; heaven, or the heavenly Jerusalem, is to come to us. We are not to go to Christ; Christ is to come to us. We are not to inherit heaven; we are, if righteous, to inherit the earth. —Prof H Lummis.

Saloon Recreation.

If the poor man must look to the saloon for his society, then God pity the man. What kind of society does he find there? The dissolute and the vicious He finds criminal men and bad women. His associates are the thief, the thug, the highwayman, the midnight assassin, the very dregs of society.

The recreation afforded the poor man by the saloon is drinking, gambling, and hearing profane and indecent language. Such associations will do any man harm instead of good, and for this the poor man pays in dollars and cents far more than would his membership cost in the highest priced club in the place, while his loss in manhood, in his own self-respect, and in the respect of others cannot be estimated in money.

The man who is gulled into the belief that the saloon is a good place for him socially, and spends his time there neglects his home, which is man's best social center, brings his wife and children down to his own level. It makes no difference how well regulated a saloon is, it is the center of moral and social degradation. Instead of being maintained for the foolish reasons advanced by its defenders, the saloon should be removed for these very reasons if there were no others.—American Issue.

A Thrilling Reply.

Dr. Kelman recently asked an eminent American of science his solution of the problem of modern city life. "An emperor!" came the answer, swift and decisive. "An emperor?" asked Dr. Kelman, in surprise; "I thought you had done with all that in America. Besides, your emperor would need to be a very wonderful man, incapable of mistakes and extraordinarily competent for leadership." "Precisely" was the quiet answer, "and we know the Man; we are waiting for him, and his name is Jesus." "The thrill of that reply," says Dr. Kelman, "will never leave me."

Eternal Life.

Life here is so sweet that we are willing to sacrifice all else that it may be lengthened. Jesus has offered the human family eternal life on such easy conditions that all may secure it—the poor as well as the rich, and all nationalities; yet thousands are refusing it. How strange!—H. A. Mitchell.

As the lark that soars the highest builds her nest the lowest; the nightingale that sings so sweetly, sings in the shade when all things rest; the branches that are most laden with ripe fruit bend lowest; the valleys are fruitful in their lowliness; and the ship most laden sinks deepest in the water —so the holiest Christians are the humblest.—Mason.

Obituary.

Nancy Jane Plake was born March 30, 1848, near Connersville, Rush Co. Indiana, and died at her home in this City January 8, 1911, aged 67 years, 9 months, and 19 days.

When she was five years old her family moved to Marshall County, locating near where Argos now stands. There she resided until her marriage to Robert McDonald on November 29 1860. Seven children were born to this union. Ella, Arthur and Lulu are dead, and Alice, Eliza, Samuel and John are left to mourn the death of a loving mother.

Her first husband died on July 26, 1876, having been injured while working on the railroad in Plymouth.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with William A. Tiebenor on May 17, 1877, and to them were born two children, Cora and Otto, both of whom are dead.

This husband died on November 17, 1893, and on August 14. 1898 she was married to Solomon Zehner and returned to Plymouth to live, where he died December 6, 1907.

Sister Zehner was a member of the old Antioch Church, having been immersed many years ago. During her declining years, and through her last sickness she was tenderly cared for by her children, the youngest son John, making his home with her.

The funeral services were held on January 10, at her late home, the sermon being by Brother D. E. Vancactor, after which she was laid away to rest in Oak Hill Cemetery, there to await the Resurrection Morning's call to Life.

Besides the children named she left three sisters: Mrs. Jonas Miller, of Los Angeles, Cal., Mrs. Pulaski Wickizer Culver, Ind., and Mrs. Ahasha Holloway of Oklahoma, and three brothers George, John and Miles Plake, all of Indiana.

Sunday School Lesson.

JANUARY 29, 1911.

Jehoshaphat's Good Reign in Judah. 2 Chronicles xvii 1-13.

Golden Text—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33.

Two weeks ago we studied about Asa's good reign in Judah. He started out well, and made many reforms, and brought the people to the true worship of God. When he had been king for thirty-six years, and all was moving on smoothly, Baasha the king of Israel came down to his southern border and started to build and fortify Ramah, with the design of being a menace to Judah. Instead of relying on the Lord for aid and protection, Asa sent presents to the king of Syria, dwelling at Damascus, reminding of an old league that had existed from his father's time, and asking him to attack the kingdom of Israel, and so draw attention from Ramah. This was done, and so serious was the loss to the northern kingdom that the king left off building at Ramah, and went to the defence of his people.

Immediately Asa took all his people and went and carried off the stones and other materials at Ramah, took them a short distance into his own country and built the cities Geba and Mizpah.

Hanani, a seer came to Asa and told him he had done wrong in asking aid of the king of Syria, and had not relied on God, and predicted that as Asa had enjoyed a period of peace, he should henceforth have war. This angered Asa and he put the seer in prison, and oppressed some of the people in consequence.

Trouble came fast enough and in plenty, and three years later Asa was afflicted by a disease in his feet, and it waxed exceeding great. Yet he did not ask the Lord concerning it, but went to physicians for aid, and after lingering with this for two more years he died, and was succeeded by his son Jehoshaphat.

Jehoshaphat at once proceeded to strengthen his land against attack, placed garrisons in the exposed places and fortified points most likely to be attacked. The Lord was with him because he followed in the ways of David and sought not unto Baalim. He walked in God's ways—did not follow after the ways of Israel, but he took away all the high places where idolatry was practiced throughout his kingdom. The Lord established his kingdom and he had riches and honor in abundance.

In the third year of his reign he sent to his princes who were over various cities presents, and instruction to teach the people, and sent to their aid certain of the Levites and priests, and they went throughout all the land of Judah with the Book of the Law, and taught the people.

The fear of the Lord fell on the surrounding countries, and Philistines on one hand and Arabians on the other sent presents to Jehoshaphat, and he became very great, and built castles and cities of store. There was a great business boom in the land, and men of war and of valor were in Jerusalem. The number is given in verses succeeding the lesson text, and shows that a fighting force of more than a million men was at the command of Jehoshaphat at Jerusalem, besides those who were in the fenced cities.

This lesson shows Jehoshaphat as a keen business man, a reformer, who believed in education of the people. He strengthened his country's defences, lived a life right before God himself, and sent instructors to the people who explained the law of God, urging their compliance with its requirements. The result was prosperity, the kingdom on a firm basis, the people standing by the king. There was wealth, and honor came from the surrounding nations. There was business for all the people, and consequent contentment.

Here we have religious and civic reform and a campaign of study of God's law. Through all the history of God's dealings with his ancient chosen people we find it true as Azariah said to Asa "The Lord is with you while ye be with him; and if ye seek him he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him he will forsake you." God's plan is continued now as ever. He must be sought, and if sought is easily found. He must not be forsaken, for as sure as men forsake God, so sure will he forsake them.

Two Irishmen once said: "If you would keep a dead man, put him into whiskey; if you would kill a living man, put whiskey into him."

LOOK. LOOK.

Here Is a Good Big Chance.

We want a lot of New Subscribers, and with a little effort you can get us one or more. We do not ask you to work for us for nothing, but will pay you for what you do. Here is our offer to you:

or
One Pound of other Tracts,
or
One-half Pound of Tracts and 5 copies of A Letter to a Friend.

This will enable you to earn a supply of tracts to distribute among your friends, and perhaps start some one on the way to the Kingdom.

LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have a number of copies of "The Word of the Kingdom" which originally sold at $1.50. This is a work gotten out by Brother John O. Woodruff before he died. Only a few copies remain, and they will make excellent presents. While they last we will mail you one Free, if you will send us

Two New Subscribers.

JUST LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have on hand some copies of the Emphatic Diaglott. All of our readers know what it is—a word for word translation of the New Testament, by Brother Benjamin Wilson. There is a column with a line of Greek and beneath it the equivalent English words so the reader may know just the word that is used. A very valuable help in Bible study. We will give you one of these books Free if you will send us

Four New Subscribers.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russell, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

E. P. WOODWARD.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

Most of you know how your account stands, and you can save us a large amount of work and outlay by saving us sending notices. Please brethren, attend to this.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the doors of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 309 pages, 5x7¾ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10023 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

BROTHER B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our Issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

Student's Text Book, a cloth bound book 200 pages. It is designed as a guide to students to a right comprehension of the teaching of the Holy Scripture, as made plain upon the Sacred Page. It deals specifically as How to study the Bible, and why people fail to rightly understand God's Word. Price 50 cts.

Pine Wood's Bible Class, a book of 480 pages bound in cloth. Studies are carried on as between a Class and its Teacher. This method not only makes the teaching plain, but interesting and attractive, like reading a story. Price $1.25.

Poetry.

Are You Ready?

Soon the King is coming, for to claim his own:
Will he reap the harvest, that we here have sown?
Is the Master's cause every thing to you?
Are you marching on, with the prize in view,

In the world growing better, for the work you've done?
Are you gathering in the sheaves one by one?
Would the Master welcome, he welcome to you to have you other work, that you wish to do.

The days are swiftly flying, the night's no time to work,
Are you advancing or retreating? there is no time to shirk:
The journey's end is nearing, is your work well done?
Will your task be finished with the setting of the sun?

Discerning Good and Evil.

"For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the beginning of the oracles of God; and have become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. For every one that partaketh of milk is inexperienced in the Word of righteousness for he is a babe.

But solid food is for full grown men, those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." Heb v 12-14. The apostle is here addressing Hebrew believers; for to their charge were intrusted the oracles of God under the law, whose rulers and teachers by their tradition had made the Word of God of none effect, which resulted in the rejection of their Messiah yet it brought out a remnant who are saved. The conditions under the gospel among the Gentiles are about the same, if not worse today; for many teachers professing to be sent of God do not know how to lead a sinner to Christ, much less do they know how to baptize him into water into Christ—the one Name Jesus. Some of us know how to do this, but this is about as far as any of us can go. We have imagined we were full grown men while we are yet but babes. Yet we are made sons of God. When Adam ate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, he was able to discern his naked condition in the flesh, and judge between heat and cold. For one of the first things Jehovah did was to clothe them by the sacrifice of animals. They supposed the tree of the knowledge of good and evil was not food, or unfit to eat, if we judge by the expression of surprise by the woman; for "she found it good for food, delight to the eyes, to be desired to make one wise." Now pleasure is mixed with pain; sweetness and fragrance with foulness and offensive smells; with every good, evil is mixed, and lustful desires of the flesh abound, iniquity coming to a fulness in a very short time by the destruction of all flesh and the flood. All Adam could discern was in the natural. But in this day we who are spiritually minded are expected to discern the good and evil in the spiritual, and not in the natural; for any man can judge in the natural. "Those that are without" cannot discern these things; and God has given to them this judgment of which we have nothing to do. For "Them that are without God judgeth," 1 Cor v 18. "And I brethren could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ. I fed you with milk, not with meat; for ye were not able to bear it; nay not even now are ye able; for ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal, and do ye not walk after the manner of men"? For when one saith, you can follow Paul, I'll follow Christ, and take his words in preference to Paul's or any of the apostles. Is Christ divided? Did Jesus send the apostles and speak through them by the Spirit, or does Scripture harmonize? Can it be broken? Did not the apostles understand the words of Jesus better than we Gentiles? Had the apostles any authority to speak? Hear the apostle John. "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he who is not of God heareth us not. By this we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." Any man who resists the apostle's teaching would resist Jesus and the prophets. So it is dangerous to listen to a babe who does not know the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God. It is good to be able to discern the "Babe" in the spiritual, for the apostle calls them "brethren." They generally desire the front seats at all assemblies and as universally constitute themselves the leaders on all occasions, starting missions, expecting poor saints to support them. They are not all false prophets but being ignorant of the ways of God, and full of zeal without knowledge, are in a dangerous position. As it is written, "The zeal of my house hath eaten me up." Not being fitted to rule because of their lack of discipline in learning first to serve.

The religious world is full of such "babes," having been put to the front by the sects because of their ability to talk, knowing little of the rudiments of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. This is the principal cause of the confusion and hindrance to the spread of the truth in these last days, For when by reason of the time they ought to be teachers, they need that one teach them the rudiments of the first principles of Christ. If they are right we will get no reward for our labors, and if we are correct, they will suffer loss and must be saved as though by fire.

It is a preacher's business to understand thoroughly the fundamental truths of Scripture, otherwise he must repent of dead works; of the teaching of baptism; of laying on of hands, of the resurrection of the dead, of eternal judgment. Heb vi 2. There is but one baptism in water into the one name Jesus (whom God hath made both Lord and Christ,) and yet how few teachers observe it? The Trinitarians baptize into what they term the "Triune God"—Father, Son and Holy Ghost, while the majority are satisfied with sprinkling their babies. Many have ceased altogether baptizing in water. There is no question that the laying on of hands by those who understand and are qualified, is the correct thing to observe on the babe in Christ after his baptism, but where are those qualified elders?

"And of the resurrection of the dead." If there be no general resurrection of the dead, then we do not understand the Scriptures at all. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive. But each in his own order." The emphasis is all on Adam and Christ. Christ hath tasted death for every man, and every man must come to judgment and bow the knee. God is making all things new in Christ, and the first death is all atoned for, and we do not see how it could be possible for any man to commit the unforgiven sin or the sin unto death, before the spirit was given at Pentecost, nor in this age, should he die without hearing the gospel. For our gospel is universal grace and opportunity. The apostle Paul in addressing the Athenians for the first time said, "Ye men of Athens, in all things I perceive that ye are very religious (superstitious.) For as I passed along, and observed the objects of your worship, I found also an altar with this inscription, To an unknown God. What therefore ye worship in ignorance this I set forth unto you. * * * The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent; inasmuch as he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the inhabited earth with righteousness." Acts xvii 22 32. Up to the time of this discourse God had overlooked the ignorance of the Gentiles, but will give them a righteous judgment at the time appointed, when the Judge comes; and Scripture foreseeing that judgment would fall first on the living nations speaks of the wicked as never rising again. Now judgment has begun at the house of God. "Let every man be careful how he build." "The husbandman that laboreth must first be partaker of the fruits, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully." 2 Tim ii.

There may not be many to wear a crown with Jesus. Yet there may be many saved, yet as though by fire. As in the case of the fornicator with his father's wife. "To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." 1 Cor v 5.

Yet we are to "Bless and curse not." and, "Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall each man have his praise from God." 1 Cor iv 5. So all the dead live unto God, because of the death and resurrection of Christ all shall be raised. "As it is written, a father of many nations have I made thee, before him whom he believed, even God who giveth life to the dead, and calleth the things that are not (the dead) as though they were (alive.)" Rom v 17. But there is an unforgiven sin which receives no forgiveness in this age nor in the age to come; yet even they are resurrected from the first death. Felix trembled and Judas were better unborn—because of the resurrection and judgment to come.

"For as touching those who were once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and tasted the Word of God that it is good, and the powers of the age to come, and then fell away, it is impossible to renew them again to repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put to him an open shame." Heb vi 4 6. But God is long suffering, and the above does not apply to all the children who sin after confessing Jesus, or grieve the spirit, or fall from grace, being overcome by the adversary working in the flesh. The fact of there still remaining in some a desire to return to God through Christ, is good evidence they have not committed this sin, since it is possible to renew them again to repentance.

"Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principles of Christ let us press on to perfection * * * and this will we do if God permit."

The Two Great Proclamations.

The Bible student is much impressed by what the prophets have foretold regarding the coming crisis of the nations, who stand up against Israel and Judah, and the solution of what is known as The Eastern Question. The impending events bearing upon the final conflict, and the subsequent glory and victory of the scattered nation are the graphic theme of the ancient prophets, as well as the Messiah and his prophets.

There are two great epochs revealed to us in outline, which are also delineated in careful detail. These epochs may be stated as follows:

1st. The gathering of the nations at the time of a partial restoration of the Jewish nation, whom the nations seek to destroy.

2nd. The subsequent proclamation by the Messiah from Jerusalem and the conversion of the nations to universal peace and prosperity, during the reign of Messiah.

We do not intend an elaborate exposition of these two propositions, but will give the reader such proof as will commend itself to every fair minded Bible student. The first proposition is abundantly sustained by the united testimony of Israel's prophets as well as the predictions of our Lord and his apostles. We have the subject presented with much clearness in the prophet Joel, as follows:

THE FIRST PROCLAMATION.

"For in those days, and in that time when I shall bring back the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will gather together all nations, and will bring them down into the Valley of Jehoshaphat (Judgment) and I will plead with them for my people, and for my inheritance Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations and parted my land. ..Proclaim ye this among the nations; prepare war, rouse up the strong; let them come, let all the men of war come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your spades into spears. Let the weak say: I am strong. Break forth, and come, all ye nations from roundabout, and gather yourselves together; there will the Lord cause all thy strong ones to fall down. Let the nations come up into the Valley of Jehoshaphat (Judgment) for there will I sit to judge all the nations roundabout. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come go down for the press is full. ...Nations, nations in the valley of destruction; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of destruction. The sun and the moon are darkened, and the stars have withdrawn their shining, and the Lord shall roar out of Sion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall be moved, (shaken) and the Lord shall be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel, and you shall know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Sion my holy mountain; and then Jerusalem shall be holy, and strangers (aliens) shall pass through it no more." Joel iii. 1-21.

The above prophecy is most remarkable and foreshadows a period of great national and physical commotions. The time when this is to occur is stated to be when God brings back again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, and it is also stated [?] be when the harvest is ripe for the overthrow of the world pow[er]

It is also stated that the nations are in open war against the people of Judah. At this point of time the Lord shows forth his signs and issues his commands from Zion. The result is the overthrow of the nations, hostile to Israel, and the beginning of a new era—Messiah foretells the same great tribulation, and refers to Daniel's prophecy in the 12th chapter. Compare Matt. xxiv. 15 30; Luke xxi. 24 28.

No one familiar with current events can question the great truth that we are entering into that cycle which must result in great national disturbances and times of revolutions. In the midst of these scenes of distress and anxiety the Messiah is to appear in behalf of of his people and the nation of Israel. In Luke we have a strong prophecy of the same events as those revealed in the prophet Joel. The language is impressive and portends most solemn judgments connected with the nations at the time of Messiah's coming and kingdom.

In speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the Jewish nation, he says: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory, and when these things begin to come to pass, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," Luke xxi. 24-31.

It will be seen at once that the world's conversion cannot take place until after the introduction of Messiah's kingdom and the restoration of the Jewish nation to Jerusalem, that is The City of the Great King, Mat. v. 34-35.

That Israel will accept their Messiah at the time mentioned by our Lord in Luke, is further evident from his own prophecy in Matthew xxiii. 37. These are his words: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not. Behold your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The prophet Zechariah gives this prophecy of Messiah an impressive confirmation in these words "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn," Zechariah xii. 9-10.

The apostle Paul brings out this point very strongly in Romans. He says "And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Zion, the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them when I take away their sins," Rom. xi. 26 27.

This promise reaches out beyond their blindness, in part, which came upon the nation of Israel because of their unbelief.

The next question now comes up for our investigation, as to the result attending the restoration and conversion of Israel, and the overthrow of those nations which have trodden down Jerusalem and held Israel in dispersion among their enemies—sets this matter in a clear light, and shows that in the Times of Restitution the age of war will give way to an age of peace; blessings will come to our earth under the benign reign of the King of Zion—our blessed Lord.

At the close of the conflict and when the nations have exhausted their power, and long for peace, a new and a final proclamation will be made from Zion and Jerusalem which will result in emancipating the world from the dominion of man, and the inauguration of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

The prophet says "But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the Mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it, and many nations shall come and say Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his figtree; and none shall make afraid; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," Micah iv. 1-4.

The above prophecy foreshadows a most important result. Nations will cease to make war, and instead of inventing missiles of death they will, in the language of those who join in the anthems of Moses and the Lamb, make known the blessedness and victory of our coming Lord and his kingdom. "Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name; for thou only art holy, for all nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest."

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 25, 1911. NUMBER 4.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Obituary.

Sister Ida Aldrich fell asleep in Jesus Jan. 10, 1911, at Broomfield, Isabelle Co., Mich. after a long and painful illness. Eight physicians had been called to the home, counsels of doctors had been held, but not one could decide what the disease was. A post mortem decided the cause of death to be gall stones and enlargement of the heart. Sister Aldrich was born in Clinton Co., Mich., April 29, 1858, [illegible] 52 years, 9 months and [illegible] she was baptized into [illegible] Elder [illegible] sers, in [illegible] husband, a mother, [illegible] ers and sisters with many [illegible] tives and friends. As she was passing away she called her two sons to her side committing them to the care of the dear heavenly helper, and admonished them with her husband to meet her in the Kingdom. Brother Aldrich is left alone in the home now. He has the sympathy of his friends, and may they all be faithful to their promise to her and meet her in the kingdom. Funeral services held from the Methodist church, Millbrook, by the writer. Text Psalm cxvi 15. She was buried in the Decker cemetery where so many of the dear saints are sleeping.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed you will find $1.50 as a renewal of my subscription, which I am sorry has become overdue for a short time.

I do hope that the current year we will have more current news written about, showing the nearness of Christ's advent. Surely we need to be reminded of the fast coming events that so clearly show us how near he is at hand.

Yours in the Faith.
MRS. C. N. HOWARD.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find postal order for $2.00 to renew my subscription to THE RESTITUTION and use the rest as you see fit.

Would like to add that we have taken the paper ever since it was published, and can see no cause to find fault with it. As for myself I do not feel that I could do without it.

Your Sister in Hope.
MRS. A. BALCH.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Please find enclosed $1.50 for which send THE RESTITUTION for another year, as we do not think we could well do without it. Rest assured that you have our sympathy, and we believe every one should do as he would have others do unto him. We have always been pleased with the paper under its present manager, and expect to be as long as it continues in the future as in the past.

Your Brother and Sister in Hope of Eternal Life.

Pitiful, Isn't It.

There comes to us this morning, from a newspaper published in a beautiful city in California, a clipping containing discussions of a proposed ordinance which is before the city council to prohibit all forms of gambling. The question was asked, How about our local fashionable bridge clubs where the ladies and gentlemen play for prizes? The city attorney replied, "They would be pinched," and he continued, "In fact every church in—carries on raffles, grab bags, and other gambling arrangements, and they would all be liable to arrest."

Consequently the ordinance was defeated, because the church element could not endure its restrictions. The letter containing the clipping wonders "if the churches all over the land are like the ones we have in this town." We hope not.—Signs of the Times.

One man takes the initiative and sets the example. A second writes about it. A third publishes it in his paper. Thousands read and follow. Progress depends on this four-linked chain—the man who does, the writer who knows it is done, the paper that shows it has been done, the reader interested to know if it can be done over again

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 25, 1911.

BROTHER Huggins was engaged in company with Brother Robison with a protracted meeting at Salem, Ohio, and later at the Brush Creek neighborhood, hence we are short on copy for Ebenezer Department.

DISPATCHES from Aden, Arabia, tell of an uprising that has declared war on the Turks, and armed bands are gathering. A "pretender," Idriese, is leading the movement, and it is such magnitude that Constantinople will send thirty battalions of troops to put it down.

ACCORDING to estimates just given out there are three million less men than women in the churches of this country and Canada. So they have "Men and Religion Forward" which will work this special view to men "getting religion."

FOR more than a generation the Russian government, though professedly on friendly terms with the United States, has openly disregarded passports issued by our government to Jewish citizens of the United States. On Jan. 20, at a meeting of Hebrew societies held in New York, it was decided to appeal to President Taft and demand definite action.

WORD comes from Sister S. R. Wince that Sister Chaplin is at her home near Pierceton, Indiana, very sick. Sister Chaplin has been feeble for some time, and has little reserve strength to resist an attack such as now afflicts her. May the kind Father in heaven be her Comforter and stay. Friends may visit Sister Chaplin at the home of Sister Wince, or write us above.

THE most important happening in the world of nations of late is the understanding between Russia and Germany in Persian affairs. This recognizes Russia's exclusive sphere of influence in Northern Persia, and unites Germany's Bagdad railway with the Russo-Persian system. It even goes so far as to recognize Russian claims in Anatolia. Those watchers who have had an eye on Russia's march to the sea by way of the Persian gulf, see in this movement a triumph over England that is far-reaching. Germany again comes to the restoration Bismarck's foreign policy, and wins a diplomatic success of the first magnitude. Turkey is alarmed, France stands aghast. England sees the entente made less than three years ago that was to bind Russia, France and Britain broken to pieces, and once more realizes that trust placed in Russia always is misplaced-trust. Never was a stroke so untimely as that one which swept King Edward from the throne.

How Do I Stand?

As some are asking how I stand in regard to the "Ministerial Association" and their course toward THE RESTITUTION? let me say, I have taken our paper for about fifty-five years, since the days of Joseph Marsh, though under different names, and have never failed to pay my subscription promptly, a little before the time expired.

I have had a long and large experience as an evangelist and pastor, and in these thirty-five years and more have visited many homes in many states, and have found that many of these homes from one ocean to the other have been helped and made happy by the weekly visits of the dear, old RESTITUTION. From several I have asked the question, How did you first learn the truth? The answer was, I picked up a stray RESTITUTION years ago, became interested in the doctrines taught, continued to study, and was finally baptized into the Christ. THE RESTITUTION has proven to be a good missionary and in the day of reckoning many will bless the day they just happened to see THE RESTITUTION.

This paper has always stood for something, instead of everything. It is clean-cut and has always stood by its principles, never faltered though at times it has seen violent opposition. It has always contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. We have taken several papers that claim to be "of the faith," that we dare not hand to strangers or new converts, for we did not want them to think we were believers in such monstrosities as were printed there.

The howl has gone up many times, that THE RESTITUTION is so narrow, because it would not print everything handed in to its Editor. That was what made it valuable to a young convert, and we were always thankful our Editor had the backbone to say, "No," to these pernicious doctrines. Let us tell the world what we believe, some one else is sure to take care of the other side of the question.

When our dear old father Chaplin was at the helm, he was severely criticised for being exclusive. One brother, I remember, had paid in quite liberally in helping to get THE RESTITUTION on its feet, and thought he ought to have the right of way: his articles were generally very long, and the two favorite subjects were non-resurrection and Josephism. I had a talk with father Chaplin on the subject, he said to me, I have no sympathy with any theory that belittles my adorable Redeemer, or takes one laurel from his crown. I am of the impression our present Editor has no more fault found with him than the others who have worked in his position before him. It is quite foolish to think that any editor or publisher or minister can please everybody. If you are under such impressions you ought to have a little experience and I dare say you would change your views.

I was much pleased with Brother McCrory's letter in paper of Dec. 21st. It struck a very tender chord in my heart when he spoke of the four who had been so hospitably entertained at Brother Underwood's home. My own experience at their home in time of sickness came very forcibly to my mind, with their anxious solicitude for me. No pains was spared for my relief—in every way. I found the old adage a true one, "A friend in need is a friend indeed." May God bless them, bless and keep them true to his cause, is my earnest prayer.

Now, beloved, in the Lord, as THE RESTITUTION is the only paper we have that stands for what we as a body believe, let us rally as never before and come to its rescue. Let us stand bravely by its principles contained in the upper right hand corner of our dear old paper. Let those principles be our "Battle Cry," and let them remain just as they are intact, and again, let us be encouraged with the dying words of Lawrence, "Don't give up the ship boys."

Yours contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Sunday School Lesson.

FEBRUARY 5, 1911.

Elijah the Prophet appears in Israel. 1 Kings xvii.

Golden Text—"They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." Psalm xxxiv. 10.

Ahab was king of Israel, and in the lesson for January 22, we learned of his evil deeds, and that he did more to provoke the Lord to anger than all the kings of Israel who had gone before him. His wife Jezebel undertook to eliminate the worship of Jehovah from the land of Israel, and God's prophets were killed, and the worship of Baal substituted. Shrines were built in many places, with every beautiful one at the capital, and the new cult took the popular mind even as such things do now. There were all the heathen ceremonies and rites, with the evil practices that attracted the foolish people, and led them away from God, until as is said in 1 Kings xix. 10, they have "forgotten thy covenants, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword."

With Israel in this sad condition the Prophet Elijah appears to Ahab. This Prophet is from Gilead, a mountainous region east of the Jordan. By some it is thought likely Elijah belonged to Galilee, but that he had gone with his parents to Gilead to escape the evils that came with the worship of Baal. Used to the rough and rugged mountains, he is hardy and courageous; his dress is plain, and as he looks about and sees the outrages against Jehovah, he determines to take up the work against it, and so tells Ahab that dew and rain shall cease for years. Of course this could only mean famine. The Prophet declares that as sure as the Lord God of Israel liveth, this calamity will come to pass, and that no rain or dew would come until such time as God would direct. This was as much as to tell Ahab that for his neglect of God's laws he should be forgotten of God, and the covenant promise to bless those who serve him would be taken away for disobedience, and he would withhold the dew and rain, and they might rely on Baal, the rain god, or the "god of nature" to give them rain if they chose to serve them. It was necessary that Israel learn by this severe lesson the utter inability of Baal in order that reverence for Jehovah be restored.

The purpose of this suffering was that the individuals and the nation be made better. Sin brings sorrow and ruin. "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

The Prophet is directed to flee to a hiding place where he will be provided with food by the ravens, and where the brook Cherith will supply water to drink. When in the course of time the brook dried up because there was no rain, again Elijah was told to go to Zarephath, and there he met a widow woman who had but a little meal and a little oil, and by willingly dividing what little she had, the Lord added to her store so that the meal and the oil did not give out, and all had plenty.

The son of the woman died, and the Prophet called unto God for the life of the child. The prayer was heard, and the boy restored alive to his mother.

It took three and a half years for the famine to do its work. The king and people must be convinced that the heathen godship of no power, were as nothing, before they would let him interfere with the idolatry of the wicked Jezebel. We learn from the tenth verse of the next chapter that Ahab had tried to find Elijah in all the lands round about, but had failed, and there was great distress.

Elijah all through was learning lessons that would aid him in the reform work he was to do. He was willingly submissive to God. He was submitting all guidance to his God; every thing worked out for good to him, because he trusted. The woman was blessed in "entertaining angels unawares." She took into her home a roughly clad man, and fed him with her last crust, and found him to be a prophet of God, and blessing came to her home.

The lesson we must learn here is that God cares for his servants. If we forsake God and his cause evil will come to us. Our daily needs are supplied for us, as the ravens fed Elijah meal by meal, and the widow's supply of food, though not piled up in bulk grew no less though drawn on day by day.

God sent Elijah on his errand to Ahab, and God saved Elijah from any harm at the hands of Ahab, and from the famine.

The practical lesson for our lives is that as God had an errand—some business—for Elijah to do, so he has something for you to do.

The word he wants spoken, the action that will help a fellow—are you willing to speak, to act?

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 56.

Rowland wrote Jan. 30, 1901, that the dear mother was well, and was still singing and reading in her large print Testament—a gift to her from Rowland, Jan. Mrs. Lyman N. Willard of Loomis, Washington, and Mrs. Belle Brady, of Burlington, Ky., were now visiting her every few days turn about, and were making her very happy as they both joined heart and soul in the family worship, as did also all of Rowland's children. Dr. N. I. Willard had been severely hurt by falling on a marble floor when running to catch an elevator, Feb. 14, 1900, and sometime in December had fallen again and been picked up senseless with the ligaments broken that hold the thighs in place. He had recovered however so that he was now able to go about on crutches, and could write, though unable to dip his pen in the ink with his right hand. Brother Roter had also been nearly killed in a runaway accident in that same unlucky December, but he also was getting well, through the mercy of God.

But not a murmuring word escaped Auntie Willard's lips, deep as her anguish must have been when the news of these dreadful accidents were first brought to her ears. The mother-heart of course went out to the son, and Brother Roter as well, and frequent letters and sometimes books were sent to comfort them, but there was no questioning as to "Why?" such calamities should fall upon her dear ones. Their lives had been spared and in this she could find cause for grateful praise.

Any other sources of joy were given her—even while her feet were walking over these piercing thorns,—in the graduating of her two grand-daughters,—Lizzie May, from the State Normal, and Clara from the High School at home,—the former to go into practice-teaching at Camden, while Rowland Jun., was to be advanced from the shipyard to the drafting-room at Cramps.

March 27, 1901.—We turn the leaves of her note book and find at this date the following entry:

"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial and made great lamentation over him." (And this was his funeral sermon!) Acts viii. 2.

"Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." Acts viii. 4.

"And Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things that Philip spoke, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. And there was great joy in that city."

April 1901, she gives another quotation this time from Matthew xix. 27. "Then answered Peter and said unto him: Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me (here) when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

July 25, 1901, Lizzie May was at home waiting on Auntie Willard with all cheerfulness and Christian love, and Auntie Willard was thinking what a lovely little grandchild she was when she was a babe, and how sweet Clara and Rowland were; then her thoughts turned to their eternal well-being and calling to all the happy hours they had spent together in the study of God's Holy Word, a sad feeling stole over her heart as their two youngest were still put off obeying the Lord in baptism, though Rowland was now 18, and Clara 16. After telling me all this, she says, "I want to know how it is with you and yours? Are you actually on crutches? How the thought pierces my heart. Those active flunks! But I will not grieve until I am certain how it is. Now read the 10th of Hebrews. The 'forever' in the 12th verse does not refer to the 'sitting down' but to the offering for sin. Is it not inspiring? That body!—'a substance' as saith the apostle which our hands have handled.' Yes, and you with me will 'see him as he is and be like him, having been born of the Spirit by the resurrection of the dead,—if so be that we die before he comes.

The next letter, August 3d, 1901, was very brief, merely telling us that she would be 87, on the 9th of the month, that "Lizzie May had a school in prospect," that "the coming of Jesus was as dear to her as ever, and she believed it to be very near," that she "had not told us the half, but being so old, it was no wonder it troubled her to write" and closing said, "Do be earnest in your prayers for me and my dear family."

Again she says, "I am greatly grieving over my own shortcomings in not being childlike enough to follow the leadings of the Holy Comforter, and thus be kept in peace and quietness. It is a blessed secret to be like the little children that Jesus set in the midst."

February 12, 1902. Auntie Willard could still get from her bed to her rocker, and could jerk the rocker about the room to the window, door, or register, as suited her fancy, do up her own hair and dress herself with little or no help. Lizzie May was teaching at Dumont—an old Dutch town with a new name, fourteen miles from New York City; while Clara was at home and Rowland Jr. home of nights and over Sundays.

Mrs. Rowland Willard was now in great trouble,—her brother, Mr. James Webb, having fallen on the ice and so injured his head as to become insane.

Obituary.

John W. Sissle was born Dec. 7, 1836; died Jan. 11, 1911, aged 80 years, 1 month and 3 days. Bro. Sissle came to America in 1852, locating in Lancaster Co., Pa., where he engaged in blacksmithing for 3 years, after which he located in Canton, Ohio, where he was married with Susan Derr, Sept. 9, 1860. To this union were born seven children one dying in infancy, the others living to be men and women. Bro. Sissle worked in the Altman machine shops for years. He was a man of great physical strength and no doubt here in these shops he laid the foundation for his much suffering in his declining years. He worked at the furnace fire, no other man being able to stand the heat of that forge, and keep it day after day. He knew McKinley from a boy and did his banking business with his father-in-law. It was in these days he got interested in the truth, and was baptized by Brother Jas. M. Stephenson. Brother Sissle took THE RESTITUTION before he was baptized and has taken it in all its forms forty years. Knowing him as I have for twenty years I feel safe in saying he was never delinquent.

He was a great worker, but with all of his energy he never got so busy but what he could read and sing a hymn and ask God for guidance through the day. There was no Church at Columbus, and no brethren to meet with, but every Sunday with his family at his own table transformed into table of the Lord, they broke bread. Who ever visited Brother Sissle that did not receive a hearty welcome? No minister of the gospel ever left his home empty handed.

The world had no attractions for him. The kingdom of God was his constant theme. He was generous in his support of the gospel. How my heart went out to that faithful helpmeet, when I saw her turn her face homeward lonely to arrive and look at that vacant chair. O Lord, we pray thy kingdom come.

For two months he had to be fanned night and day to get his breath at all, but the end was peaceful. He just went to sleep to rest from his great suffering to soon waken where sorrow and pain will be no more.

Besides the companion two daughters and a son and seven grand children are left to mourn his loss. Four children preceded him to the grave.

Four of the neighbor women formed a choir and sang "What a friend we have in Jesus," and "Nearer my God to thee," after which the writer spoke to a large gathering of relatives and friends. After "God be with you till we meet again" was sung, we followed this good brother to his last resting place in the Columbus cemetery where we left him peacefully resting, feeling we had lost a true friend and brother.

ALMUS ADAMS.

Paul Fisher was born September 17 1836, in Indianapolis, Indiana, died at Avon, Iowa, January 13, 1911. He was married to Sarah E. Edwards on June 10, 1858. Twelve children were born to this union. Seven sons and one daughter, with the mother, survive him.

For thirty years he has been a believer in the things concerning the kingdom, coming out from Methodism under the preaching of Jas. M. Stephenson, J. W. Whitsett and others, and was an able defender of the faith in his earlier years. He was a great sufferer for several weeks preceding his death, but he fell asleep peacefully to await the morning of the Resurrection.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer on Sunday, January 15, at the Avon Church, where a large crowd gathered to pay their last respects to an old pioneer. After a short discourse we buried him in the cemetery close to his old home to await the call of the Master.

O. J. ALLARD.

Elizabeth B. Connell was born at Syracuse, N. Y., July 15, 1843, was married to S. C. Oliver at Parkersburg, Ia., April 23, 1862, and died at her home in Attica, Kan., Jan. 3, 1911, aged 67 years, 5 months and 18 days. There were born to her four sons, A. M. Oliver, C. P. Oliver, E. S. Oliver, all of Attica, Kan., and T. F. Oliver of Idaho, all of whom with the husband survive to mourn her loss.

After her marriage she remained with her mother, who was in very poor health, bestowing upon her all the care of a faithful and loving daughter, until her mother's death, which occurred Jan. 7, 1864.

After her mother's death she and her husband moved on a farm near Belmond, Ia., and resided there until 1866, when they moved on a claim that then was Osage Mission, Kan., now St. Paul, Kan. Upon selling this claim in the early part of the year 1867 they moved to Jasper Co., Mo., near the little town of Arvilla, from whence they moved to Dade Co., Mo., near Greenfield in the early part of 1868. Here they remained till the spring of 1872 when they moved on to a homestead on Pettis prairie Lawrence Co., Mo., near Peirce City and from there they moved to Harper Co. Kan., arriving there the third day of Nov. 1882, settling on their farm and completing their home Jan. 24, 1883.

These travels were all made by the old fashioned way by which all the pioneers made their way over thousands of miles of unsettled and unhospitable country with all its toils, privations, hardships, and dangers. On the first of August, 1909, they moved to Anthony, Kan., where they remained till May, 1910, when they moved to Attica where she died.

She was reared and educated by pious, God fearing Methodist parents her father being a minister.

In the early part of the year 1866, she became united to the Church of God, and was baptized by B. J. Hill. Until the time of her death she remained loyal to the precious faith, not only keeping the faith but endeavoring daily to fulfill the admonition of the apostle to add to the faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, etc., fully expecting in God's own time an entrance to be administered abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

She was, indeed, of a very kind and loving disposition, being always patient in all her trials. For many years she had been in failing health enduring much suffering and for the year practically bedfast. All this suffering she bore patiently, anxiously hoping for the coming of the One who would remove the curse, but firmly believing that if it is God's plan for the coming to be delayed yet a little while, until by the natural order of events, she would have to fall asleep, that sleep would be only for a short season, for she died firmly believing that the Spirit of God, which brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, would also quicken her mortal body.

Her aged husband and sons and their families do not weep alone, for many friends who knew her, when this sad message reaches them, will also sorrow greatly; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Funeral services were held at the United Brethren church, where a large concourse of friends listened to words of consolation spoken by Bro. Williams of Arkansas City, Kan. Interment was made in the Attica cemetery from which place she will quietly await the trumpet of God and the voice of the archangel from the clouds of heaven. Then shall the bars of the prison house of death be broken and the captives set free. Then will she come forth from the dusty bed of earth never again to drink of the bitter cup of death, but with the new song on her lips. Redeemed from the power of the grave. O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory. No more shall there come an ache or pain to twinge her body or a tear to dim her eye, for the former things are passed away.

Our comrades are falling around us.
Our dearest friends one by one;
Death once more claims a victim,
The enemy seems to have won.
Unnumbered millions are waiting
For him who has the key.
Hasten! O, Jesus, our Savior,
O Lord, we pray to thee.

Sadly, but with hope and comfort,
We lay them gently away,
Trusting our Lord and Savior
On the resurrection day
To burst the bonds of the enemy,
And let the captives free.
Hasten! O, Jesus, our Savior,
O Lord, we pray to thee.

Long, long has death reigned triumphant;
The cut seems hard to bear,
But those who remain true and faithful
Shall a crown of victory wear,
While by Christ and his heirs through the ages,
Will the earth from the curse be free.
Hasten! O, Jesus, our Savior,
O Lord, we pray to thee.

L. DERYAGE.

Mrs. Martha D. Morrow died at the home of her son, Dr. T. Morrow, in Altoona, Pa., after an illness due to old age. The deceased was a Miss Blessing of Brownville, Maryland, and a first cousin of my mother. She was a sister of Brother S. T. Blessing of Fort Worth, Texas.

At a late interview I found her to be a firm believer in the gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. She delighted in reading THE RESTITUTION which she has taken for many years.

She was one of my valued correspondents, and I know I shall miss her cheery letters in the coming days. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in him will God bring with him.

I felt somewhat sorry to see so few love feast letters in the good old paper, for I remember counting fifty-two beautiful letters in one RESTITUTION last year for Christmas, and no one feasted more on reading them than I did.

I would urge all to stand firm in the faith once delivered to the saints.

Yours in the Blessed Hope,

SARAH F. MORGAN.

The Bible.

What taught me that a First Great Cause
Existed ere creation was,
And gave a universe its laws?

What guide can lead me to this power,
Whom conscience leads me to adore,
And bids me seek him more and more?

When all my actions prosper well,
And higher hopes my wishes swell,
What points where truer blessings dwell?

When passions with temptations join
To conquer every power of mine
What leads me then to help divine?

When pining cares, and wasting pain,
My spirits and my life-blood drain,
What soothes and turns even these to gain?

And [illegible] my bosom sieze,
Where [illegible] can life run pleas'd?

When [illegible] chills my soul with fear,
And a regret but gloom and dread appear,
What [illegible] my heart can cheer?

When [illegible] doubts my thoughts perplex,
And mystic [illegible] reason vex,
Where is the guide which then directs?

Future Doom of Russia.

"And the Word of the Lord came unto me saying, Son of Man, direct thy face against Gog of the land of Magog, the chief prince of Rosh, Meshech and Thubal and prophesy against him, and say, Thus saith the Lord Eternal, Behold I will be against thee, O Gog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Thubal; and I will derange thee, and put hooks in thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thy army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed in elegant attire, a great assemblage with bucklers and shields, all of them grasping swords. Persia, Cush and Put (or all be) with them; all of them with shield and helmet; Gomer and all of [illegible] house of Thogarmah [illegible] the farthest north, and its [illegible] and many peoples shall be with [illegible] Be thou ready, and prepare thy- [illegible] on and all thy assemblages [illegible] that are assembled about thee, and [illegible] thou a guard unto them." Ezek. viii 1-7; Lesser Trans.

This is one of the most momentous prophecies of the Old Testament, because it is the last sign given to indicate the coming of the King in his glory. It is also of great interest and importance for all "who walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham," (Rom iv 12) that they should keep posted as to the movements of those nations named in the Scripture above quoted.

God has placed himself on record as being against "Gog of the land of Magog, the chief prince of Rosh, Meshech and Thubal." The reason why the Great Eternal, is against Gog, is because of his persecution of his ancient people of Israel. Ezek xxxiii 8, 9, describes Gog's future invasion of the land of Israel, and verses ten to twelve show the purpose of the invasion will be to rob Israel of their possessions, which they took with them on their return to their Fatherland. This restoration may be a partial restoration, the result of the present Zionistic movement.

Some one may ask who is this "Gog, of the land of Magog?" "We know of no such power in these latter days." That would be a very proper question, so I will have to give some attention to the powers named in the prophecy under consideration.

We must notice that the prophecy relates to the "last days," and to events yet to take place. Hence, the "Gog" of this prophecy must be the king of the modern power who has regal dominion over the ancient "land of Magog."

Boothroyd says, "that it is generally admitted that Gog was the common name of the kings of Scythia or Tartary, as Pharaoh was of the kings of Egypt."

Calmet "regards Gog as a king or a country or people known as Magog."

Newcome says Magog is the vast tract of country which the Greeks called Scythia.

Bagster thinks Magog is the country of the Scythians or Tartars. It was so called by Scythian and Syrian writers. Writers make Meshech and Tubal adjoining provinces to Magog, or Scythia, which "Gog of the land of Magog," added to his kingdom, and hence become "the chief princes of Rosh, Meschech and Tubal."

Another authority said: "Thubl, or Thubal, is the Hebrew name for the Tibareni, or Siberians, who occupied the country watered by the Thubl or Tobal, north of the Caspian Sea, and east of the Ural mountains. Hence, while Moscow is the capital of Meshech, Tobolski is the capital of the Thubal."

Now, as to the name "Rosh," or "Ros." About the year 1619, Bochart made extensive researches into Sacred Geography. He said Ros "is the most ancient form, under which history makes mention of Russia."

Says Wells: "The Scythian Tauri, in the Crimea, were scrolled, and the Araxes river in Russia, was also named Rhos. The modern Russians may have assumed this name, as Moscow and Tobolsk from Meshech and Tubal."

Now, there is not the least particle of doubt but that all these places are located in Modern Russia.

One of the allies with Russia in her coming invasion of the land of Israel, will be "Gomer, and all of his armies." Who is Gomer? I quote as follows: "But although the original plantation of Gomerites, or Cimmeri was in Lesser Asia, yet Herodotus tells us that these people sent a colony to the Maeotic Lake, North of the Euxine (Black) Sea, and the Maeotic Lake. This colony increasing spread by new colonies further west, and came up the Danube, and settled in the country, which from them has been called Germany. For Diodorus Siculus, as Mr. Mede observes, affirms that the Germans had their origin from the Cimmerians; and the Jews to this day, call them Ashkenazim of Ashkenaz, as being descended from that branch of Gomer. Indeed they retain plain marks enough of their descent, both in the name Cimri and as they call themselves, Germen; which is but a small variation from Gimren or Gomeren, Gomerans. For the termination en is a plural termination in the [illegible] and from the singular Gomer, is formed Gomeren, Germen, by the same analogy, as from brother is formed brotheren, brethren.

The country of Gomer is in the Chaldee, named Germia, Garmeja, but others write it Germania. Garmanija. The latter Jews by Germin understand Germany, the same as when it is written with an n, Germania, and so the Talmudists on Gen x 2, Gomer is Germanija (joma, fol. x 1).—Wells.

Much space of necessity has to be used to prove the identity of these ancient names with the modern powers, now occupying the territory of those ancient nations.

Now as to Ethiopia, Cush and Put. "Ethiopia is called by the Hebrews Cush. It lies to the south of Egypt, and embraced, in its most extended sense, the modern Nubia, Sennaar, Kordofan, and northern Abyssinia, and its more definite sense, the kingdom of Maroe, from the junction of the Blue and White branches of the Nile, to the border of Egypt. The only direction in which a clear boundary can be fixed is in the north, where Syene marked the division between Ethiopia and Egypt, (Ezek xxix 10); in other directions the boundaries can be generally described, as the Red Sea on the east, the Lybian desert on the west, and the Abyssinian highlands on the south. It is described as a well watered country, lying "by the side of" (A. V. "beyond" the waters of Cush (Isa xviii 1; Zephiii 10), being traversed by the two branches of the Nile, and by the Astaboras or Tacazze." Smith's Bible Dic.

As to the name Libia, Roman and Greek writers apply it to the African continent. Josephus says: "It is beyond the river in the region of Mauritania. By this name it is well known in the Grecian histories adjacent to the region which they call Phut. Libia and Ethiopia, include Northern Africa, except Egypt.

With these identifications before us, we can better comprehend the prophecies.

Ezek xxxviii 8, 9, Describes Gog (Russia) with his allied forces Persia, Cush and Put (Africa) Gomer (Germany) prepared and ready to come into the land (Palestine) that is recovering from the sword (just started to recover) against the people of Israel, (a portion of whom) have been "brought forth out of the nations, and that now dwell in safety;" they "come like a tempest, like a cloud to cover the earth," "To snatch up the spoil, and to take away the prey; to turn thy hand against the people (of Israel) that are gathered out of the nations, that have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the highest part of the land." The outcome of this raid will be (ver 22) "I will hold judgment over him with pestilence and with blood (shedding) and an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and sulphur will I let rain over him, and his armies, and over the many people (the armies of Persia, Germany and Africa) that are with him."

Daniel tells the story, Gog (Russia) is called by Daniel (xi 40), "The King of the North." "He shall enter also into the glorious land," (ver 40). "He shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas (Mediterranean and Dead) in the glorious holy mountain (Zion) yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him."

The twelfth chapter of Daniel shows that this raid of the "King of the North," into the "glorious land," is the last sign prior to the resurrection.

See Dan xii 1: "And at that time (and a prior, or an after time) shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people, (Israel); and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation," see Ezek xxxviii 18, 19.

Continue Dan xii 1: "And at that time (the time the king of the North "overflows" and "passes over" into "the glorious land") "thy people (as well as Israel) shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." See Mal iii 16. Continue the quotation of Dan xii 2: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, etc." This resurrection takes place at the "time of trouble," incident upon "the king of the North," entering the "glorious land." That the resurrection takes place at the "time of trouble," See Isa xxvi 19 to 21; Rev xi 18.

Dan xii 3: "And they that be wise shall ("at that time") shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

It is a matter of fact that Russia has been for years preparing for the "overflowing" and "passing over." As the present article is already too long, I will consider that and other things relating to this topic in a future article.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed please find a money order for $1.50 to renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION as a welcome weekly visitor, and I hope you will continue it the one paper for the people of God, with a view of edifying and growing in knowledge, i. e. feeding the sheep and lambs on things pertaining to the One Faith, way down in the latter days, in the culminating time.

It is surely disquieting to one's nerves to be censured in the endeavor to please the many in editing a paper, and more the shame when it comes from those of the household of faith. I am pleased to see some of our good brethren holding fast to the faithful word as they have been taught, that they may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers, Titus i. 9.

It is apparent that we are in the latter days, when judgment must first begin at the house of God, 1 Peter iv. 17. We ought therefore to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip, Hebrew ii. 1.

Holding fast means much—hold fast to the apostles' doctrine.

To our capable brethren I would say, while feeding yourselves, feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight, either in person or by letter, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, 1 Peter v. 2 3.

Yes, as Brother Underwood suggested a short time ago, write something concerning the signs of the times. The sheep old in the truth—one faith—of whom I am one these 52 years, want feeding. We want food too, not just nourishment, as the little girl here in the hospital said "I'm hungry; I want some food, I'm tired of nourishment."

Yes, we of the half century waiting ones want strong food. A stimulus to be steadfast, to not grow weary in waiting, watching for the Master. Allured onward by cheering culminating signs of the Lord's near approach. Yes, we all want food from over the world, that was prophecied should be in the latter days. It is to come from commingled nations far and near. Paul says We, followers, sound in the faith, are not to be in ignorance of that day, overtaking us as a thief as though entrapped through ignorance. I once asked a brother, not to teach, why he never spoke on things pertaining to prophecy. He answered decidedly, Don't know anything about it. I also asked concerning the birthrights, and again he answered, Don't know anything about it.

I was puzzled, surprised. Was it not necessary then to read the whole book of Genesis? Is there nothing more in it beyond the covenants of promise? I would ask Why did the Lord God cause the eldest to be supplanted both with Esau, Jacob, Manasseh and Ephraim, if there is no significance in the statement? Has not Deity made provision and established an Israel for the people taken out for His Emmanuel's, name, since they are not of the holy separate people above all people? How can we grow in knowledge if we do not delve deep in the things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets? How else can we know where we are at?

Again, Why does Esdras in 2 Esd. vi. 9 10, make the statement that Esau is the end of the world, and Jacob the beginning of it that follows. The hand of man is between the heel and the hand. Is there no meaning to this? If not why even the United Turk hobbling away over the Holy Land?

Still another point in prophecy our brethren never speak on, viz: Behold, I will send Elijah the prophet before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, Mal. iv 5 6. So much in this when taken in connection with Zech. xii.

God will surely prepare his ancient people to receive their long looked for Messiah. Will not this be the sign of his presence to the waiting Church? Mat. xxiv. 30.

Elijah was caused to see that he had power in himself, 1 Kings xix. 11 12; Neh. ix. 17 19, quieted his fears concerning Israel.

John was to come in the spirit and power of Elijah. This self same spirit was in Christ, hence Elijah had already come in the spirit power, "and they knew it not.

O, I want to know more, and I know there other hungry ones of the household. Is it not just as important to feed the sheep on these things as to feed lambs on the covenants of promise? Watchman, what of the night?

Yours in the Blessed Hope,

MATILDA WOODBURY.

Christ's Bodily Existence.

We are often told that the bodily resurrection of our Lord is a myth, and "not important as a part of the gospel hope. A young preacher was recently ordained in a popular church, who stated that he did not believe that the body of Christ was ever raised from the dead. Yet he was ordained on his confession of faith in the catechism.

It is admitted by the whole school of higher critics, so-called, that Christ was born with a real human body. It is also admitted that he was bodily baptized by John in the Jordan. It is also admitted that he was crucified in body on the cross. And that Joseph begged his body from Pilate, and that he was bodily placed in the tomb of Joseph. The same "higher critics" claim that he bore our sins in his own body on the tree. Now if men accept these statements how can they deny the statement of Christ as to his bodily existence after his resurrection. "Handle me and see, for a spirit (phantom) hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Indeed no other view can be entertained from what the Bible teaches on this point. The same truth applies to his coming again. He is to change "the body of our humiliation" like unto his glorious body when he comes. Phil iii 20 21. When he ascended to the Father, he was a tangible, visible being, "He will so come in like manner," as he was seen when he was taken up from his disciples. See Acts i 11. This is a plain truth and needs no higher critics.

Table Talk.

1 JOHN iii. 1.

Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not. In Jno iii 16 we read that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believed [illegible] should not perish but have everlasting life. In this was manifested the love of God toward us because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him, herein is love not that we loved God but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. We love him because he first loved us. Beloved if God so loved us we ought also to love another. Brothers and sisters, how can we show our love for him. By keeping his commandments and believing on his only begotten Son, and loving one another. In Jno xiv 15 we read, If ye love me keep my commandments, and in 1 Jno v 3, For this is the love of God that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous, and in iii 11, And this is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another as he gave us commandment. And in the first chapter of John we read, He came unto his own and his own received him not, but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God even to them that believe on his name, and in the 14th chapter we read, He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father. If we love one another God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. In 1 Jno iv 17, it says, Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world, if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Brothers and sisters, let us ever keep in the love of God, and be found worthy of eternal life when Jesus comes to reward his saints, is my earnest prayer.

WILSON TOWNSEND.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I write to tell our readers of good meetings we have just had, held by Bro. Adams, commencing Saturday evening Jan. 7. Held meetings every night, and Sunday had Bible reading in the forenoon, preaching afternoon and night, until Thursday night, until Thursday morning he was called to Columbus to preach a funeral sermon for Bro Sissle and on Friday night following delivered a lecture on the rebuilding of Solomon's temple, as contemplated by the masons. The attendance was not as good as we had hoped, but all that heard it were more than pleased, some want him to give it again in the near future. The meetings were then continued until Tuesday night when we closed. We had the best interest by outsiders that we have had in a long time. There were added by baptism, Brother Arthur White and wife and Bro. Howard Applebee. We were greatly rejoiced to receive these worthy young people into the household of faith. May they so live that an abundant entrance will be ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior. Others are interested, and we hope God willing to have Bro. Adams come again very soon and that much good may be done.

CARRIE FUGE, Sec.

From Psalm 37.

Fret not thyself because of evil doers.

For evil doers shall be cut off but of those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth.

For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be.

But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be for ever.

For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

For the Lord loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever; but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt them to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

But the transgressors shall be destroyed together.

T. J. COLEMAN.

Dear Restitution:

I have just read Brother Underwood's article in regard to some of the brethren writing about the policy of the nations at present. In the midst of a very busy day I seize my pen to second the motion. Think Brother Underwood himself could write ably, having read some of his articles on those subjects. Brother E. D. McCless promised us an article on China. Am much interested there. Just read a magazine article entitled "Race Prejudice in the Far East. I have thought China represents the dragon spoken of in the Bible, as her symbol is a dragon.

Alexander Fr[illegible]
March 13, 185[illegible]
Indiana, and die[illegible] aged 55 years, 10[illegible]

He was united in [illegible] to Eva A. McChesney, November 23, 1878.

To this union was born five children, Floyd of New Carlisle; Myrtle Houser, of Lakeville, Indiana; and Rolland, Iris, and Forest, who are at home with their mother. Besides his wife and children, he leaves to mourn his loss, two sisters and one brother, Mrs. Kannar; Mrs. Field and Asher Stilson, of Plymouth, Indiana, and a host of friends. Brother Stilson had been in declining health for eight years. His last sickness was brought on by a severe cold which terminated in his death in less than two weeks, in spite of all that kind and loving care could do to keep him with us.

The community has lost a good man and a kind neighbor, always upright in all his business transactions.

Brother Stilson embraced the Abrahamic faith while a young man, and was baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus September, 1878.

We [illegible] our brother away where he [illegible] city of [illegible] that glorious morning [illegible] all waiting, when Jesus [illegible] forth his angels to awaken [illegible] sleeping saints and change the living from mortality to immortality and accompany them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. He died in the faith of these promises being fulfilled.

Funeral services were held at Fairmount Church at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, conducted by Elder D. E. Vanvactor, whereat large concourse of friends and neighbors assembled to pay their respects to the memory of the deceased.

Those from a distance were Mrs. Philip Wolfenberger; Mr. and Mrs. George Jackson, of Walkerton; Mr. C. C. Field and Mrs. Frances Pierce, of South Bend; Mr. and Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Eunice Edgerton, of Grass Creek; Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Stilson, of Napotnee; and Mr. James Vinedge of Ogarnt, Wisconsin.

D. E. VANVACTOR.

His Kindness Lasts.

The thing that lasts in the universe is his kindness, which continues from everlasting to everlasting. What a revelation of God! O dear friends, if only our hearts could open to the full acceptance of that thought, sorrow, care, anxiety and every other form of trouble would fade away, and we should be at rest. The infinite, undying, imperishable love of God is mine, older than the mountains, deeper than ocean pools, wider than the heavens and [illegible] all my sin, is the love that grasps me and keeps me and will not let me go, and lavishes its tenderness upon me, and beseeches me, and pleads with me, and woos me, and rebukes me, and corrects me when I need, and sent his Son to die for me. "My kindness shall not depart from thee."—Alexander Maclaren.

A Little Sermon on Habit.

This is what a minister has to say (in The Household) about habit etymologically:

"Habit" is hard to remove. If you take away the first letter, "a bit is left." If you take off another letter, a "bit" is left. While if you take off another the whole of "it" remains. If you remove another it is not "t" totally used up. All of which goes to show that if you wish to get rid of a habit you must shake it off altogether."

That religion which fails us in the every day trials and experiences of life, has somewhere in it a flaw. It ought, if it come from above, to be always day by day, to our souls as the wings of a bird, bearing us away from and beyond the impediments which hold us down.

Ebenezer. 1. Sam 7, 12

Editor Restitution:

The Church at Ripley, Illinois, have again been privileged to enjoy a series of meetings conducted by Brother S. J. Lindsay, of Oregon, Illinois. The meetings began the 3d and closed the 15th. His first visit to us was five years ago last October. He sure found the Church in a perplexed state, and by his strict adherence to the truth as it is in Jesus concerning faith and practice, we were built up in the most holy faith, comforted and encouraged to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. By his preaching here many have been added to the Church of the living God.

In hope of Eternal Life,

...57 JENNIE ...

How great, how sublime, how magnificent will be that closing scene, when he who sits on the Throne shall utter these words, "Behold, I make all things new," and another world will arise adapted to the happiness of the elect.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide The Restitution to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind., or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

O. J. ALLARD, Sec.

Please don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

Brother B. Kelcoy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of The Restitution about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

The Bible: its Principles and Texts

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies the "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 399 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10623 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 366 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1.50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av, Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

A Letter to A Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

The article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are sending to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express ... by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please—not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and ... on an important subject, and when ... sticks it, an envelope that has to be ... hold it ... addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce a finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an ... or wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage and neglected to put on his return address. What to the wise is enough.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in The Restitution some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

It deals specifically as How to study the Bible, and why people fail to rightly understand God's Word. Price 50 cts.

Pine Wood's Bible Class, a book of 480 pages bound in cloth. Studies are carried on as between a Class and its Teacher. This method not only makes the teaching plain but interesting and attractive, like reading a story. Price $1.25.

The New City.

We have heard of a City of Light,
Whose portal are garnished with gold,
Its gems outshine the stars of the night,
Its glory was seen in visions of old.

A City of Rest, of Love and of Peace,
Where the tree of old Eden to bloom—
Where the joys of unknowable heaven increase,
Their victorious won over sorrow and gloom.

Waters of Life from the Throne ever flow,
On either side are the banks ever green,
There the fruits and the flowers of Paradise grow,
And mountains and valleys in beauty are seen.

No hearse shall be drawn o'er those streets of pure gold,
No anguish or tears shall ever be known:
But glory and rest with blessings untold,
Mingle with greetings that come from the Throne.

The King in His beauty and glory shall reign,
The nations in peace, their offerings bring
From the sea, from the hills and the plain,
And will pass through the gates to worship the King.

That Wind Is Best.

Which ever way the wind doth blow:
Some heart is glad to have it:
Then blow it east, or blow it west,
The wind that blows, that wind is best.

My little craft sails not alone:
A thousand fleets from every zone
Are out upon a thousand seas;
What blows for one a favoring breeze,
Might dash another, with the shock
Of doom, upon some hidden rock.

And so I do not dare to pray
For winds to waft me on my way;
But leave it to a Higher will,
To stay, or speed me; trusting still
That all is well, and sure that He
Who launched my barque will sail with me,
Through storm and calm, and will not fail,
Whatever breezes may prevail,
To land me, every peril past,
Within His sheltering haven at last.

Then whatsoever wind doth blow
My heart is glad to have it so.
And blow it east, or blow it west,
The wind that blows, that wind is best.

The Gospel.

"And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi 15.

Since our salvation depends upon our hearing, believing, and obeying the gospel, it is absolutely necessary that we know what the true gospel is. The word "gospel" signifies good news, or glad tidings,—but glad tidings of what? Let us see a little further.

Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom i 16. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." Luke ix 2. In Acts xix 8, it is said of Paul, "And he went into the synagogues, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." He also dwelt two whole years in his own hired house at Rome, (Acts xxviii 30, 31,) "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him."

It is evident from the foregoing Scripture that the gospel consists of the truths concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and as a belief of these truths is one requisite of salvation, it is incumbent upon us to search the Scriptures and determine what they are. "And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, (Acts iii 25; Gen xii 3,) saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal iii 8.

What further can we find about the message or gospel delivered to Abraham? When Abram was seventy-five years old he was called by God to get out of his country, and from among his kindred in Mesopotamia, (Acts vii 2) into a country the Lord would show him. He departed thence to a man. On his arrival in the land, God said unto Abram, "Unto thy seed will I give this land." Gen xii. 7. In Gen xiii 15 the promise is renewed, and again in Gen xv 18 the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Fifteen years after Abram's call, the Lord again appeared to him, promising to make him the father of many nations, and also renewed his covenant with him. He now said unto Abraham (for this was his new name,) "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." Gen xvii. 1-8.

Now, while Abraham and his seed were promised Canaan as an everlasting possession, yet Stephen said of Abraham to the Jewish council (Acts vii 4, 5,) "Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran (Haran;) and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no not so much as to set his foot on: yet he (God) promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child."

Paul says of the same promise, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise," (Heb xi 8, 9,) and yet "These all died in the faith, not having received the promise." Heb. xi 13.

As to whom the "seed" mentioned is, Paul says "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, 'And to seeds as of many;' but as of one, 'And to thy seed,' which is Christ." Gal iii 28, says, "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

Now, having traced the gospel delivered unto Abraham to its details, we find that he and his seed were promised the very land of Canaan as an eternal, or everlasting possession, even the boundaries being given; and that Abraham died without receiving the promised inheritance. It therefore follows that the fulfilment of the promise must be future, and after the resurrection of the righteous.

From what has been considered, we must admit that the inheritance and kingdom promised Christ and his saints, including Abraham, is not in a world beyond the skies, but here on the earth that "abideth forever" (Eccl i 4,) with the capital city and throne of Christ, our King, at Jerusalem. Jer iii 17; Isa xxiv 23; lx 14; Matt v 34; Mic iv 7, 8.

While as illustrated by the parables of "the mustard seed" and "leaven" the kingdom shall be small at first, yet it will expand so as to finally fill the whole earth, and consume all other nations or kingdoms. Dan ii 44; Rev xi 15.

David says of Christ (Psa lxxii 49,) "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, (God,) and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away ....And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under (not above) the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High"..... Dan vii 14, 27. "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."....And the Lord shall be King over all the earth." Zech xiv 5, 9.

Many other passages verify the evidences already given, that the earth, and not some unknown, far away realm, is to be the future abode of the saints; as "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth," and "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

But how say some that Christ is already on his throne (in heaven) and reigning over his people? The Scriptures refute this idea, as the following passages show: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt xxv 31. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev iii 21. It is plainly stated that he is now on his Father's throne, and furthermore, Luke i 32, says Christ is to be given the throne of his father David, which was in Jerusalem.

Our entrance into the kingdom is to be coincident with the Lord's coming. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, (caught away in clouds, Diglott) to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thes iv 16, 17. "When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col iii 4.

As by the sin of Adam man was condemned to die, how is there to be any redemption from this death state, to enter into the promised kingdom?

God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Paul says of Abraham, "He staggered not at the promise of God, through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness. Now, it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus, our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." Rom iv 20, 25.

If we repent, believe the true gospel, and are baptized for the remission of sins, Acts ii. 38, in obedience to its command, following with a godly life, we have the promise of entrance into the kingdom and promised land.

Having observed some of the leading truths of the gospel, as preached to Abraham, and by Christ and the apostles, the question arises, What about those who believe or preach some other gospel—that we enter our reward (in heaven), or go to a burning hell, at the moment of death; that the earth shall finally be utterly consumed by flames, and cease to be, and other unscriptural doctrines? Paul says, Gal. i. 6-9 "But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

So, may we all be careful as to what we believe or teach, heeding Paul's admonition to "Study to show thyself approve unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth," 2 Tim. ii 15.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 57.

March 3, 1903, Rowland wrote, "Your last letter did us a great deal of good, especially dear mother, who is quite the same in health save advance of age, and increasing infirmities, she says since leaving you and has from childhood but cannot write again until conditions are favorable for light, eyesight, etc."

Mrs. Lyman M. Willard had returned home, and a greater surprise and joy than even her visit had been, had come to Auntie Willard, for the dear son Lyman had appeared on the scene to be again clasped in her arms, and kissed and blessed as in days of yore. We can only imagine the delight of that meeting; we cannot paint—the long talks on precious Bible themes; the questions, the answers, the hours spent in reading the holy Book and in song service and prayer; the last, tearful leave-taking, warning words, unclasping hands and steps, going sadly, slowly down the stairs, to come back no more!

"Sunshine and shadow," and so it will ever be until Jesus comes.

But Dr. Nelson L. Willard needed cheering too. his hip-joint had not healed properly or firmly, and he could as yet take only a few steps without crutches, so Lyman bent his way thitherward, taking Rowland's younger daughter Clara, with him for a six weeks stay. No one who has not been in like position can guess how much of comfort for the crippled brother there was in this visit, his pleasure being marred only by the thought that it would be the last this side of the coming Eden.

But the joy-bells had yet a sweeter strain to ring in Auntie Willard's home. Rowland junior had from a child been interested in the Scriptures of truth. Even before he could talk plainly he would run in from play and tugging at the big Bible would say, "Grandma, Jesus read," meaning that he wanted her to read about Jesus, and when older grown he had not forgotten; neither the attractions of society, nor the fascinating character of his business being able to turn his thoughts from God. And now he had come under the blood, "the only name under heaven given among men whereby we can be saved having been named," or placed "upon him," in baptism.

It mattered not to Auntie Willard, now that God had answered her prayers for this dear child, and made her happy, with a happiness akin to that of the angels in heaven.

Lizzie May's letters from Dumont were also a blessing and a treat, she having learned that "the key to get out of Bunyan's Doubting Castle kept by Giant Despair was to be found in the words, 'Trust in God.'"

There were dark clouds of sorrow over the home, but the joy given of the Lord, gave the trusting ones strength above even these. It had been thought at first when Mr. James Webb was hurt that he would soon recover, but he had grown worse, had been sent to the hospital and physicians said "there was little hope." Mrs. Rowland Willard was so distressed when she saw how bad he was that she fainted away, and all were greatly grieved, for he was a noble man and a true friend, even helping to pay May's way through the normal school.

The next letter from Rowland, to our great delight, enclosed one from Auntie Willard, in which she addresses me as precious, for the sake of my parents and for the sake of him who loved us and gave himself for us." Then calling to memory my grandparents, she says, "I shall see them in the kingdom for which we pray 'Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven.' Then earth will be good enough for us all. Your grandfather can shout as loud as he pleases and offend no one, and he will no longer carry a cane, for the lame shall leap as an hart. How can we wait much longer?

The patriarch Job could muster grace to say 'All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Just now, I cannot, sometimes I can."

This letter was written in her usual plain hand with lines straight across the page, and bore date of March 26, 1903, though not sent until April 25 at which time Rowland Junior's apprenticeship at Cramps was over, and he in the drafting department, having "exceeded all others of his age there."

Auntie Willard wrote again in June, but the letter is missing. Rowland also wrote some two or three times, during the remainder of the year, and again, Dec. 6, 1904, when his mother was past ninety years, telling me how solemnly she talked and prayed with the young people who came to see her they "seeming to like her direct, fearless way of presenting the truth."

Jan. 15, 1905, Auntie Willard writes, "Dear Roxana, Language fails me to convey to you the depth and blessedness of your letter. You have no conception of the effect it has upon my mind. All I know is to hold on to Jesus, I think he will come soon. I fully appreciate your words. How I bless God that you married Bro. Wince, so few could appreciate as he does what God has done for you. I hope we shall soon meet where we can talk face to face. Do pray for my dear son and praise God for the patience he has for me. Remember me to all the dear friends." She could not at this date see the sheet she was writing, nor trace the lines save as her hand was guided by that of her patient son, but "the blessed hope," remained the same, growing brighter and brighter as she neared the end of life." To those who heard her sing, it seemed as if the old days had come again, the voice and heart that made the song so full of gladness, still glowing with the old, old love to Jesus and to all around her;" and this was the secret of her happiness. We cannot be happy with hate in our heart, nor with God and Jesus and the hope of the gospel shut out of our lives. We need God's sustaining grace every moment that we live, and can have no enduring peace without it.

Auntie Willard, when anything occurred at home or abroad, to bring discomfort, broke forth in song and praise to God. She was like a bird, singing in the rain. And Oh! I am so glad that she overcame, and will by and by eat of the hidden manna and have the white stone and the new name. It made me feel like shouting as I read, for it is a harder struggle to bring our wills into such complete subjection to the law of Christ that we can love even our enemies than it is to conquer an army.

2 TIM II. 19.

"Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity."

In this verse we have two very great and comforting thoughts namely, "The foundation of God standeth sure" and "The Lord knoweth them that are his." The question that most naturally arises, is where and who this sure or steady foundation is. In Isa xxviii 16 we find, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste." This shows very plainly where this sure foundation will be and in Eph ii 19, 20 tells just who our sure foundation or precious corner stone is, it says "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

"The Lord knoweth them that are his." What a grand and precious thought this for us brothers and sisters. In Nah. i. 7, it tells us "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him." Also John x. 14, testifies to the same. It says "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine."

I wish to give a reference showing why we should "depart from iniquity" and follow after righteousness. In Heb. xiii 4, we find [illegible] his ways are judgments; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." So we see if we hope to be like our "Chief corner stone" we must depart from iniquity, for he is without it. I will close with a few of Paul's words found in 1 Tim. vi. 11-12. "But thou, O man of God, flee these things," and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses."

ISA PUTTORF.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have enjoyed reading THE RESTITUTION so much lately. It seem getting better all the time. I am glad to see so many good articles on the coming of Christ, which shows that the Church is not sleeping, but is anxiously awaiting the coming of him who will usher in the age of eternal peace and happiness.

We realize that the time to work for our Master is short. Perhaps 1911 may be the last year we will have. We do not know when the Lord may return. It may be several years, and it may be tomorrow.

What are we going to do this year? We cannot all go out and preach, but we can all do something. If each of us would send THE RESTITUTION to some friend, or donate to the Helping Fund, perhaps we might be the means in God's hands of saving a soul from death. We can distribute tracts and accomplish much good if we only will try.

May the Lord bless you in all your work. Your Sister in Christ,

HANNA M. BARBER.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

Enclosed find a money order for THE RESTITUTION for 1911. I think the paper is better of late than it ever was, and as long as it is up to its present standard we have no use for another. One such good paper well supported as it should be by all the brethren, is far better than so many and all half supported.

I like the way you put it concerning it making no difference what you believe just so you are sincere. No, we have got to have faith, and then stand for it—not one thing today and another thing tomorrow.

May God bless you in your work is my prayer.

Your Brother in the one faith,

M. D. NEWELL.

Editor Restitution:

I write to send you my subscription for the old faithful paper again. I do wish to keep it up as long as I am able to raise money to pay for it, or until our glorious King shall appear to end all need of such publications with his presence, ruling all kingdoms of our old mother earth. I am much pleased with the stand you take on the disputed points. Christ and his apostles taught in accord with what Peter said "Thou art the Son of the living God," and Jesus shows there and then he would build his Church on this foundation. This satisfies me of the importance of our knowledge of Christ from his conception till the end of his earthly life, believing he was truly the Son of the living God in every sense of the thought of father and son compared with our own natural sons. So I am pleased that you stand firm on the Solid Rock which is big enough to support the whole Church who truly believe in him.

Your Brother in Christ,

JOHN A. MITCHELL.

When faith does not culminate in service the faith muscle withers away.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 1, 1911.

In the Scientific American for Jan. 28, is the annual statement from our government at Washington showing the number and power of the armored ships of the world's navies. England leads with 105, followed by the United States with 50, Germany 46, France 42, Japan 31, Russia 27, Italy 27, Austria 14, Argentina 3, Brazil 3, and Spain 2.

The question of fortifying the Panama Canal is up before the world, and varying opinions are given on the matter. The President of the United States wants it to be fortified, and so made able to resist any attack. The recent alliance of Russia, Germany and Persia, as outlined by the Prophet Ezekiel, has resulted in Germany taking an active interest in this seemingly remote subject. The German Emperor has appointed a new Minister to Mexico, and to him is entrusted the task of keeping watch on what is done about the Panama Canal. The significance of this lies in the man appointed. His name is Captain Von Hintze. He is a naval officer, was Admiral Von Diederich's flag lieutenant in Manila Bay in 1898, and had the conduct of those very ticklish negotiations had with Admiral Dewey at that time. He is a man of great shrewdness, and it is the first time a naval officer has ever been thus promoted to a diplomatic post of such importance. His appointment attracts attention as it shows the intense interest Germany takes in this new short route from the Atlantic to the Pacific. All these incidents are of interest to the watcher on Zion's wall as he gazes out anxiously for signs of Coming Day.

As was shown by Brother Wilson's article in last week's issue, certain nations are to be gathered with Russia, and whether the actual leader be the Czar of Russia or the Kaiser of Germany does not signify, as it is the combination of forces that is to be looked for. We saw a good start in this combine a few days since when Russia and Germany came together in Persian affairs, which has an added significance when coupled with the note sent to England by the German foreign office demanding that British Marines that had been landed at Lingah, Persia, be withdrawn. As this is the port aimed at by the German Bagdad railway, and as the combine united this with the Russian lines, we see how alarmingly near Russia is to gaining an ice-free way to the sea. As this much longed-for attainment has been balked for years by England, we need not be surprised to find British war ships on police duty at all south Persian ports. Will England withdraw just because Germany says for her to do so? Watch and see the next move on the checker-board. Just as surely as the Prophet Ezekiel outlined this combination with the Gog power, so surely does he show another combination that will endeavor to counteract the influence of this mighty Gog power. In the forefront of this other combine we recognize England. We have private opinions of who will compose this combine, but do not care to air such opinions now, however an important opinion is given by Archibald S. Hurd, Editor of the Fortnightly Review, London, in which he sets out the opinion that not increased or decreased armaments, nor peace conventions at the Hague, but the consolidation of the English speaking people—England the United States—and they in conjunction with Japan, is what will guarantee peace to the world.

We wish to add that some other nations whose interests are naturally against the Gog power combine will just as naturally be with this counter combine, for after all it is a question of selfish interest that makes a combine possible. No need for any Bible student to be any more than just reminded that the world's peace will not be guaranteed by any such means. The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ must take place, and the power of the oppressor be broken. The kingdoms of this world must fall and his righteous rule established before true and lasting peace can be looked for. So while watching the things coming on the earth, we ardently pray the Lord to hasten his coming, the ushering in of the only One who can guarantee peace to the world.

The new order from the Vatican requiring Catholic bishops and priests to renew their oaths disavowing so-called "modernism" is causing trouble in German Catholic circles, and there are indications of a church war in Germany such as shook France only a short while ago. This is a "sign of the times."

The plague is having full sway in North China, and inhabitants are trying to get out of the infected districts. Manchuria is attacked, and to add to the trouble some thousands of Russian workmen struck on the Eastern Chinese railway, because the administration refused to dismiss a lot of the Chinese laborers and send them away. The strikers were paid off, and with their families were evicted from their dwellings, and now there is excuse for sending large bodies of Russian soldiers into that country below Harbin again.

Sunday School Lesson.

February 12, 1911.

Elijah's Victory over the Prophets of Baal. 1 Kings xviii.

Golden Text—"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Josh. xxiv. 15.

This lesson is about three and a half years after Elijah had warned Ahab of the failure of dew and rain. The consequent famine had reduced the nation to starvation. Ahab had sought in all lands round about to find Elijah, but without success. He sent his highest officer, Obadiah, to go one way while he went the other, in an effort to find water to keep the flocks and herds alive. While on this errand Obadiah met Elijah. Obadiah was faithful to God in a degree, even though holding this office, and when Jezebel had ordered the slaughter of the prophets of God, he had been instrumental in hiding one hundred of them and supplied them food and water. Knowing that Ahab wanted to find Elijah and kill him, Obadiah was afraid to carry word to Ahab that Elijah was there, lest when Ahab came and Elijah was again vanished, that Ahab would turn and kill him. But Elijah assured Obadiah that he would be there when Ahab came, and so Obadiah made report, and Ahab hurried to meet Elijah.

Ahab demanded to know if Elijah was he who had troubled Israel? but Elijah said he had not troubled Israel. On the other hand Ahab and his predecessors had done so, in that they had forsaken God and followed Baalim.

Elijah asked that the prophets of Baal be gathered at Mt. Carmel—450 of them, besides those who attended the groves (shrines) and at the table of Jezebel. When all were assembled Elijah proposed a test. Each was to take a bullock, prepare it for sacrifice, but no fire was to be kindled. Then the prophets of Baal were to call on their gods to send fire, and he would call on the one true God, and the one that answered by fire, was to be God. To this the people said "It is well spoken"—they acknowledged the test as fair.

The story is simple. Baal's prophets tried all their arts and conning tricks, called on their gods, tortured themselves by cutting gashes from which their blood flowed, but all was fruitless, and no fire came. Elijah taunted them by telling them to call louder, as likely their god had gone a journey, or was asleep. He would have the people see how silly and foolish it was to trust in idols. How perfectly absurd it was to suppose that such could hear and help them. This went on till the time of evening sacrifice. Then Elijah had his altar made ready, a trench was dug around it, to prove that there was no trick this trench was filled with water that lily could be spared. Then Elijah called on God to demonstrate his power, and that he was his servant. Fire came and the offering was consumed, and the water licked up that was in the trench. The people saw it, and fell on their faces to the ground and cried "The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God."

When Elijah offered to make the test with the prophets of Baal, the point at issue was Who can bring rain that will relieve the famine in the land and end distress for the people? Test is What do you know—what can you do? For three and a half years water had ceased to come, and famine and want was in the land. Baal had failed to bring relief. The people were called by this one man, that a trial be had of power, and the lesson story shows the outcome. God answered his servant, and the destruction of these false prophets was accomplished.

The feelings of some people are offended at this way of dealing with these men, thinking it was not a godly or Christian act to thus massacre all these people. Perhaps it would be as well to look at this in a different light. These men were not repentant in any sense. They were murderers, having killed God's prophets. They were in short criminals, and had debauched Israel. As such they were dealt with by God through Elijah his servant. The religion of Jesus Christ is to change idolaters and unbelievers to the true God, and were these men in any way susceptible of conversion, it would have been right to work with them and show them the true way of God. But God knew their hearts, and knowing them they were slain as enemies to God.

The question Elijah put to the people was "How long will ye halt between two opinions?" Why hesitate and come to no decision? Why not make up your mind?

This is the question that comes to every one today. Even by your silence you make a choice. All who are not for God are in a measure against him. Between right and wrong, between good and evil, there is no "neutral ground." You must stand with right—with God, or you will be counted on the other side. If your life and influence is not on the side of right, and for the true God, it is practically if not actually against him. The whole question is Whom will you serve?

Elijah chose self-denial, learning lessons of truth and right, serving God with his whole being.

Baal's prophets were on the other hand self-indulgent. Ease, pleasure, luxury, sensual gratification. Their desires were low and debasing, and they would force the people of Israel to follow them.

Today you must choose self-indulgence with the prophets of Baal, or self-denial with the God-fearing, self-sacrificing Prophet Elijah.

Which will it be?

The Record.

When reading the article by Brother B. W. Woodward in The Restitution of January 18, I was impressed with the many truths expressed, and with the Christian spirit manifested therein. Now we all know that it is written "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Therefore we should step lightly in the matter of disfellowshiping any of our Lord's brethren.

But if a man seeks to destroy the Rock on which Christ built his church, we should hold him as John did Cerinthus—with abhorence.

In regard to the devil question, I leave it alone, although I am inclined to believe that the devil in most instances noted in the Scriptures is a human adversary. However, I grant to the other man what I claim for myself, liberty on questions that experience has taught us cannot be settled to the satisfaction of all the brethren, for the very reason that many questions come up on which the Scriptures have not pointedly spoken.

Therefore let us not be too positive because what we do not know would make a much larger book than what we do know.

Now I would like to talk with Bro. Woodward in a friendly way about some things in his article. You say "If there is a Christ there is a devil. The evidence is as strong to prove one as the other." Of course I understand you to mean a personal spiritual being. The record tells the time, and where Christ was born. Can we affirm from the record where and when the devil was born? Christ for some thirty years was seen and mingled with men and women, asking and answering questions. He was laid hold of and nailed to the cross. His prophetic utterances are being fulfilled now, and in every age since his appearance among men nearly two thousand years ago. Is not the evidence of a personal devil a little more involved in mystery?

If you come to Luke x. 18, and read without pre-existence in your mind, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven," the context before and after indicates that the fall of Satan was then and there by being cast out by the seventy, who rejoiced that the devils were subject to them through his name. He saw their work though not with them by the same power that he saw Nathaniel under the fig-tree.

You quote 2 Thess. ii. 9 as a prophecy to be fulfilled just before the second appearing of Christ. I will give the reading of the Diaglott and of the R. V. of that text, and you can judge if the coming referred to means Christ or does it refer to the man of sin:

"Whose coming is according to the energy of the adversary, with all power, and signs, and wonders of falsehood," Diaglott.

"Whose coming is according to the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders," R. V. of 2 Thess. ii. 9.

Work Till Jesus Comes.

Cloud of rest, for thee I sigh,
When will the moment come,
When I shall lay my armor by,
And dwell in peace at home.

Chorus:

We'll work till Jesus comes,
We'll work till Jesus comes,
We'll work till Jesus comes,
And then be gathered home.

Immortal honors Christians gain,
We'll be gathered home,
Immortal one with Christ shall reign.
We'll be gathered home.

Chorus.

How inspiring and soul-cheering is the language and sentiment of the poet. When one is fatigued with the toil and heat of the day, how sweet and refreshing the rest of a comfortable and happy home. The poet contemplates the Christian life in this world of sin, sorrow and pain, as a day of toil and care to the one striving in the affairs of this life; and he sighs for the day of rest. Not rest merely for a few hours, when the toil of another day will begin, but a day of eternal rest in peace and home.

O, the sweet words Rest, Peace, and Home. The weary soldier knows how sweet and refreshing is a night of rest after a tiresome march, how welcome is peace after the conflict, and how happy the home-coming when the war is ended. So the soldier of the Cross, having on the whole armor of God, Ephesians vi. 13-18, fights manfully the battles of the Lord, and looks longingly for Jesus to come and give him rest from the fatigues of his fight against sin. Peace after the conflict, and a home in the Paradise of God with the family of the redeemed.

I would toil in the field where he calleth me to go,
Though humble my work may be;
I would ask no more, I only care to know,
'Tis the way my Lord leadeth me.

Signs of Destruction.

For when they shall say: Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them. 1 Thess. v. 3. Have we ever come to the time in the history of the nations, when this cry of Peace and safety, was sounded out to the world? Yes. We are right there now, Today. There is an International Peace Congress at the Hague, and all prominent nations have representatives there. What for? To keep peace among the nations, to settle differences by arbitration. All nations that can, are building, and have built, the greatest and most destructive war vessels that ever sailed the seas. Ask them what they are building such monstrous war ships for, and they tell you for Peace! Every nation is safe if it has these powerful war machines, according to the world's interpretation of this word.

Listen to God's Word. Then sudden destruction impends over them, just as labor-pangs on her who is pregnant, and they shall by no means escape, Diaglott. How does this destruction come? The Lord's Day is coming like a thief at night. To whom? To those in darkness. Who are in darkness? The way of the wicked is as darkness, Proverbs iv. 19.

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness, John xii. 46. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, and against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits in high places. Jesus said I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, John viii. 12. We believe there are some that walk in the light. Who are they? But ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief, ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day, 1 Thess. v. 4 5. Let no man deceive you with vain words, be not ye therefore partakers with them. For ye were sometime in darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, Eph. v. 6-11.

The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light, Isa. ix. 2; ix. 12. How did they find that light? By believing in the true Christ, and accepting of him as their guide. For he says I am the bread of life, and whosoever believeth on him may have everlasting life. For eternal life is the gift of God through Christ. As Christ is the light of the world, so shall they that come to him and leave worldly affairs behind, may see by the progress of the nations that the sudden destruction spoken of, is here even at the door.

Now brethren, are we going to cast the light aside, and go back into the darkness, by our strife, our causing divisions in the Church of God, our desire to create a new organization, trying to invent some new gospel?

This gospel that Paul preached is the oldest gospel we have any record of, and Paul an inspired writer said, that whosoever should preach another gospel should be accursed. Let us therefore lay aside all contention and take up the complete armor of God, that we may be able to resist in the evil day; and having achieved every thing to stand. Stand then having your loins girded around with truth, and having put on the breastplate of righteousness, and having your feet shod with the preparation of the glad tidings of peace, take also the shield of faith, and the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God, Eph. vi. 13-17, Diaglott.

Present a solid front in Christ, lay aside all differences, and be prepared to meet the Redeemer, and see the destruction of the nations, for it is coming soon. God help us to be faithful to the end.

Yours in the Hope,
E. W. Knapp.

The King's Message.

erlasting life. Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

Jesus the King gives us so much in his message to make us happy if we desire to obey it, but so much to make them unhappy if they care to ponder over it and not obey it that I can not close his message to us without a few more references of blessed assurance to those who obey it.

Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or fathers, or mother, or wife, or children, or land, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life. This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain for the former things are passed away.

This, brothers and sisters is only a small portion of The King's Message, but I hope I have given you enough of it that it may aid each of you to lay hold on eternal life through Jesus Christ our King and Savior, and that we may each be one of his saints to reign with him forever when he comes to establish his kingdom on this earth, in the land of Canaan, the land which his Father, the only true and living God promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and through them to their Seed Jesus Christ by whom we have an entrance.

Destruction.

The Bible teaches a future judgment for all men, that we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ. But the Scriptures do not teach eternal torment, nor do they teach the final restoration and eternal salvation of all men.

Let those believe who will in the preservation of the wicked throughout eternity for the sake of making them miserable forever; let those believe who will that, after all their rejection of the mercy of God, the wicked are nevertheless to be restored to holiness and happiness: but as for us, we purpose to cling to the literal teachings of the Word of God. Those teachings are, that "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked he will destroy." And when he destroys them, it is to be with an "everlasting destruction" at the revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven. Such a destruction will be total and final, one from which there will be no recovery forever. It will eventuate in the sinner's death, the utter loss of his life the obliteration of his personal being. Thus it will put a complete end to him forevermore. May we adhere to the Bible, and prepare for "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—G. L. Young.

Our Part Essential.

God has a place for each of us, and a work for each one of us. God does not expect us to fill more than our own place, or to do more than our own work; but each one of us is important in his or her own sphere. All the offerings of the wealthy in the courts of the temple in Jerusalem were well in their time and amount. But the poor widow, who had only her two mites, should not have felt that her gift was unimportant. It seemed as if Jesus sat watching and waiting for that little offering, and the story of her doing her part has been told the world over in the centuries since then, as a lesson and as an inspiration. Even though our part is but a little one, God, as it were, watches and waits for that. Shall it be lacking?

When You Feel Like It.

Whatever your work, do not wait to feel just like it before you begin to do your best. If you wait for inspiration you are doomed. Disregard your moods. Pay no attention to your feelings. If it is time to work, set about it, not half-heartedly, but with the whole souled energy which is an admirable substitute for enthusiasm. To wait till you feel like it before you do your best is to waste life and power.

Conditions of Happiness.

The conditions of happiness which produce no allusions and brighten more and more unto a perfect day are not difficult to name. There must be some supreme object of love and hope upon which the heart is fixed. There must be harmony with the will of God. There must be endurance in the cause of Jesus Christ. There must be an inner peace which no outer tumult can disturb.

Editor Restitution:

I herewith enclose my check of $1 50 to pay for another years' subscription to your paper. I want to inform you that I take a great deal of pleasure and profit in reading The Restitution. I find many good articles in it. There is no organization of the Church of God where I live, and at present I am teaching an adult Bible class in a Christian church. I find it slow work converting people to the truth, but I am doing the very best I can. I was for about ten years a member of the Church of God at Andover, S. D. when we had our dear Brother D. T. Halstead as pastor, so you may know I was under a good instructor.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous New Year, I am very truly your Brother in hope,

Eugene C. Webster.

Dear Brother Underwood:

You will please find enclosed $1 50 for our renewal to The Restitution. The paper is all right and also its Editor. May God bless you that you may always publish the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Yours for the Truth,
F. C. Myers.

Wesley said if you seek for anything outside of the love of God you seek wide of the mark. You say you need patience, love embodies patience. You say you lack faith, love "believeth all things." Love is the embodiment of all the grace. Therefore get more love.

The Good Shepherd.

He leadeth me; he knows the way,
He would that I go not astray,
But trust in his true guiding hand,
That leads up to fair Canaan's land.

He leadeth me still waters by,
And in green pastures down to lie:
His sheep he watches night and day,
And seeks for those that go astray.

And in his bosom brings them then
In safety to the fold again,
And bids them trust his constant care,
While his kind hand will keep them there.

My table thou didst well provide
With bread and water, lead and guide
Me to thy house and holy place—
Its all through mercy and through grace.

Thy holy hill who shall ascend?
The faithful one unto the end.
Thy blessing too he shall receive,
And Everlasting Life to live.

Jesus the Son of God.

The Scriptures all do testify
That Jesus Christ is now on high:
That he was truly sent by God
To do his will, to teach his word.

The prophets all declared of old
The types and shadows all foretold.
The coming of a Perfect One,
To equal him there would be none.

He was declared to be God's Son,
To equal him there has been none,
Of all the sons of Adam's race,
For God has given him this place.

He lived his life among the poor,
His sympathy was ever sure;
He cured the sick and raised the dead,
And oft the hungry ones he fed.

He lived a life all free from sin,
Eternal life he thus did win,
He counted riches all as dross
And died for us upon the cross.

That we might come to God through him,
And cleansed be from every sin,
And be arrayed in robes of white,
And walk for ever in the light.

A. WALLACE MASON.

January 22nd was a most beautiful day at Brush Creek, Ohio. The earth clothed in spotless snow, the sun's rays unobstructed by a cloud, it was emblematic of the "new life" begun by Miss Florence Westfall. It was a happy day for the Church, but particularly for Bro. and Sister Westfall, who rejoiced more to see their daughter "born of water" than when she was born of the flesh.

Bro. Geo. Aldridge, Editor of "The Bible Standard," of Auckland, New Zealand, writes us follows in his review of our book in Dec. issue: "The Bible: Its principles and Texts" is a book containing a selection of articles that were written by the Author in answer to questions, or as expositions of difficult themes. As indicated by the title, the book is divided in to three sections. The first consists of a disquisition on the Bible; the second presents its principles in formulated propositions; and the third expounds particular texts. The Author possesses a clear and forceful style, and no reader can remain in doubt as to the meaning intended to be conveyed. The essay on the Bible deserves close reading and study, for its illuminating presentation of the true position which the Word occupies, and for the fulness of Bible reference which characterizes it. With some of the expositions we do not find ourselves able to agree, but we can commend the book as worthy a thoughtful study for the fresh and vigorous manner in which the author presents his views of Bible doctrines."

Whose Son Is He?

Jesus asked the Pharisees, What think ye of Christ? whose Son is he? Matt xxii 41, 42.

This was and is a greatly disputed question and to enable people to answer it correctly the following quotations are given:

Matt xxii 43-46. Jesus said, If David in spirit called Christ Lord, how is he his son? And no man was able to answer him a word.

Matt iii 17. Lo a voice from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.

Matt xiv 33. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped Jesus, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

Matt xxvi 63, 64. The high priest said, I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus said unto him, Thou hast said (or "It is true" Twentieth Century Version.)

Mark i 1. The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Mark ix 7. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear him.

Luke i 35. That holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.

John i 34. I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God.

John iii 18. He that believeth on him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

John v 25. The hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.

John ix 35. Jesus said, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?

John x 36. Say ye of him whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world thou blasphemest because I said I am the Son of God.

John xi 4. Jesus said, This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God that the Son of God might be glorified.

John xix. 7. The Jews answered him, We have a law and by our law he ought to die because he made himself the Son of God.

John xx 31. These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God and that believing ye might have life through his name.

Act ix 20. And straightway Paul preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

Gal ii 20. The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.

Heb. i 2 God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things.

Heb iv 14. Seeing then that we have a great high priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

Heb x 29. Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing and hath done despite to the spirit of grace?

1 John iv 15. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him and he in God.

1 John v 5. Who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God. Verse 12. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. Verse 20. And we know that the Son of God is come..... even in his Son Jesus Christ.

Rev ii 18. Unto the angels of the church in Thyatira write these things saith the Son of God.

In the 2nd century there was a body of people who claimed to be Christians who believed and taught that Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary. The following quotations will give a good idea of who they were and in what position they stood in relation to the New Testament.

"Among the many sects which divided the Christian Church in the 2nd Century, it is natural to mention, in the first place that which an attachment to the Mosaic Law separated from the rest of their Christian brethren.....This body of Judaizing Christians, which set Christ and Moses on an equal footing in point of authority was afterwards divided into two sects extremely different both in their rites and in their opinions and distinguished by the names of Nazarenes and Ebionites.....The Nazarenes held that Christ was born of a virgin, and was in a certain manner united to the divine nature; they refused to abandon the ceremonies prescribed by the law of Moses, but were far from attempting to impose the observance of these ceremonies upon the Gentile Christians.....The Ebionites regarded Christ as a man born of Joseph and Mary according to the ordinary course of nature. They, moreover asserted that the ceremonial law, instituted by Moses, was not only obligatory upon the Jews but also upon all others, and that the observance of it was essential to salvation. And as St. Paul had very different sentiments from them concerning the obligations of the ceremonial law, and had opposed the observance of it in the warmest manner, so of consequence they held this apostle in abhorance and treated his writings with disrespect. Nor were they only attached to the rites instituted by Moses they went still further and received with an equal degree of veneration the superstitions of their ancestors, and the ceremonies and traditions which the Pharisees presumptuously added to the law." Mosheim Ecclesiastical History.

"The belief of the most numerous of the Ebionites may be reduced to the following propositions:—Jesus is indeed the promised Messiah, the Son of David and the supreme Law Giver, yet a mere man like Moses and David sprung by natural generation from Joseph and Mary. The sense of his Messianic calling first arose in him at his baptism by John when a higher spirit joined itself to him. Circumcision and the observance of the whole law of Moses are necessary to salvation for all men. Paul is an apostate and heretic and all his epistles to be discarded."—Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

"Two classes of Ebionites had these points in common:

1st. They emphasized the unity of God.

2nd. They affirmed the universal obligation of the Mosaic law.

3rd. Of the books of the New Testament they received as genuine only the Gospel of Matthew.

4th. They denounced Paul as a separatist.

5th. They believed that Jerusalem was yet to be the City of God and some of them at least believed in Christ's millennial reign."—Encyclopedia Brittanica.

"The Ebionites held Jesus to have been the Messiah, but they held him to have been only a man and begotten like other men. The Mosaic law they held to be of everlasting obligation upon all believers in Jesus Christ, whether of Jewish or Gentile race. St. Paul they regarded as a traitor and arch apostate for his having declared Mosesism superseded by the law of Christ. Of the Christian sacred books they held the Hebrew Gospel of St. Matthew to be the only one given through Divine inspiration."—The American Encyclopedia.

"The Pharisaic or the older Ebionites rejected the writings of Paul and expressed the greatest hatred of him, insisted upon the observance of the Jewish law. They had a recension of the Gospel of Matthew which they termed the Gospel according to the Hebrews, and which omitted all allusions to Christ's supernatural birth. Ebionism showed life in any force only for a hundred years, never had any considerable influence, lingered till the middle of the 5th century."—Johnson's Universal Encyclopedia.

Such are some of the Scriptural declarations as to who Christ is the Son of, and the accurate historical statements in regard to those who denied that paternity.

Gold Dust.

"God never makes us feel our weakness except to lead us to seek strength from him."

"A good way to help strife is to make the most of those matters concerning which we are in sympathy and can agree."

There were some wrong things in the early church. They are recorded (1) for our warning that we may avoid like errors; (2) for our instruction, that we may know how to get rid of them; (3) for our comfort, that we may not be discouraged when we find imperfections in the modern church."

"To fulfil faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chafing and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with the love of God even the unthankful and evil; and to do this always, and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life."

Carnegie on Drink.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, whose own experience fits him to speak with authority as to the elements that make for a successful business career, says in his book "The Empire of Business"—

The first and most seductive peril, and the destroyer of most young men is the drinking of liquor. I am no temperance lecturer in disguise, but a man who knows and tells you what observation has proved to him; and I say to you that you are more likely to fail in your career from acquiring the habit of drinking liquor, than from any or all the other temptations likely to assail you. You may yield to almost any other temptation and reform—may brace up, and if not recover lost ground, at least remain in the race, and secure and maintain a respectable position. But from the insane thirst for liquor, escape is almost impossible. I have known but few exceptions to this rule.

The King's Message.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

That is surely a welcome message and we should all be very anxious to investigate such an offer as that. If such a proclamation as that was issued by the King of England or by any other rulers of this present age I believe the same would be very quickly investigated.

If our president were to issue the same kind of a message to the people of the United States don't you think there would be thousands of people investigating the conditions of the offer?

Think of the thousands of people who are eagerly absorbing what is told them by their particular party in the newspapers today, and in many cases the best of friends will become the bitterest of enemies all because they hold to some party which to them is right and in a great many cases think as of old, The king can do no evil, so with their party.

The men and the leaders of these parties are looking out for themselves and only for the welfare of their adherents just so far as it benefits those in power.

If the men and women of this and other countries were to pay the same attention and devotion to the King's Message and be added unto his party how much more good it would do them in this temporal life and in the life to come when the King comes to take His throne and reign on this earth.

The people generally are in a stupor in regards to the King's Message and his business, and it seems to me they will continue so until he comes to call his saints to reign with him and then it will be too late.

Let us not be in the class of those who do not pay attention to the message of the King for I am sure if there is any good thing going we want some of it. We notice we are to learn of this King.

He says he is meek and lowly in heart. That is different from we generally learn of kings, so when we begin to investigate we will have some idea of what kind of a person to look for. Just a few incidents to show that, while here on earth before, he was different from the other kings who were then in power.

Matt xiv 14. And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick.

And when it was evening, his disciples came to him, saying this is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals. But Jesus said unto them, they need not depart; give ye them to eat. And they said unto him, we have here but five loaves, and two fishes. He said bring them hither to me, and he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed and brake and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. And they did all eat and were filled. And they took up the fragments that remained twelve baskets full. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children.

The foregoing gives us some idea of the character of Jesus Christ who was proclaimed King of the Jews, and who, as such, though now not reigning as such, has issued the invitations to us to come unto him. We will proceed to find out some of the things he was doing and teaching.

Matt v 23, Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.

Matt ix 35, And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and disease among the people.

Matt xxiv, And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many, and many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many, and because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

It is very evident that Christ did not preach anything whatsoever it might be so as to please the people he was preaching to but he preached the gospel of the kingdom and that his disciples understood its force. They asked what would be the sign of his coming again, and they were, (his apostles) commanded to go into all the world, and preach the gospel of kingdom.

The Jews had the Old Testament Scriptures and those were what Jesus and the apostles had to preach from Acts xxvi: Paul before king Agrippa shows forth where he gets his authority as follows. Therefore having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come.

Acts xxviii, Paul again before the chief of the Jews at Rome testifies as follows. For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you and to speak with you; because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain. And when they had appointed a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence.

It is no uncertain message Paul is here and at all times delivering because he says having obtained help of God he continues to preach and says, "But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any other man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man, for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

We now see that the King's Message is also the same message which is delivered by his servant Paul, and the rest of the apostles and is given to us by Moses and the prophets.

Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

Even as Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness, and the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed so then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. The message thus delivered by our King is the same one which was given by God unto Abraham and the faithful with the addition of the proof that he was and would be the future rightful King of the Jews.

This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent, and this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill

Probably it would be just as well to give a few more testimonials regarding the King we have been hearing about and be certain it is not some one who has no right to it. Gen lxix 15 The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.

Deut xviii 15, The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken.

2 Sam vii 12, And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shall sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

Psa cxxxii 11, The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne.

Isa vii 14, Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.

Isa ix 6 7, For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, the everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth were for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.

Jeremiah xxiii 5-6, Behold the days come saith the Lord, That I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called The Lord our Righteousness.

Jer xxxiii 14-16. Behold, the days come saith the Lord, That I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

From the testimonies given we see that Jesus Christ had the right to deliver the message, he being the future King of Israel, the heir of David and the Son of God. If these same testimonies were given to an audience of a thousand people, very few would realize the importance of them.

Jesus also said, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die.

Jesus saith, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

I am the true vine and my Father is the husbandman. Now ye are clean through the Word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

After Jesus was arisen he said unto them, (the apostles,) Go ye unto all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

Jesus said that, Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have ev-

The Cruelest Wounds.

We can always hurt most those whom we love, and who love us most. Even a little wound is a great wound when inflicted on a loved one. It is perilously easy to pass from the inflicting of little wounds to those that, a year ago, we would have thought too cruel to tolerate. Every bitter word spoken to a dear one makes it probable that the next time the word will be more bitter and the hurt deeper. Our love for another, no matter how great, is easily overmastered by sarcasm, and anger, and even hatred, when once these demons have been permitted to have their own way in our life. So it is in the innermost circles of our most loving relationships that we need to be most on guard. If we are in the bondage of the habit of constantly wounding our dear ones, only God can break that bondage for us. He will do so when we fight with him to make love the guardian of our lips.—S. S. Times.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1 50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

"God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robinson, 366 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1 50 per 100. Brother Robinson does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 309 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10628 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1869. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters—you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be our doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 75 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Fuergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and it to him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her of such both become offended. So stupid in a way—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind, or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Kingdom of the Meek.

Kings choose their soldiers from the strong and sound,
And hurl them forth to battle at command.
Across the centuries, o'er sea and land,
Age after age, the shouts of war resound:
Yet, at the end, the whole wide earth around,
Each empire's empire, once so proudly planned
Melts through Time's fingers like the dropping sand.

But once a King despised, forsaken and crowned
Only with thorns—those in the face of loss
Earth's poor, her weak, her outcast, gave them love.
And sent them forth to conquer in His name
The world that crucified Him, and proclaim
His empire. Lo! pride's vanished thrones above
Behold the ever-living banner of the Cross.

Just to be cheery when things go all wrong;

God is Love. John iv. 8.

The world has had a Buddha, a Confucius, a Mahomet with many other men and systems seeking to shape and control human destinies with one Jesus, the Christ. All but he has sought to accomplish their purposes by conquest with sword or other deadly weapons. The Christ early in his earthly career heralded the message of love with these encouraging words, "I came not to destroy men's lives but to save them." No appeal to man's generosity or cupidity, no seeking fame or honor. "For I came down from heaven not to do my own will but the will of him that sent me." What matchless self-denial and love. Mahomet took the Koran in one hand and the sword in the other and drove his conquests into the very heart of Europe, but was met and defeated by the brave Frenchman Charles Martel and driven back to the Euphrates, and for a time the world's pendulum swung uncertainly, would it be crescent or crown? Mahomet or Christ? God was watching the destinies of the earth and he who said, "As truly as I live the whole earth shall be filled with my glory" could not be baffled by human intrigue; rebellions as the children of earth were and are all will work into his hands in his own good time, not by sword or cannon but by and through God's eternal love for the world. Through his beloved Son he will be able to subdue all things unto himself. He has given us the privilege of being workers together with him, but he requires on our part unyielding faith, unselfish love. A mother's love is wonderful, stronger than prison bars, death is not too much if it will save the life of her child, but this is selfish love. God's love compasses land and sea and turns the tide of man's will, or avarice, or love of honor to the fulfilment of his promises to his children, so vast, so strong, so sublime is his love, and his Word to us is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself. Our hands should work for him, our feet always ready to run at the Master's bidding, our brain ready to think for him.

What is the great sin or sins of our age, commercialism mammon, and lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness. I believe the masses of professed Christians in the world today are trying to serve two masters, making Christianity a secondary matter. Will God accept such dead, formal service? He has offered us untold riches, a most desirable residence in his kingdom, invited us to sup with him at his table, and has asked only one thing in return, viz: Son give me thy heart, he will be satisfied with nothing less than the whole heart. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. O beloved, let us beware, lest being led away with the error of the wicked we fall from our own steadfastness. We are rushed and hurried through this world at such a rate there is scarcely time to stop and pray, or even ask God's blessing on our daily food. God pity us if this spirit of commercialism has got his grip on us. The world's motto is more money, more fame, more pleasures. Shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven? Selfishness rules now instead of love. God's test was by this. Shall all men know that ye have love one for another? How can these much desired results be obtained, not by eternally theorizing. The Church of God has nearly theorized itself into the grave. Theory alone will save no one. From my standpoint the Church today is most in need of individual holiness, without holiness of heart no man shall see the Lord. Let holiness be our watchword, less disputing, more prayer meetings, more social meetings. Exhort one another daily and so much the more as you see the day approaching. The Church today needs more of Christ and less fighting spirit, in short to become thoroughly converted; this will mean a radical change, and when the spirit of the Master will obtain a thorough foothold in our lives, the spirit of discussion over questions to no profit, will be forgotten in the great desire to gain souls for Christ. Paul exhorts us to speak the same things that there be no schisms in the body, and above all things let us have fervent charity among ourselves, when our thoughts are filled with love how easy to overlook faults in others. Love hides a multitude of sins, and without this beautiful grace, though we give our bodies to be burned, and all our goods to feed the poor, without love we are nothing.

May God keep the little flock from the prevailing evils is our prayer.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Jesus' Test of Fellowship.

Jesus says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another." Again he says, "And this is my commandment, That ye love one another as I have loved you." He also says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven.

Love to our brethren and even to our enemies seems therefore to be the condition or basis upon which our relationship to God and our discipleship to Christ is founded.

John also tells us, "We do know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." What brethren? Only those who agree with us on all points of doctrine, and hate and disfellowship and speak evil of all who differ from us? He says, "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."

Paul tells us what is meant by this Christian love. "Love suffereth long and is kind, love enviath not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil."

Many of us seem inclined to "seek our own" pet theories and doctrines and to think and speak evil of the brethren who differ from us. These things are carnal, and should not be, for Paul says, "Are ye not carnal? for wherefore as there is among you envying and strife and divisions (or factions) are ye not carnal and walk as men?" He calls such babes, who should be fed on milk. But who are the brethren whom we should love? Surely all who have believed and obeyed the gospel, put on Christ, yield the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, etc., whether he believe this or that, whether he eateth or eateth not, whether he esteemeth one day above another, or every day alike, and let us not "judge another man's servant for to his own master he standeth or falleth."

"But why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at naught (disfellowship) thy brother, for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." "Let us not therefore judge one another any more, but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." "But follow after the things which make for peace, and the things wherewith one may edify another."

"The faith,—any particular doctrine or theory, not essential to salvation—which thou hast have thou to thyself before God" and not stir up strife and contention and divisions about them. "Wherefore receive ye" —not set at naught—"one another as Christ also received us to the glory of God," remembering that "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

And so in the words of Paul, I say, "Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

Submitted in brotherly love.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 58.

Auntie Willard did not even forget to remind her son when writing, that there were gifts from friends that must be acknowledged, "was there not a book to speak of?" she asked, just as he had closed his letter of Jan. 16, 1905, "Indeed, there is," he replied, and added in postcript, "I have read nothing else to mother since it came and we have noted and read your part of it as checked off in the index. It is more than we can find time and strength for in some time to come. Thank you very much." The book was "The Word of the kingdom" by Bro. John O. Woodruff.

But Rowland was greatly overtaxed with almost the entire care of his mother resting on him, a large drug and telephone business to carry on, with help at times impossible to get, and all this "with the very uncomfortable suspicion, unwillingly admitted by himself, but freely charged by others, that his last two clerks of about a year each (1902 3, and 1903-4) had seriously robbed him." Yet though suffering with silent fear lest he should do wrong to others while he was being left poor indeed, he could arrive at only one conclusion," that the charge was true. "It was a trial indescribable, after the life he had led of love and peace." Forced now "to sacrifice almost all other social family comforts," in caring for his mother, the advantage taken of him by his clerks, seemed cruel beyond the power of telling.

He was now carrying the dear one down in his arms to breakfast and dinner, that she might not feel like an imprisoned bird in a darkened cage from being shut continually in one room with only himself, and calling friends to really cheer her, as his wife was frail, and beside her household cares, was forced to help him in the store, in the absence of other help, save that of a 14 year old boy. It is no wonder that "he had been for some time remembering us and other old friends particularly in prayer as he knelt with the dear mother," feeling all the while that he was not alone, but that while he was praying for them their prayers were ascending for him, and that "their affectionate esteem still had a place in his life."

It was the 4th of June 1905, before Auntie Willard wrote again, this time all by her own self, and in a quite legible hand, so much did her eyesight vary. She says, Dear Roxana, Brother Wince and all my friends:

Your precious letter came in due time and was read to me by my self-denying, patient son, I say to myself, "Is it true that the work of perfection is being perfected on me? So it seems to me, I cannot stand alone nor walk a step nor have I, I think for nine years (nearly ten years), yet never in all that time has his patience failed him. The same mild voice and humble effort so prolonged. Will he not have his reward? Verily he will! His business—a drug-store is in same house in which we all live, but without interference or inconvenience. It was so built, the hall and store being in the front part of the house.

O my sister! as your wonderful letter was being read I was filled with praise unutterable, "Can it be? Can it be?" I said, that just what I have scarce believed and yet so ardently desired, longed and hoped for has at last come to me? Truly God is good to me. His ears have been open to my cry, and he has satisfied my longing heart, in giving me such words whereon to feast my hungry soul.

This is a lovely day; sun bright and cloudless sky, a peaceful mind and hopeful heart, heaven's own gifts through Jesus' precious blood.

I am very sorry to hear that my dear Sister Chaplin—your father's second wife—is spent as it were, in the war that sin has brought into the world, so perfectly do I remember how she looked when I first laid eyes upon her, like one who had just had reached the point of physical perfection, so self-possessed as if every foot of the way had been carefully noted and improved, and made to tell.

I wish she would write to me. I do not care how minute she is. It is the little things that we expect in a letter—just a chimney corner chat. Let me imagine for a moment that here we sit. I am listening Sister Chaplin! Not a word yet do I hear, but soon I shall. Don't keep me too long waiting!

Roxy, do you think I have forgotten to whom I started to write? It was to my own Roxana. Do you love the Bible as much as I do? I think I never saw its loveliness as I now do. It is so deep, and its sweetness who can tell? In time and eternity 'tis with the righteous well.

Roxana, my darling, you spoke of reading to me!!! Were I with you that would be heaven below, to me, O Roxana, had I wings often would you see me lighting down at your door, both ears open and no tire. Roxana, will you read to me in the kingdom of heaven? Bro. Wince, sitting not far off, waiting to relieve you at your signal? But people do not get weary there and so need no night to sleep in. Can you take that in? It puzzles me, yet I know it is true, for it is Inspiration and I set that down as infallible. Yet man, despite sore imperfection, will through Jesus, reach that blessed state. And even I, through him, may creep in somewhere and be given some humble place.

My last letter—or ought to be—you will say, as I am holding my paper in my hand to see. Ever your loving,

E. S. WILLARD.

Will I be able to write such a letter, should I live to be 91? It does not seem possible with 19 years added to my present age.

Her next, and very last letter, July 2, 1905, was scarcely legible and contained only the words, "Dear Roxana, Oh! what a letter! (referring to that same missive of mine of April 2nd to which hers of June 14th was the answer). Son has just read it to me again."

"O Thou in whose presence my soul takes delight,
In whom in affliction I call;
My comfort by day and my song in the night,
My hope, my salvation, my all.

Where dost Thou at noontide resort with Thy sheep,
To feed in the pastures of love?
And why in the valley of death should I weep,
Or alone in the wilderness rove?
Or why should I wander an alien from Thee,
Or cry in the desert for bread?"

She had been praising the Lord all through the breakfast hour and through the worship that followed, and it was then that Rowland re-read my letter that had happily proved such a joy to her. When he had finished she said, "Oh that I could write, and placing the pen in her hand. Rowland held the paper which she wrote those few words. Then she broke out and sang the above hymn, when her strength failed and she had to be placed on the bed, but soon recovered, and got into her chair again.

Rowland "wished very much that he could convey to me the expressions of rejoicing in the Lord, the hand-claps and gestures of adoration and praise," as though the nearly blind eyes, like Stephen's were looking as it were into heaven itself."

Obituary.

Marcellus White Adams was born in Warren County, Virginia, April 2, 1833, and died very suddenly of heart failure, in his home near Byron Center, Michigan, January 19th, 1911, aged 77 years, 9 months and 17 days.

He was married to Fanny Lydia Hamilton, September 18th, 1855.

Twelve children were born to this union, ten of whom are still living. Twenty-one grand-children and ten great grand children, his wife and many other relatives and friends survive him.

Several years ago, while we were holding meetings in their neighborhood, and making their house our home for five weeks, he became very much interested in the truth, but not until a little more than a year ago did he accept the gospel, and take the name of Christ in baptism. We rejoice that even at the eleventh hour Brother Adams accepted the All-saving name. Sister Adams and two of the daughters were obedient to the truth while we were holding meetings there.

The family do not sorrow without hope. They have our sympathy and prayers.

Funeral services were held at the old home, conducted by the writer, using for a text, Psa. cxviii. 9.

May we all be faithful unto death, knowing a crown of life awaits the faithful ones.

M. A. WOODWARD.

Clara J. McCrodan, the fifth child and daughter of William and Frances McCrodan was born January 7th, 1886, and died January 24th, 1911.

At sixteen years of age, believing the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, she was baptized by Elder B. W. Woodward, into the life-saving name, believing in his personal return to this earth, and the restoration of all things spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, and Christ's glorious reign on the earth until all enemies are destroyed, including the last enemy, death.

She is survived by her parents, six sisters and one brother and other relatives.

The above obituary was handed me by Brother McCrodan. Brother and Sister McCrodan have the sympathy of the household of faith throughout Michigan, for all knew of Sister Clara's illness and brave fight for life. All that love and money could do was done to bring again the bloom of health to her beautiful face, but to no purpose, the destroyer did his work and she fell asleep with no fear of death.

At her request no sermon was given. A prayer by Brother F. V. Blakely, and the reading of the entire 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians, with a few remarks by the writer, and beneath a canopy of God's beautiful flowers, mute but fragrant, and lovely tokens of many friends, she was carried from the old home and laid near her sister Eliza, who fell asleep several years ago, both now waiting for the Master's return.

M. A. WOODWARD.

Our beloved Sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, after a short illness fell asleep in Jesus at the home of her daughter in Dixon, Illinois, Monday, January 25, 1911. Sister Anderson, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Biddle, was born in Williamsburg, Pa., in June, 1832, and at the time of her death had reached the advanced age of seventy-eight years and seven months. Her marriage to Brother John W. Anderson took place in Blair County Pa., where they resided for a few years and then removed to Dixon, Illinois, where they remained until death claimed them. The husband was stricken by the arch-enemy Jan. 2, 1893. Three sons and two daughters preceded them to the "Land of Shadows," while one son, William, and a daughter, Mrs. Edith Miller, both of whom are residents of Dixon, survive them.

Under the ministration of Brother H. V. Reed, Sister Anderson embraced the gospel and united with the Church of God in Christ Jesus, in the early sixties, and has ever remained a devoted and consistent member.

During her long experience she has passed through many severe and soul-testing trials; but in the school of adversity she learned patience, goodness and faith, all of which have manifested their presence throughout her life, and made her very dear to her family, to her Church and to the neighborhood in which she lived. We may rest assured that the Master's voice will call her forth to life and glory when he comes.

The writer spoke words of comfort founded upon the Blessed Hope of the soon coming Christ and the glorious resurrection to life everlasting.

G. ELDRED MARSH.

Susannah Pollard was born July 29, 1819, in Rushville, Indiana, and died January 23, 1911, having lived 91 years, 5 months and 24 days.

February 25, 1837 she was married to James H. Logan in Marshall Co., Indiana. Of the seven sons and five daughters who have called her mother, three remain—William D. Logan of Kansas, Thomas Logan of Chicago and Mrs. Sarah McCrory of Elmwood, Nebraska. Her son W. D. Logan with whom she lived for 24 years, arrived in time to see his mother before she passed away.

During the last six years of her life she made her home with her daughter Mrs. McCrory, at Elmwood. In a room where roses were kept blooming the aged mother received every care a loving daughter could bestow.

Mrs. Logan's married life was spent in the old home in Marshall County, Indiana, until the death of her husband February 24, 1872, when a few years later she came west to live with her children. Besides the children who survive her, one sister, Mrs. W. D. Thompson, still lives at Plymouth, Indiana.

She united with the Church of Christ when twenty-three years of age, and as long as she was able to read the study of the Bible was her greatest comfort and delight.

Funeral services were held at the Christian Church Wednesday afternoon. The flowers were many and beautiful, but not more beautiful than the face that rested so peacefully among them. Beautiful in life, beautiful in death, but far more beautiful will she be in the glorious resurrection morn. Flowers seem to be the best emblem we have to express our love, for we wreathe them around the cradle, the marriage alter and the tomb. Thus would we leave her, and in memory keep her, as sweetly reposing among the beautiful and fragrant flowers.—Elmwood, Nebraska, Leader-Echo.

Success.

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express; who has always looked for the best in others; whose life was an inspiration; whose memory a benediction.—Selected by Chas. E. Anderson.

Let us begin to love the truth, to fill our mind and life with the strong white light of sincerity and sterling honesty. Let us love the truth so strongly that there will develop within us, without our conscious effort, an ever-present horror of a lie.—William G. Jordan.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 8, 1911. NUMBER 6.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Editor Restitution:

The Church of God at Brush Creek, Ohio, has again been privileged to enjoy another series of meetings conducted by Brother R. G. Huggins. The meetings began January 14, and continued over the 22. Although the weather was bad the attendance was good and the attention excellent.

Brother Huggins is a fine speaker, and certainly can rightly divide the Word of God.

On Sunday morning we gathered at the water's edge, Brush Creek, where Miss Florence Westfall, daughter of Brother and Sister N. S. Westfall, put on the all-saving name of Christ in baptism, to rise and walk in newness of life. May she ever be faithful till Jesus the Life Giver comes.

We believe there was seed sown that will bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God, and may his blessing rest on all who are proclaiming the Word of God, and may all prove faithful till Jesus comes.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to report a meeting held in the community of Scottsburg, Ind. by Brother Joseph Williams. This was the first time this people had ever heard the gospel, and the Abrahamic faith and the things concerning the name of the Lord Jesus Christ preached. Brother Williams opened meeting on the night of January 21, and in all gave nine sermons. These are the subjects touched upon: The divine mirror, the threefold trial, Sanctification, Salvation, forgiveness of sins, the crucifixion of self, what church shall I join, the reign of Christ, the inheritance on the earth.

There never was such order and intense interest taken in this community, as it was all new to this people. Unfortunately Brother Williams was called home to preach a funeral. All of the people who heard him are anxious for his return. We hope he will be spared to come again, as we believe he will do a great good here for the Lord and his cause.

Practical Christianity.

It is quite important to have a good sound theory, but theory void of practice seems to be lacking a very vital part.

A story is told of a chaplin in the army, who was going over the field after a battle had taken place. He came to a wounded soldier lying on the ground: stopping, he said, "Would you like to have me read you something from the Bible?" The wounded man replied, "I am so thirsty I would rather have a drink of water now." The water was quickly brought, and the poor suffering man drank. Then he said, "Could you raise my head a little higher?" The chaplin at once took off his overcoat, rolled it up for a pillow and placed it beneath the man's head. "I am so cold," moaned the sufferer. The chaplain took off his other coat spreading it over him. As he did so the poor suffering man looked up and said, "For the Lord's sake if there is anything in that book which will make a man do for another what you have done for me, let me hear it." A practical Christianity won that man's heart. He could listen to the reading of the Bible and know the reader was acquainted with its teachings.

If we would have men fall in love with the Bible and its author, then let us live out its practical teachings in every day life. Words may sometimes seem empty, but a kind act is always full of meaning.—H. A. Mitchell.

Sunday School Lesson.

FEBRUARY 19, 1911.

Elijah's Flight and Return. 1 Kings xviii. 41 to xix. 21.

Golden Text—"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." Isaiah xl. 31.

This lesson is directly following that of last week. After the sacrifice prepared by Elijah had been consumed by the fire that came from God, and the people had acknowledged that the Lord was God, then the false prophets of Baal who had tried all day and failed to get their heathen god to answer, were apprehended at command of Elijah and slain.

Then came the rain watering the land and relieving the distress of the people and flocks. Elijah warned Ahab that the rain was coming, and Ahab raced with his chariot to get to Jezreel before the rain should stop him. Elijah girded himself and ran all the way ahead of the chariot to the gate of the palace. However he did not enter to put himself in the power of his enemy, for when Ahab told Jezebel what had happened, and of the slaughter of her false prophets, instead of her acknowledging the hand of the only true God, she was scornful at the line, and sent word to Elijah that the next day she would have him killed even as her prophets had been.

Hearing of this threat, Elijah sought safety in flight, and taking his servant he started south and went into the kingdom of Judah till he reached Beersheba, which is about 100 miles from Jezreel. Here he left his servant and went a day's journey into the wilderness alone. He wished to be by himself, as Jesus was in his trouble in Gethsemane. No other person could exactly understand the mind of this man, and he wished to be all alone. Here he lay down under a juniper tree, and as he thought the situation over, it seemed that his work was done, the false gods were still in Israel to be worshipped. He had made the test with their prophets and had received answer from God, and the people at the time were on his side. But the wicked Jezebel still held her place, and had her servants with power to take his life if he was there. It looked to him that he was all alone, and he wished that he might die, as had his fathers, and be at rest.

He slept; and an angel touched him and he awakened, and the angel told him to eat, and he saw food set before him. Again he lay down and slept, and again the angel wakened him, and told him to eat, as his strength was not yet sufficient for the journey he was to take. He arose and partook of the food, and had strength for a journey of forty days, as the Lord directed.

He went to the Mount of God, to Horeb, where the law had been given to Moses, and there we find him living in a cave, till the voice of the Lord again spoke to him saying "What doest thou here, Elijah?" He made reply that he had been very jealous for the Lord, his work had been done, but the children of Israel had forsaken the covenant, had destroyed the altars of God, and slain his prophets, and now sought to kill him, he being all that was left. While Elijah was in hiding during the time of the famine, he had been learning lessons that would fit him for his work, and now the Lord would show him further of his power. He had Elijah go out and stand upon the mount, and the Lord passed by, and a great wind storm came and the rocks were broken by its force, but Elijah was made to understand that the Lord was not in the wind. Then came an earthquake, and that was followed by fire, but Elijah saw that the Lord was not in either of these great and awful manifestations.

There was deep silence, then came a still small voice, and Elijah was made to see that here indeed was God, and he hid his face. Again the voice came and said "What doest thou here, Elijah?" Again does Elijah tell of his zeal and work for God, but to so little purpose, in that the children of Israel were in idolatry, and he was all there was left, the other servants of God were slain, and he himself sought that they might kill him also.

The Lord had a further work for Elijah, so he directed him that he go and anoint Hazael to be king over Syria, Jehu to be king over Israel, and Elisha to be a prophet to take up his work when he shall lay it down. These three agents were to be used in punishing those wicked ones who caused trouble to God's people, and Elijah was to have his part in that work. God's plan and purpose was not to end in failure, and there were besides Elijah 7000 who had not bowed their knee to Baal, or kissed the idolatrous images of Jezebel.

To each one of us comes the question that was asked of Elijah, "What doest thou here?" This question may be asked with emphasis on different words: What doest thou HERE? Is this place you are in the proper one for you? Can you do good work for God in the sphere you have chosen to work? What DOEST thou here? Are you doing all that you should be doing? Is your work just what it should be? What doest THOU here? Did you formerly serve God in some other way, and have you chosen of your own accord to labor in another way of your own devising? Are you in this new capacity doing more and being of more service to God? Did your ambition take you out of one place and put you in another that crowded out some other worker, and left the place you had occupied vacant? Ask yourself the question with emphasis on each word, and see if you are in your right place, doing your proper work.

In this lesson we have Elijah discouraged, and if we look over the condition he was in we might ask Was it right for him to be so discouraged? Is it right to get the "blues" and give up all effort? God arouses Elijah, and gets him out of his despondency by giving him something to do. If when we feel a fit of discouragement coming on, we would seek out some one who really has cause for despondency, and take some of their burdens and carry them, help some one else, stop thinking of self, and being selfish, be of use to our fellows, we will be able to keep off many a blue time that otherwise will get us into the slough of despair.

The Golden Text is well worth a few moment's consideration. A period when we can calmly wait before the Lord—consider the bearing of our lives on his cause—wait in silence and reverence before him. This can only result in good to us, and as we wait for his bidding our strength will be renewed, and we can go forth with better efforts for his cause. These words are more than medicine. Renewal of strength banishes despair and despondency.

Reward.

That there is a reward awaiting the true child of God is made very plain in his Word. At the very cradle of creation Abraham was encouraged in obeying the voice of God with these words: For because thou hast done this and hast not withheld thy son, that in blessing I will bless thee..... And in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice, a reward for obedience, not only to Abraham but all the nations of the earth were to be benefitted by that obedience Daniel passed through many very severe trials, and was rewarded with these words: But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days. When Peter became somewhat impatient to know what his reward was to be for leaving all to follow Jesus, the answer was, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. We notice one thing in each of these promises, not one was made for the death bed exaltation, not a reward promised as soon as we were dead, no thought of spending an eternity in happiness in heaven, but a blessing, which in Christ's own words, is life eternal. "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life," when will this life come? The Christ says, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Then works count some in this reward. We cannot accept Christ without we work in accordance to his revealed plans, viz: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved—this is the first condition of salvation, believing, accepting, taking his name in baptism. Then begins the actual work. We need not start out with the hope in this age of having fair sailing all the time. Paul said it was through much tribulation they entered the kingdom, but these trials, sometimes fiery trials, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, and the reward is sure. God hath promised it, and his Word is good. Only to be true, to be overcomers, assures for us the reward of life in the kingdom with Christ as ruler.

Yours striving for eternal life.

The Nations and Air-ships.

I think that Brother Underwood's repeated calls to the brethren for articles and arguments relating to the signs of the times, and the events that are transpiring so rapidly, would be beneficial to us as a Bible loving people, or are we in the condition when it is being fulfilled "But if that evil servant shall say in his heart My Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken: the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of," Is such made "ruler over his goods?" No, sadly different. "And shall cut him asunder and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matthew xxiv. 48. I believe this is a graphic picture of passing events.

Some are wanting their own way much as Israel wanted a king, but some are still working with two things that are eminently certain—the coming of death, or of Christ. If we would all give close study to the last named event, we might well wonder that we have not seen more concerning the preparations that are making for human slaughter.

Do you know brethren, what a strain is being made not only on Yankee inventive genius, but on the ability of all the nations to get ready for battle, not only in the seas but in the clouds. It will as yet by many be thought strange, but glorious and awful, if we look heavenward some day, and see the fulfillment of Joel as repeated by Peter, "And I saw wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood and fire and vapor of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come." See Rev. xiii. where the image of the ten horned beast is, established by the wonders of the two horned beast, so that he maketh fire to come down from heaven on the earth, in the sight of men." We may begin to guess what two powers this two horned beast will consist of. It is not safe to begin to guess out the riddle of a prophecy. Nevertheless, on account of their characteristics, France and Russia may by alliance yet accomplish the fulfillment of that wonderful event of war so nearly upon us.

It was France that established the Dragonic or heathen infidel power.

It was France that made the first great strides toward preparing the ships of the air for destruction more cruel than the guillotine—her guillotine of the Dragonic revolution.

It is Russia that has alone the characteristics and the religion of the beast with ten horns. Her Emperor is the pope of eastern Rome in her combined with France we may find the 2 horned dragon that will form the image of the beast. I have never been able to entertain the idea for a moment of the Seventh Day folks, that the two horned beast represented the United States and is afterwards transformed into a ten horned power, and becomes a persecutor to death of those that observe the first day in celebration of Christ's resurrection.

I read from The Arizona Republican of Jan. 19th a news sketch that sent my blood surging, because it proved how rapidly the preparation for closing the events of this age are being made. I wish you could read it and could rejoice with me over the prospect of lasting peace, and good will on earth; after the nations have drunk blood till they have grown sick of blood "the sun will be darkened" by air ships and the moon turned into blood, before the coming of the great and notable day of the Lord!

The San Francisco News amounts to this, A United States naval squadron is at San Francisco, "An aeroplane feat was performed without a hitch," Eugene Ely sailed out to the fleet, and saluted each war ship, as he circled over them and landed on the cruiser Pennsylvania; an hour later he arose from the deck and landed back on mainland. Even this much of this report means more than the thoughtless may see. It means "blood and fire and vapor of smoke;" when the nations get to fighting as they are most rapidly preparing to do. It means the burning of cities and of ships by the air ships. It means that beings in human form will be transformed into flying devils as they speed on their way on the wings of destruction. I only hope to see the fulfilment of my prediction, because if so, you and I may "lift up our heads and rejoice for our redemption draweth nigh" and the Prince of life and peace will be at hand; and the graves flung open. The Revelator has not written the terrors of the last days of the age in vain, nor the glory of the morning. Let us get close to the Book, and stay with "our only creed" while we stay; and watch for what is coming; for "every man that has this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Obituary.

Brother Lyman Adams was born in Cincinatus, Cortland Co. New York, July 9, 1825, and died at his home in Dixon, Ill., January 29, 1911, aged 85 years, 6 months, and 20 days. He remained at the place of his birth until about seventeen years of age, when he removed with his parents to Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y., where he continued to reside until after his marriage to Esther B Thatcher, which occurred at Owego, December 28, 1851. In 1875 they came to Dixon, Illinois where they have since made their home. His wife preceded him in death about two and one-half years. He leaves to mourn his loss one brother, and three children, one son dying in infancy. The children now living are Edwin, Ernest A and Anna L. Adams.

In his death Dixon loses not only one of its oldest residents but a citizen whose reputation for the fifty six years he lived there was without spot. He made many friends by his sterling honesty, and though they have largely gone before him to the silence of the tomb, those who remain will sincerely feel his loss.

Brother Adams was baptized into the saving name of the Son of God August 17, 1903, by Elder S. J. Lindsay, and has ever remained faithful to the Master whom he loved. He was a most devoted student of the Bible, and especially during his declining years meditation on the blessed truths it contains was his greatest source of delight. The resurrection of the dead was one of his favorite themes, and one of which he never tired of speaking. Only three days before his death the writer held a most pleasant conversation with Brother Adams on the subject, at which time he expressed his firm faith in the literal reality of that glorious and much to be desired event.

The funeral, which was largely attended, was conducted from his late residence in Dixon February 1st, and the writer spoke in part as follows.

Once in a while the cruel and relentless hand of death, the arch-enemy of humanity, has been stretched forth to snatch from our fireside one whom we love. It was ever thus. For six thousand years the grim reaper has garnered a harvest of human lives.

"By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom v 12.

One man sinned! And all the vast millions of humanity that have lived from that day to this have reaped the reward! One man sinned! And sin-ning wrecked the happiness of the race! One man sinned! And for the six succeeding millenniums the entire earth has been bathed in tears of sorrow, and the ground itself made sacred with countless graves.

"Death reigned from Adam to Moses", we read; and then from Moses to Christ. Meeting his Master in Person of the only begotten Son of God, Death staggered back, dismayed but not as yet defeated, and swept onward through the Christian centuries, piercing with his blood stained sword the hearts of all mankind.

Thou hast well said: O preacher of Israel, that "The living know that they shall die"; for it is knowledge gained by long and heart-breaking experience. All men know that they must die; but that does not rob the grave of its terrors or take from death its sting. For, while we long for quietude and peace, we shrink back in horror from the black mystery of Death. Or in the language of Lord Byron:

"A sleep without dreams, after a rough day
Of toil, is what we covet most, and yet
How clay shrinks back from more quiescent clay."

And the dread of the ages is forcefully expressed by Shakespeare as follows:

"Death is a fearful thing.
The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of Death!"

It is the mystery, the unknown, of which we are afraid! What is Death? A friend? Ah no! Death is the greatest and most relentless enemy that humanity must encounter, but the promise is recorded that it shall not be forever, for "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," after which "There shall be no more Death!" O blessed promise of a merciful God! What is death? Death is the very antithesis of life; it is the ending of existence; the termination of consciousness; the total cutting off of the individual from all realization of his environment. And such is death from a Scriptural standpoint; for "the dead know not anything.....also their love and their hatred, and their envy are now perished.....For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

But though death means the extinction of conscious existence it does not of necessity follow that "death ends all". For in the language of the great apostle, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Can not he who form'd us and gave us life in the beginning restore that which has been taken away, and grant unto his children life after death, by a resurrection from the dead? Ah, yes! And that is the plan for all those who believe the glad some news he has for our world. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And the Master said "I come that ye may have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." What a blessed Redeemer! He gave his precious blood upon the tree that he might thereby purchase for us an endless existence. He died that we might live!

And now we look forward with prayerful anticipations to his glorious return, when he shall accomplish in its fulness the will of his heavenly Father. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." Such was the blessed hope, the steadfast faith, the inspiring vision that sustained and comforted our brother as he took the last faltering steps in the journey of life. And we are fully persuaded that he will soon awake in the likeness of his divine Master, and be one of the brightly shining jewels in the coronation crown of the King of kings!

What Home is.

A London paper offered a prize for the best definition of a home. About five thousand answers were given. Some were the following:—

A world of strife shut out, a world of love shut in."

Home is the blossom of which heaven is the fruit.

Where you are treated best and grumble most.

The father's kingdom, the children's paradise, the mother's world.

The best place for a man after business hours.

The place where the great are sometimes small, and the small are often great.

Home is the coziest, kindliest, sweetest place in all the world; the scene of our purest earthly joys and deepest sorrow.

The only spot on earth where the faults and failings of fallen humanity are hidden under the mantle of charity.

A little hollow scooped out of the windy hill of the world, where we can be shielded from its cares and annoyances.

A hive in which, like the industrious bee, youth garners the sweets and memories of life for age to meditate and feed upon.

An abode in which the inmate, the superior being called man, can pay back at night, with fifty per cent interest, every annoyance that has met him in business during the day.

That source of comfort which youth does not fully appreciate, which the young men and maidens lovingly desire, which the middle-aged generally possess, which the old rightly value.

Neglect.

Simply go on as you have begun—simply "neglect the great salvation"—and you will make your everlasting ruin sure.

Many faithless, foolish parents have stood by the grave of a child which they dug with their own hands. How? Did they administer slow poison, or strike an assassin-knife through the young heart? No; but they killed their child just as surely, by simple neglect of the first laws of health.

Many a father, too, has wrung his hands in agony before the prison-cell which held a ruined son, or over a letter which told him of a son's disgrace, and on whose very hands rested the guilt of that boy's ruin. Why? Had they led that boy into Sabbath-breaking, or theft, or profligacy? No; but they had left the youth alone, and left him to rush into them unrestrained. Neglect was the boy's ruin. There is no need that the man in a skiff amid Niagara's rapids should row toward the cataract; resting on his oars is quite enough to send him over the awful verge.—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

The copy for this department of THE RESTITUTION is supplied by Brother Robert G. Huggins, of 10623 Lee Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Please send all letters and communications intended for this section direct to him, and save delay.

Suffering gives strength to sympathy.

Two things well considered would prevent many disputes. First, to have it ascertained whether we are not quarreling about terms, rather than things; and secondly, to decide whether that on which we differ is worth contending for.

"The prophet Daniel," a nicely bound volume of thirteen sermons on the book of Daniel, by Bro. George Eldridge, of Auckland, N. Z. 186 pages, price 2 s 6 d in American money, 62 cents. To be had of the publisher, E. Phipps, 31 High St., Auckland, N. Z. From a literary point of view the book is excellent. The work is based upon the theory that Daniel's prophecies are future, particularly that part of them that relates to the man of sin. While not sharing the writer's views on this point, we have enjoyed reading his book, for the easy and elegant manner of his address, and the development of many precious prophetic truths. No student prophecy should neglect getting a copy of this excellent work on the prophetic truths and dates of Daniel.

A Berean writing from Blair, Neb. says: "Bro. Adams is here holding meeting. He gave a lecture last night at the Christian Church on The Rebuilding of Solomon's temple. He will stay over Sunday. Arthur White and his wife and Howard Appleby came out for baptism. Perhaps more will come out. They are going to join our Berean class too I guess."

Another Berean of Nebraska writes as follows: "Dear Brother Huggins, I have just finished the answers to my lessons. You certainly intend for the idea of the mortality of man and his unconscious condition in death to be firmly fixed in our minds, and I am glad of it. I know of one reader of THE RESTITUTION who believes in the mortality of man, but he seems to think it unnecessary to lay any stress upon it. He belongs to the Christian Church. He conducts a Bible class in normal. I wish an article could be printed in THE RESTITUTION setting forth clearly and fairly the necessity of belief in mortality of man, and also the necessity of teaching it. I believe it would be doing the class as well as him good. If it is not asking too much of you and you think it would be all right, will you see that it is done? I would do it myself if I were capable, but I know I am not at present." Come, brethren, get your pens out and get busy.

River Euphrates.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates, and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." Revelations xvi. 12.

I am well aware of the usual interpretation that is put on the above text, and probably there may be something in what may be called the metaphorical interpretation, but what I am going to call attention to is a very strange natural phenomenon, and some other things in the natural or physical world that may shed a light on spiritual things.

Sometimes there are more than one meaning to a given statement in the Holy Scriptures, as elsewhere. For instance in reading that magnificent 42d chapter of Isaiah, one would naturally suppose that the writer referred to the spiritual blindness of Israel (vs. 18-19—which he does too) nevertheless when John sent to Jesus for a proof of his mission, he sent back, as evidence, his power to open the blind eyes and deaf ears in a literal and physical sense. In like manner we all agree that the Revelation to John is much, or all, more or less figurative, but if we are on the watch as we ought to be, we will carefully look and listen for the things in the actual world that may throw light on the subject.

I have just concluded reading a book by one David Fraser, a Scotch journalist, who made this record of a journey along the route of the proposed Bagdad railway, an enterprise by the way on which the eyes of all nations are riveted at present. The book, entitled 'Short Cut to India," is an interesting one even from a natural point of view, but from the prophetic and spiritual it is intensely so, although the writer himself has no such idea.

For instance, he informs us that both the Euphrates and the Tigris have practically "dried up," and it has happened somehow in this way: For the space of about 150 miles along both streams, the water leaves the ancient course and percolates all over the land, at the end of which space, Mr. Fraser tells us, "The recovery happens all at once, for the swamps on either side banks covering thousands of square miles suddenly fall toward the Tigris and empty their waters back into the stream." "The loss on the way by evaporation and absorption has been so enormous the lower river is never again anything but a fraction of what it was."

Again he says "At present practically the whole of the Euphrates deserts its own bed at this point (Hyndieh canal) and flows into a region of swamps and lakes that have gradually increased in recent years, and permanently flooded good ground previously cultivated in one degree and valuable as pasture land."

Of course our readers will understand that this is the same mighty stream that at one time was a vast centre of the world's commerce, as London is today, and the stream itself magnificently mightier than the muddy little Thames. Yet although in the very centre of commerce still, between the three vast continents of Europe, Asia and Africa, there is only one company, Lynch Brothers, with three little steamers, that have a "firman" from the Turkish government to navigate the stream, and a further peculiarity of the business is that although the Lynch Bros. are Frenchmen the "firman" was issued to the British government, and although the same "firman" gives the right only to navigate the Euphrates, the little steam craft can only navigate the Tigris. "A truly Turkish state of affairs" Mr. Fraser remarks.

The difficulties of navigation are also described and illustrated with good photographs. There are great curves or beads in the river, as it winds its way over the marshes. They call these "Devil's elbows," and at any one of the loops they may be met with a volley from the enterprising brigands who infest the vast plains, so that a troop of Turkish sharpshooters has to accompany the boat on its trips, and when ever they come to a place where there might be an attack, the soldier escort kneel behind the piles of cargo and sight along the rifles—photos shown.

Furthermore those devil's elbows have a grievance in another way, as the following quotation will serve to illustrate. "Here are several devil's elbows that are extremely hard of navigation. The river at one of these places doubles on itself almost completely, the breadth at the turn being no more than fifty yards. Round this corner has to pass a vessel nearly 300 feet long. The task is accomplished by jamming her bow into one bank and her stern into the other. There being but a few inches of water under the keel, the stream finds itself completely blocked, and can only proceed by pushing the obstruction forward. The banks all the way for 500 miles are stoneless mud, else such tactics would be out of the question." Again he remarks "At flood time it is possible to load a steamer up to four foot draft, but at low water two and one half feet is the maximum safe draft."

Then the next question that arises is What has the drying up of the Euphrates to do with the "way of the kings of the east?" Simply this, that for the needs of modern commerce this ancient route is no longer of any avail—a two and a half foot draft is not to be thought of as a highway, and so there is another strange thing happening in this connection—the project of the so-called Bagdad railway. It would be useless to try and give all the many and strange complications that are connected with this affair. Suffice it to say that the Germans have the firman. Turkey has agreed to pay interest on the capital pay or not. That there is no prospect that under present conditions it can pay, and at present it is laid as far as Konieh—ancient Iconium—where Paul was taken for Mercury.

Now this road when complete will connect at Aleppo with the road that runs through Palestine to Arabia, most of which is already built, if not all of it. This will connect up with Egypt and the "Cape to Cairo" system. Already it connects with Constantinople, and all the lines of traffic that meet there, and at its easterly end will connect with Persia and India through the Persian gulf. At present the Russian systems that ramify throughout all northern Asia come within 200 miles of where the line will pass.

Another interesting thing in connection with this subject is that this same route always has been "the way of the kings of the east." Owing to the peculiar geographical conformation of the land there is only this one land route available to connect Asia and Europe anywhere in this locality. Mr. Fraser says on this point "Xenophon had travelled this very ground with Cyrus. Alexander had passed it. St. Paul had used it." ....."The village near by was built by Marcus Aurelius. Far back into the far depths of ancient history this very road had been the grand route between the Orient and Europe. Hittites, Assyrians and Greeks had used it. Romans, Byzantines, Persians, Moguls, Crusaders, Estrogul the founder of the Turkish empire, and a long line of conquerors down to the Ibrahim Pasha of half a century ago, had passed and repassed with their armies thee captives and spoils."....."Then not far below the plateau down a ravine of the most exquisite beauty, we came to the Cilician gates. The famous Pylae Cilicia passed by Cyrus the younger, Alexander the Great, Cicero, Haroun al Rashid, and a host of others classic in history. The gates are a deep fissure in a mass of rock that blocks the ravine. The scouring of a small river and the handiwork of man have widened the fissure sufficiently to hold a fine road.....On a rock in the middle of the stream is an inscription clear as upon the first day it was carved, cut by the order of Marcus Aurelius. At every step in this wonderful land one encounters some remnant of the mighty past, some sign of the great ones of other days."

Now I suppose some folks will be apt to say that the building of a railroad is rather a small business to be mentioned in a special revelation from God and his Christ. It might seem so from some points of view, but as we observe the strained relations that are obtaining in this little matter between England, Germany, Russia and Turkey, it will be seen that the turning point of the history that is to be, is pretty well involved in this little streak of steel that is about to clear a path to Persia, India, China and Japan.

I know that certain commentators have very glibly concluded in their own way and to their own satisfaction that the old Roman empire is the whole field of prophetic operation, but I opine that this is a very short sighted view, and year by year as we are passing out into a broader field of national politics the fallacy of this antiquated inference will be more and more apparent. Anyhow we can but watch and may be we will be able to say more later.

Nebraska Berean Lesson. No. 4.

THE NATURE OF MAN AND HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

I. THE NATURE OF MAN.

I. The word "immortal" occurs but once in our Bible. 1 Tim. i. 17. What does the word mean, and to whom is it applied?

II. The word "immortality" occurs five time. Rom. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54; 1 Tim. vi. 16; 2 Tim. i. 10. Explain each text in order, and show singly and collectively that they teach the present mortality of man.

III. Show by a text in Rom. 1st chapter that man is "corruptible" in contrast with God who is "uncorruptible." With what "Creeping things" does the text class "corruptible man?"

IV. Since corruptible seed can only produce corruptible men, and since corruptible men cannot inherit incorruption (1 Cor. xv. 50.) how can corruptible men become incorruptible? 1 Pet. i. 22-25.

II. HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

1. Show by a text in 2 Chron. 34th chapter that King Josiah was unconscious of the evil which came upon his subjects after his death.

II. Prove by a text in Isa. 63rd chapter that when that chapter was written Abraham was unconscious of his children, the Israelites.

III. Prove by Gal. 14th chapter that when a father is dead he is unconscious of the good or ill that may befall his children; that they can "come to honor" or "be brought low," and he will have no knowledge of their weal or woe.

IV. A man in death may be unconscious of what transpires on earth and yet not be unconscious of things elsewhere. He may (like the living) be unconscious of some things and conscious of others. To show that man is wholly unconscious prove that when dead he is unconscious of God and is powerless to praise him. Psa. vi. exv; Isa. xxxviii.

V. And that the extent of his unconsciousness is entire. Eccl. ix.

ANSWERS.

PART I. THE NATURE OF MAN.

I. Immortal means everlasting, imperishable, not capable of dying. In 1 Tim. i. 17, I think immortal applies to the only true and living God. There is a reference in Rom. xvi. 27, "To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ forever."

II. Rom. ii. 7. If you continue in well doing and seek for immortality, (as in this life you must be mortal, for you wouldn't seek for immortality and eternal life. You wouldn't look for something that you already have.

Cor. xv. 53, 54. The corruptible put on incorruption, and mortal puts on immortality, then death has no power and you have gained eternal life.

1 Tim. vi. 16. If only the King of kings and Lord of lords have immortality then man cannot have immortality.

2 Tim. i. 10. It showeth it we could not have immortal life, for our Savior Jesus Christ abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

From these references man must be a mortal being instead of immortal. How could you obtain immortality if you have it now or change from corruption to incorruption? You would have no fear of death for you would have the power of living forever.

III. In Rom. i. 23, God is spoken of as the only incorruptible while man is corruptible like birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things.

V. 1 Cor. xv. 50. If flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God nor corruption inherit incorruption then all will be changed at the resurrection and raised incorruptible.

PART II. HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

1. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 28. Josiah is to be gathered to the grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see the evil brought upon that place. This shows that one is not conscious after death.

II. Isa. lxiii. 16. "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not." This shows that Abraham was unconscious after death. That he was unconscious of the Israelites.

III. Job xiv. 21. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." This text shows plainly that the dead know not anything.

IV. Psa. vi. 5 "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

Psa. cxv. 17. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

Isa. xxxviii. 18. "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth."

These passages all show that man after death hasn't the least consciousness of anything.

V. Eccl. ix. 5, 10. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest."

This ought to be plain enough to any one that the extent of unconsciousness is entire.

MINNIE STADDEN.

PART I. THE NATURE OF MAN.

1. The word immortal means everlasting, without death, and applies to God.

II. (a) In Rom. ii. 7, we find that they who continue in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. If man is seeking for immortality, he surely would not be seeking for something he now had. Therefore, man must be mortal.

(b) 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54, in speaking of the present state of man, it says the mortal man, or man as he is today must put on immortality and by so doing shall not perish, but have everlasting states the condition the body must be in to have immortality. (2 Cor. v. 4.) In the 54th verse, when this body shall have been made incorruptible and put on immortality, there shall be no more death.

(c) In 1 Tim. vi. 16, we find immortality again refers to God.

(d) In 2 Tim. vi. 16, we find that through Jesus Christ only we are able to gain immortality, and by his death and resurrection we also have hope of being resurrected. (To eternal life.—EDITOR.)

These texts go to show that man has not immortality at this present day, and that it cannot be obtained other than by faith in the Scriptures.

III. In Rom. i. 23, we find the incorruptibility of God contrasted with corruptible man. We also find that man is classed with birds, four-footed beasts and creeping things.

IV. In 1 Cor. xv. 50, we find that corruptible men do not inherit incorruption. In 1 Peter i. 22, 25, we find that to become incorruptible man must be born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, and when he is born again of incorruptible seed he puts on immortality.

PART II. HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

I. In 2 Cor. xxxiv. 28, we find that King Josiah was gathered to his grave in peace and that his eyes shall not see the evil that came upon his people after death.

II. In Isa. lviii. 16, we find that Abraham was unconscious of his children, the Israelites.

III. Job xiv. 21, states that when a father is dead, his sons may come to honor and that they may be brought low, and he will be unconscious of it.

IV. Psa. vi. 5, states that in death there is no remembrance and that in the grave there is no one to give thanks to God.

Psa. cxv. 17, reads, The dead praise not the Lord neither do any that go down in silence.

Isa. xxxviii. 18, says that we in death cannot praise and celebrate God.

V. Eccl ix. 5, states that the dead know not anything, which proves that their unconsciousness is entire.

HAL HARLAN.

PART I. THE NATURE OF MAN.

I. Immortal means undying, lasting forever. Immortal refers to God.

II. Rom. ii. 7. If man had immortality he would not seek it.

1 Cor. xv. 53-54. "This corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality," and when this is done then death is swallowed up in victory.

1 Tim. vi. 16. "God only hath immortality."

2 Tim. i. 10. Man can obtain immortality through Jesus Christ by believing the gospel.

III. Rom. i. 23. "And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts and creeping things.

IV. 1 Peter i. 23. Man becomes incorruptible by being born of incorruptible seed.

PART II. HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

I. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 28. "Thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eye see all the evil that I will bring upon this place and upon the inhabitants of the same."

II. Isa. lxiii. "Though Abraham be ignorant of us and Israel acknowledge us not." This shows that Abraham was unconscious of his children for he was dead.

III. Job xiv. 21. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them." This proves that the dead are unconscious of all that is going on around them.

IV. Psa. vi. 5. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

Psa. cxv. 17. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

Isa. xxxviii. 18. "For the dead cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee." These texts show that man is unconscious of God when he is dead.

V. Eccl. ix. 6. "Neither have they any more a portion forever in any thing that is done under the sun." This text shows that man's unconsciousness is entire.

MATTIE STADDEN.

PART I. THE NATURE OF MAN.

I. The word "immortal" means one who is in every way incorruptible, without possibility of perishing or dying. It is applied to God in 1 Tim. i. 17.

II. Rom. ii. 7, "God will render unto those who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." 2 Cor. iv. 17; Jude 21, and Rev. ii. 7.

1 Cor. xv. 53, 54, reading verse 52, proves to us that there is to be a resurrection. In the 53rd verse it simply states the condition the body must be in to have immortality. (2 Cor. v. 4.) In the 54th verse, when this body shall have been made incorruptible and put on immortality, there shall be no more death.

1 Tim. vi. 16. In this verse it says God is the only one who hath immortality. So there is no one at this present age who has immortality but Christ and God.

2 Tim. i. 10. Christ was in the corruptible flesh the same as we are and was put to death, was resurrected and given immortality. Christ abolished death.

In all these verses no one is spoken of besides Christ and God as having immortality, therefore, those that have died have not put on immortality.

III. Rom. i. 23, shows that man is corruptible and God is uncorruptible. The verse classes "corruptible" man with birds, four-footed beasts and creeping things (or beasts.)

IV. Corruptible men may become incorruptible by obeying the Truth, love one another with pure heart fervently, (John i.)

PART II. HIS CONDITION IN DEATH.

I. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 28. "Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again."

II. Isa. lxiii. 16, "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O Lord, art our Father, our redeemer; thy name is from everlasting."

III. Job xiv. 21. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."

IV. Psa. vi. 5. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

Psa. cxv. 17, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down in silence."

Isa. xxxviii. 18. "For the grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth."

V. Eccl. ix. 5. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten."

OLA CROTEU.

Gold Dust.

"If we expect to be 'caught up together' when Jesus comes, we should have more of the together spirit now."

"Make no accusations which you cannot prove, and believe no accusation which is not proved to you—is as good a motto for the street corner as the court room."

"Human nature is so constituted that all see and judge better in the affairs of other men, than in their own."

"Some people cultivate sensitiveness. It is more to our advantage that we learn to harden ourselves against the shafts of spiteful tongues and to bear with equanimity and fortitude both insults and injuries."

"We are the sculptors of our own destiny. We daily chisel the character which will forever decide our weal or woe. What shall it be? Solemn question this! Remember, none of us will be able to deny our handiwork in the judgment day. Infinitely more enduring than the finest granite will be the work we are doing now."

ANNA DREW.

The Dead: Who Are They?

"God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. xxii. 32. If the orthodox believer took a logical view of this statement, he would perceive that instead of proving the immortality of the soul, it indirectly establishes the contrary. It recognizes the existence of a class of human beings who are not "living" but "dead." Who are they? According to the popular theory, there are "no dead" in relation to the human race at all; every human being lives forever. It cannot be suggested that it means "dead" in the moral sense, because this is expressly excluded by the subject of which Jesus is speaking—the resurrection of the dead bodies out from the ground v. 31. The Sadducees denied the resurrection; Jesus proved the resurrection by quoting from Moses the words of Jehovah, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." How did Jesus deduce the resurrection from this formula? By maintaining that God was not the God of those who were dead in the sense of being done with. (See Psa. xlix. 19, 20.) From God calling himself the God of three men who were dead, Jesus argued that God intended to raise them; for "God calleth those things which be not (but are to to be) as though they were." Rom. iv. 17. The Sadducees saw the point of the argument and were put to silence. But if, as it usually contended, the meaning of "God is not the God of the dead but of the living," be, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are alive, Christ's argument for the resurrection of the dead is destroyed. To assert that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were alive, would be a curious way of proving that God intended to make them alive.—Twelve Lectures.

Undue Contraction.

A large railroad terminal was crowded with passengers who were waiting the resumption of traffic. The entire system for sixty miles was tied up. The cause of the trouble was the failure to work properly of the mechanism of a drawbridge spanning a creek. The trouble with the blocking drawbridge was that the mechanism had unduly contracted owing to a sudden drop in temperature. It was a case of cold-contraction at a transition point. Equally troublesome and obstructive is another form of undue contraction. The cause? A want of warmth. The heart may be too narrow. The life may be too restricted. The Church that does little or nothing for others suffers from cold-contraction. What are we but a drawbridge over which good may traffic on its way to others? The remedy? A higher moral temperature.

The war against the saloon will not cease until there are no more saloons.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 866 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1.50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 309 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Buggins, 10823 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this Letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of these small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

Thankfulness.

I thank Thee, Lord, for the blue of Thy sky,
For the green of Thy woods and fields;
For the river that ripples and sparkles by,
And the harvest the brown earth yields.

For the birds that sing and the flowers that bloom,
And the breath of the cooling breeze—
Thou hast made them all so beautiful,
I thank Thee, Lord, for these.

I thank Thee, Lord, for a brain to think
And a will to dare and do;
For a heart that may give my fellow man
A love that is strong and true.

For a spirit that is but the breath of God,
And is new when the world is old—
I yield them all to Thyself, dear Lord,
They are Thine to have and hold.

Only one thing, Lord, in Thy shaping hand
For an end that Thine eye can see,
As day by day Thou art fashioning
Thy child to be more like Thee.

Let Thine image shine from my faithful heart
As the light over life's rough way,
That others may find it an easier path,
And be led to a perfect day.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 59.

"Dear Roxana, God only knows how I love you," Auntie Willard said one day as she sat, pen in hand, but unable to start it. Ah me! that such worthy pens must ever be laid aside! But, it will only be for a little while, for if I mistake not, those very pens will be taken up in the coming age, for the instruction of those who have never heard of Christ. Rowland's letter is undated, but it was written at a time when there were "family prospects of great blessing to his children." Rowland, Jr., being engaged to Miss Ida C. Mather, Lizzie May's roommate and fellow-student at the State Normal—a young lady whom Auntie Willard and Rowland, Sr., loved very much, she being a devoted Christian and joining with them in worship, when visiting at their home. Clara's friend was a Dr. King, who had clerked for years for her father. Lizzie May was still teaching in the home school, and her position and Clara's musical talents brought the finer sort of young people around them, the parlors ringing with the music of piano and violin, while glad voices sang in turn, or in unison, the sacred songs of Canaan.

And Mrs. Rowland Willard was a genial and hospitable hostess, and knew just how to prepare "delicious things to set before her guests," and being so well entertained, those who came once were almost certain to return.

Auntie Willard had the front room in the second story and could enjoy the sweet strains of music and of song as they came floating up from below. And sometimes she would be taken down to sit for an hour in the company rooms, so beautifully bright with new carpets and winter tapestries, where entertained by some especially beloved friend, time would slip by on winged feet and she would go back to her own feeling very much as if she had been resting under the palm trees of Elim.

And Rowland, Jr., would bring up his "chums" and they, their fiances, to see the wonderful grandmother, who, nonogenarian though she was, could talk to them so solemnly and interestingly of eternal things, and pray for them so tenderly and earnestly. For the dear grandchildren were bound as it were in a bundle with Auntie Willard. She had been with them from babyhood, had cared for and taught, and trained them, and their friends were her friends, their joys, successes, prospects, work, sorrows, and bright dreams for the future, were entered into with as much interest as if they had been her own.

Rowland's next letter must have been written in July 1905, and in this speaking of his mother he says, "She trims her little candle till its light divine shows undimmed beside the glowing lamps of earth's brightest minds, and casts its ray of hope far and away beyond the scenes of earth to that within the vail. God grant that this hope divine may be our guiding star."

Rowland, Jr., had at this date left Cramps after being with them six years, and was now in New York shipyard at Camden, N. J., at larger salary; Clara was to be married in September, and Lizzie May, who had been threatened with a break down from overwork in a too crowded school room had spent several weeks at her Uncle Nelson's in Washington city for her health and was now visiting at the dreamy old Dutch town of Dumont. Mr. James Webb after nearly three years loss of his mind, was now apparently on the upgrade, having been to Florida, California and London to seek recovery—tickets furnished by the Pennsylvania railroad company and salary of $225 00 per month still going on, he having been Immigrant Agent for the company for twenty years before his unfortunate fall. Every day he came in to see Rowland, evidently expecting help and encouragement from him, that could be gotten nowhere else.

If you remember it was in June that Auntie Willard wrote that last beautiful letter, and somehow I imagine that it was about that time that a friendly minister called to see her, and by pleasant talk and laughter, sought to add his little mite to her enjoyment and enjoy it she did, but when he said, "Sister Willard, it is my custom when visiting the sick to make a prayer before I go and I will do so now." She replied as quick as a flash, "My dear brother, I do not want you to make a prayer! I want you to pray!"

And he did pray, and as he went out said, "I will never forget this lesson as long as I live! Never!" And he never did.

Auntie Willard abhorred all formalities, in her own devotions or on the part of others. She simply talked to her Heavenly Father just as a trusting little child would talk.

In June, she could see to write and in the following month was so blind that she often had to ask, "Whether Rowland were in the room or not."

Rowland's business was now for a brief period in better shape, and he, thankful for many blessings, was praising God, that more time was being given to him to devote to the spiritual side of life, and well was it for him that it was so, for he is soon to need the strength that he is gathering from above in these few blessed, restful hours.

A little more than a year has passed since he told us this. It is now September 11, 1906, and taking up his pen again he says,—"Your precious letter came last week, and the delight it gave me to have such a letter to read to dear mother and the pleasure of finding that she could comprehend its soul-inspiring utterances was a treat indeed. The loss of physical sight, the dim outlook backward through the time-beclouded windows of memory, make such a letter doubly precious to one whose mind receives new impressions with great difficulty, but who, thank God, had laid up a rich store of things, heavenly—priceless,—divine."

I had written again at Christmas time but Rowland had been unable to reply, having now no help in the store, save that of a school-boy between school-hours,—with Lizzie May to attend to his books and bills, and Lizzie scarce dare attempt "to reply to letters to her grandma,—her grandma's daily, hourly language, being so different from what she heard from other people, and the letters, being on so high a plane of social friendship and religious thought." For Auntie Willard, though her mind was wandering now, and she was back in her teens much of the time, was still "on religious subjects, as bright as a dollar," observing any little error in quoting Scripture, much to the surprise of them all. She was also very entertaining and clear in statement as to matters of ancestry and the early years of her life, giving incidents that must have happened when she was three or four years old, and, then—picturing in graphic language the pleasant episodes of her school days would go on to name and describe her own and her sister Rebecca's suitors.

By some trick of the Mighty Magician Time, the friends of the Present, were transformed into the friends of the Past. One was "Papa" and another the dear sister-playmate of childhood.

The wit and humor that characterized her son Lyman, and that must have been hers, in earlier years, though almost entirely repressed through maturer life, now sparkled forth in a manner that would entertain her daughter-in-law and grandchildren for hours, she often holding them spell-bound until ten o'clock at night, and "this, not at the expense of her spiritual life, for Bible Truths were constantly woven in, and when alone she was teaching imaginary Sunday Schools, or leading in imaginary prayer meetings."

Her friends of the olden days at Hammerton, were dropping off one by one, but she heeded it not—much as she had once loved them. Mrs. Daniel Baker, the very remembrance of whom, had been at one time, almost sacred to Auntie Willard's heart, had just died at 95 years, and the daughter Adaline—had been dead a year, but she heard as a happy child hears sad news, and straightway forgot.

Editor Restitution:

Sister Woodbury says the brethren never speak on the coming of Elijah the prophet, so let us break the spell and speak a little with reference to that subject.

Will Elijah the prophet come in person? Yes. Did John fulfill the prophecy concerning Elijah? No. Now for the proof. Proof to be absolute must be infallible and beyond all power to break. Let us see if we have this kind of proof concerning the return of the prophet Elijah.

God's Word cannot be broken, and upon this fact we base our proof. Why couldn't Elijah appear in person at the first appearing of Jesus? To answer this correctly two prophecies have to be considered. 1. We learn by consulting Malachi iv. that Elijah was to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers." That is the plain fact with no ifs nor ands. No provisos. Then if Elijah had come he would have been compelled to do that work, or the Scriptures would be broken.

John was his representative, and could fail, and still the prophecy would stand unbroken. Jesus said "If ye will receive it this Elijah." But they did not receive it.

2. It had been foretold that the Jews were to "stumble at the word" be blind, and reject their Messiah. So if Elijah had come and fulfilled the prophecy concerning himself he would have forced the breaking of the prediction concerning the blindness of the Jews. So a representative comes, and fails to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children and the children to the fathers," and leaves a way for the other prophecy to be fulfilled. The Jews in their blindness rejected their King, and went into national punishment, and fulfilled that prophecy to the letter.

Now that Scripture is fulfilled and out of the way, leaving the way clear for the return of Elijah, and no one else can do that work, for it is said to be done by Elijah.

You might as well talk of some one else coming to do the work of Jesus. That unfulfilled prophecy must be fulfilled. If not God's Word would be broken. The return of Elijah to do that work to my mind is imminent.

Think how these two prophecies will then have been fulfilled, and not a break in God's Word.

The conclusion then is: These two prophecies could not be fulfilled at the same time. One would destroy the other. The blindness of the Jew must come first, and so it has. Elijah and his work comes next, and is about due. These are wonderful times, and the times to "favor Zion" has about come. Let us keep our eye to the rising Sun, and behold the morning light of the coming day.

Editor Restitution:

On account of the sickness and the death of my wife, who was a great sufferer for over two years, our subscription to THE RESTITUTION has been [illegible] I will enclose money to pay it up.

I often wonder why us poor mortals have to suffer so much. It must be for our good. If there is no future for man this life would be sad indeed, but by the eye of faith we look forward to the time when there will be no more suffering, pain, sickness, sorrow nor death. The apostle Paul says "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

He also says "If children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." A joint heir is an equal sharer. Jesus our Lord "was made perfect through sufferings." If we suffer we shall also reign with him."

"Beloved think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

The glory and honor that is set before us is too great and grand to be comprehended by the mind of mortal man, and the great question with me is Will I, poor frail mortal creature, ever be worthy to participate in that glory? I fear not.

Higher Criticism the Kiss of Judas.

Dr. McPeters of the Southern Presbyterian Theological Seminary, in an address before the Bible League of North America, at St. Louis, made the following vigorous and just attack upon the destructive higher criticism as taught in the Chicago University. He said in part:—

"Higher Criticism is not the Roman's spear which pierced the side of the Lord. It is rather the kiss of Judas, which, under the pretense of friendliness, aims at the destruction of religion. We, the adherents of literal faith in every word of Holy Writ, are contending today for the altar and the hearthstone. Radical criticism, such as that voiced by the University of Chicago, proposes a complete change of Christianity to infidelity. It not only presumes to modify, by human objection, rejects the truth taught by Christ, such as his resurrection and second advent. There are a few ambitious young men at the university, who, impatient of obscurity and meagre pay, think to procure themselves better positions by attracting publicity. This aim they can accomplish best by sensational attacks upon what is holy."

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1 50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add the extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

Sunday School Lesson.

FEBRUARY 25, 1911.

Elijah meets Ahab in Naboth's Vineyard. 1 Kings xxi.

Golden Text—"Take heed, beware of covetousness." Luke xii. 15.

Between last Sunday's lesson and this some time is spent by the kingdom of Israel in war with the king of Syria. On two different occasions had the Lord delivered Israel and given the Syrians into their hands, that they might know that the Lord was God, and able to care for his people. A prophet had warned Ahab not to give back to the Syrians their king when he was made prisoner, but Ahab disobeyed, and set him free, and the prophet said to him "Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people."

Ahab now comes to a few years of peace, and while improving the surroundings of his palace, wishes to get possession of a certain vineyard belonging to a man named Naboth, that he might make a garden. He offers to give Naboth another vineyard for his, or buy it for money, but Naboth had inherited the place from his fathers, and declines to part with it. This makes the king act like a spoiled child. He goes home and lies down with his face to the wall, and refuses to eat. Has a case of the "pouts." His wicked heathen wife Jezebel, now appears on the scene, and when she learns the trouble, scorns the idea that a king cannot have what he desires, and promises she will give him the vineyard.

The means employed was simple for one who cares nothing for right or justice. She takes the signet ring, and has letters sent to the chief men of the city, sealed with the king's seal. She has all these men as dupes to do her bidding. The plan is to have the elders called together, have Naboth brought before them, hire two men who were worthless fellows to testify that Naboth had blasphemed God and the king. Of course with the two witnesses as the law required, it was sure conviction, and so Naboth was taken out and stoned to death, and from 2 Kings ix. 26, we learn that his sons were slain with him, thus removing all chance for succession of title, so the vineyard by law reverted to the crown, and Jezebel told the king to go and take possession, as the title was now in his name.

Elijah has been out of the story for some time, but now the Lord directs him to go to Ahab in the vineyard of Naboth, and to inform him that as Naboth was killed, so will the dogs in the self same place lick the blood of Ahab. It is decreed that not only shall Ahab be so dealt with, but that his sons shall be destroyed, and his family obliterated, even as had been the house of Jereboam. It was further decreed that the dogs shall eat Jezebel by the walls of Jezreel.

This is a lesson on Covetousness, and what it leads to. The person who is covetous soon gets the idea that what he wants he ought to have. This leads to the accomplishment of selfish purposes by any means, and when one gets up to a high pitch he will do anything to serve his ends. Covetousness is not the mere desire for something, but the over-strong desire for more—uncontrolled by reason or any better promptings. It is not covetousness to wish for a house or farm, but to desire to deprive your neighbor of his. Covetousness is the root of much evil. Most of the sin and wickedness about us comes from covetousness. Saloon business, graft, bribery, dishonesty and fraud of all kinds are prompted by covetousness. To such a person nothing is sacred. The good name of another is trodden down without a blush, and his family and friends injured that the one who wishes what he has not may gain his desires. Covetousness is the blackest crime in the whole list, as it blunts all finer feeling, and leads to deeds that otherwise would not be thought of.

Covetousness is the same in our day as it was in Ahab's time. It is the car of Juggernaut that crushes all that gets in its way and leaves a trail of wreck and ruin in its wake. Ahab was a falsifier, a thief, a murderer. Is he much different in the sight of God than the man who, prompted by the same motives, will seek to ruin his fellow, take away his honor, his name, his chance in life? Meet the question fairly, brother, friend. Don't seek to hide, and strive to screen your foul deeds by putting other motives to the fore. Look [illegible] back of all [illegible] that's the germ, kill it.

The Golden Text uses strong words in relation to this subject. "Take heed, beware" are words that we will do well to consider. "Beware of covetousness." Kill the first such thought that rises in your mind.

What is the cure? Service to others. Love for others cures the disease. Generosity, pleasure that others advance and win success. Jesus pleased not himself. Don't complain that you are so often called to minister to others, but rejoice that you have opportunity to be of use to your fellows. Search for such opportunities. Do not resolve to get out of doing everything you can, but rather resolve to be just as useful as you can, seeking chances to benefit those about you. Your gifts or deeds may not be large or great, but like Peter you can say "such as I have give I thee." It is not always money, but sympathy, kindness, aid in sickness, bread to the hungry, shelter and a hundred of the little things that come to each life. Give of your service in every form until it becomes the habit of your life, and take joy in that you are counted worthy to be thus a servant, and covetousness will gain no hold in your heart. Service to God and consideration for your brother is a cure for covetousness.

Are you taking the cure?

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 15, 1911. NUMBER 7.

The first Christians were all aflame with love for Christ's second appearing. They groaned for it (Rom viii 23). They hasted unto the solemn event (2 Pet i 2). "They assigned to Christ a quick return," writes James Martineau. "Not to sigh after the day of the Lord, was deemed a kind of apostasy," writes the eloquent Massillon. "Our desires," says Tertullian, "pant after the end of this age and the coming of Christ." "Day long wished for by the good," says Pollok. If the first Christians, who lived under the edge of the shadow of Christ's departure, felt and wrote thus, how should we feel who dwell in the ever-brightening aurora of his return in glory?

"We affirm," says David Brown, of Scotland, "that our Redeemer's second appearing is the very pole-star of our hopes. That it is so held forth in the New Testament is beyond dispute." "The second advent of Christ was the object of longing expectation to all the early Christians," writes Dr. Hodge. "The earnest expectation of the coming of Jesus," wrote Albert Barnes, "became one of the marks of early Christian piety." Bishop George D. Cummings asserts, "We build upon Christ's coming again. Thank God we believe in a second advent; we have not given up that old hope."—D. T. Taylor.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Please find a money order to renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION. I am now ninety years old, and cannot see to read a word. I have taken THE RESTITUTION through all its various changes ever since Brother Marsh published the Harbinger and Bible Advocate. I don't expect to live much longer, but hope to take the paper the rest of my days. My dear wife left me a short while ago. I trust she sleeps in Jesus, as she had a precious hope of the future. I hope to meet her in a very short time, as I think we must have a new dispensation soon.

Your Brother in the blessed hope,

C. J. LEE.

JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 15, 1911.

Again we ask any one who has not been credited on their account properly, to kindly tell us of the trouble, and we will endeavor to rectify any mistake we have made.

That friends may see how easy it is for things to go wrong, and cause misunderstandings, we here wish to give an instance that is just now straightened out. At a certain post office in Illinois an old brother has been getting The Restitution for many years. Last month we received a type written letter from that post office, the printing on the heading gave a name and indicated that it was from the office of one who was a dealer in [illegible] loans and insurance. [illegible] letter, but it directed that for the draft enclosed we should send the paper for 1911. On looking at the draft we discovered it was for a much larger sum than the price of our paper, and was endorsed in favor of another person altogether from us. Evidently a mistake that the sender would discover soon, so we waited and two days after received a letter asking about the draft, and enclosing one for the proper amount to us, and request to return the other one. This letter gave name of the sender. We at once returned his draft, thanked him for his favor to us, and entered his name on our book and list and started the paper to him. This week we received a letter from him stating that the money he sent was intended as a renewal of the old brother's paper, and not to send the paper to him. Of course this was an oversight in not mentioning who the money was to be applied to, and we only give it to show how easy it is for even business men to make errors that may cause a deal of misunderstanding and hard feeling later on. Suppose the man had not discovered but there was a duplication of papers, and it had run on for some months, till we sent a reminder to the brother that his time was out. He would have been insulted at once, and have blamed us for an error. It might have been carried through a year, and when time of payment came around the one new trial subscriber would have been dropped if not renewed and that account ended. Then when money came giving name of the old subscriber, and it applied on his account, of course he would be running a year behind, in place of paid in advance as he supposed. After a period of years, death or removals change the family conditions, and settlements are being made. A statement is made showing nothing credited the old brother's account the year in question. Investigation at bank shows a draft sent and paid to The Restitution office. The evidence is conclusive—the management of the office is "crooked" and sought to get pay twice from that good old brother. Without more ado he is branded as a falsifier, and this peddled about as a sample of his "dirty work." The smallest amount of investigation at the other end—a small effort to get at the "other side" would have made all clear to all minds. Sad to say, but truth nevertheless, some busy-bodys do not want both sides told.

Another case that is just fresh. A year ago in January a brother in Oklahoma sent us the name of a man in Illinois, with one dollar, directing that The Restitution be sent him to that amount. It being a new name, in accord with our offer in such cases, we credited the name for a full year. The brother who sent it in gave us the man's given-name and one initial as well. Paper was started and went through the year 1910. In October last the brother who sent the name in January (which fact could not be retained in mind, of course) sent fifty cents asking us to send the paper to a name given. This name was two initials—the first being the same as the second initial in the first name sent, but the second initial in the new name was entirely different, though both sur-names were the same. No explanation was given us that it was the same man, and the brother was finishing out paying for the year. We did as directed and sent papers to the new name. It now transpires that there was only the one family at the place of this name, and that both papers were delivered to the same person, and we are accused of duplication, and so another case in which we see some will be quick to blame us.

We give these cases hoping that friends will be very particular to each time specify distinctly who money is sent for, and not to suppose that we know every person's name and family connections. Sometimes the paper is sent in the wife's name. In renewing the husband's name is often given. Unless it is some one we know well, the two names should be given, else we are liable to enter the name given, a duplication is made, and we are accused of doing things carelessly, and by some wrongfully.

Herewith we wish to present to our readers a letter, some extracts and comments with the design of stimulating thought:

Dear Brother Underwood:

Some years ago I read the history of the massacres in Armenia, and then made up my mind that the Sultan of Turkey and his Mohammedan subjects were the worst haters of Christians and christianity of any nation. May not the Sultan develop into "the man of sin?" 2 Thess. ii. 3-4. While he rules Palestine, his capital is not in it, but is situated northeast of it. When Gog and Magog come from the north to take a spoil, may not the Sultan of Turkey and his army be included?

I am very glad some of the brethren have responded to your invitation to write on the signs and evidences of the soon coming of our Lord. I have long wished for such contributions for The Restitution. They are very interesting and instructive.

I enclose a clipping from Twice-a-Week World, which gives us an inkling of the present policy of Turkey. Alarming events may soon obtain in the East.

Your Brother waiting for the consolation of Israel,

D. D. Latimer.

Constantinople, Jan. 21.—Resolutions adopted at Salonica, where they met in great secrecy, makes it clear that the Ittihad, or Young Turks, are very much alive and preparing a new movement only to be compared to the policy of their warlike ancestors which called forth the First Crusade more than 800 years ago.

All who took part in the Salonica meeting were sworn to secrecy, but our correspondent has obtained the substance of the most important resolutions, which breathe hatred to the Christian and a spirit of intolerance for all that is not Mohammedan.

One of the resolutions says "Turkey must work with all her might toward uniting all the Mohammedans of the earth under the Crescent standard. Islam is to be Turkey's barrier and protection before her greatest enemies—the Christian states of the world. Therefore the sacred mission of Ittihad is not yet complete, though Ittihad gave Turkey her constitution. As all Turkey's strength must be rallied around one standard, so must all her political influence be combined in one party—that of the Young Turks. Until Turkey has been reformed and made strong no other party must be allowed to exist."

After these declarations, which prove how far young Turkey has fallen from the liberal ideas Ittihad imbibed at the time of the revolution from the Western world, the meeting considered the position of neighboring Christian states and their claims to Macedonia, and after much discussion the following resolution was adopted with enthusiastic approval:

"As to Macedonia, we know perfectly well that all the armed bands there are simply paid agents of the Christian neighboring states. We are therefore fully determined to stop at nothing in order to nip the fresh troubles now brewing there in the bud. We intend to disarm all these armed Christians, who are but the tools of foreign intrigue. At the same time we intend to be patient in our dealing with our Christian neighbors until our army is thoroughly well reformed and developed. Then we shall send very different answers to the aggressive and intriguing policy of our Christian neighbors."

This resolution is the more interesting after the news from Sofia, where Milan Lapoff and his confederates are busy with "aggressive" measures in Macedonia. The Ittihad's resolutions about Greece are as wide sweeping as those touching Bulgaria—the other Christian neighbor. The boycott of Greek goods, "which has given us such good results and ruined so many of the Greek merchants since it was begun two years ago, is to be continued until Greece has withdrawn her anti-Turkish claims in Crete and in Macedonia."

The committee also declared for more energy at home and neutral policy abroad, and decided to make certain concessions to Greek and Arab subjects of the Sultan by inviting their representatives to work in the new cabinet.

If Bulgaria insists in stirring up strife in Macedonia—and there is every sign that she intends to, the Ittihad committee will send her best troops and be able to match her strength with her neighbors.

All the foreign experts in Constantinople argue that the Turkish army stands far better than it did when Abul Hamid fell. This fact makes Bulgaria's chances of foreign intervention a great deal smaller. In any case the coming spring will again bring trouble in the Balkans.

Though Abdul Hamid has been ordered by the Leipzig court to hand his millions hoarded in Germany, over to the Young Turks, he still obstinately refuses to sign the scrap of paper authorizing them to take the money from the bank. Sherket Pasha who wants the money for his army, has been down to the villa Allatini in person, but all his arguments and [illegible] persuasion have failed to [illegible] man's signature.

In dealing with the question relating to the development of that coming [illegible] that portends a change in dispensation, we should bear in mind the fact that there must be opposing forces. As around the standard of the Gog power will be grouped those nations mentioned by the prophets, so will be gathered a force opposed to this. In watching this coming together of the various parts of these gigantic combinations, notice that what prompts them to gravitate toward each other is the principle of selfish interest. Not the principle of love—for they may cordially hate, and yet come together because of mutual interest.

Under the old rule by the Sultan in Turkey, England was the power that held her together, and kept the Sick Man alive. What for? The integrity of Turkey gone, and Russia's dream of an ice-free port is realized. Selfish interest, not love for Turkey prompts England. With new rule under the Young Turks party we see promises of worse conditions there than existed under the old Sultan, and with the old rule went a large share of British influence. It is said that the doings of the Young Turks army in Albania and Macedonia last year far exceeded the blackest days of Abdul Hamid's regime. Even worse is threatened for the coming season.

Influences that are at work causing divisions on one hand and unions on the other: Last week witnessed another outburst against the United States by Germany when the Reichstag refused to allow certain American securities to be listed in their stock market, showing rankest anti-American feelings. Then we note a demand that is made through large Jewish societies that President Taft shall give notice to the Russian government that the treaty between the two countries be terminated in one year. The demand is based on the contempt Russia shows for passports issued to American citizens traveling in Russia. Then we note the writings of those men who see in a union of all English speaking people the only real guarantee of peace. Right on the heels of that comes a protest from the united Hibernian societies of this land to our congress that they oppose any alliance with England, as that would strengthen her and hurt the cause of Ireland.

Brethren, the signs are right for the development of God's plans as outlined by the prophets. Watch and see how perfectly they unfold. The time for rejoicing is near. Just before day it is darkest. Look for the glorious Sun rising.

Communicated.

Random Thoughts.

I can't think it a thing incredible that God should raise the dead, when the inspired Job says, "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Even though he doesn't make it perfectly clear that God will resurrect the wicked men who have trodden the old ways "which were cut down out of time whose foundation was overflown with a flood," Job xxii. 15 16.

Job does not say whether they will be raised and destroyed again with the wicked of which it is said "the remnant of them the fire consumeth." Job xii. 20. I can't think it a thing "incredible that God should raise he dead" when David says with such unbounded confidence "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." I can say with the blessed old patriarch I know I shall be satisfied when I awake in the likeness of the glorified One. Though I may have to wait until that day before I shall clearly know whether "Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them which suffered the vengeance of eternal fire," will be there or not to be cast into the "lake of fire and brimstone."

I know not just exactly how the potter intends to divide the clay, but one thing I do know is that the promise given by Paul of "a crown of life to all them that love his appearing" is enough to anchor my soul by the door where I wait the dawn of the resurrection morning.

Brethren, we should not allow the manner of the resurrection to cause discord and confusion among brethren. The Creator of all flesh will recreate according to his own will. For us to know the manner and number of the resurrection is not set forth as "the power of God unto salvation." When subjects of interest, if not of vi[illegible]mport are brought up for consideration, handle with words a brotherly manner, considering one another. Be ye kindly affectioned one to another, growing in grace and unity of the spirit.

"Six things doth the Lord hate, yea seven are an abomination unto him." What is this seventh? Brethren, beware! It can be committed, and it is an Abomination unto our Heavenly Father. What is it? "He that soweth discord among brethren." Prov. vi. 16 20.

May we not be found so doing when the Lord comes. "Watch ye therefore, for in such an hour as ye think not" your Lord cometh.

With love to the faithful,

Sadie Skeels.

Obituary.

Augusta E Scott was born April 19 1846, in the township of Wakeshma, Kalamazoo County, Michigan. Early in life she became a Christian, united with the Church of God, and was an honored member during her life time.

She was united in marriage to Edgar W. Knapp in 1865. To this union were born five children, one of whom died in infancy. The eldest is Mrs. F. Wheaton of Galesburg, Omar Knapp Battle Creek, Mrs. Wm. Gutchess of Climax, and Ola Knapp.

Mrs. Knapp died at a hospital in Kalamazoo, Michigan, Feb 3, 1911. Her sister Mrs. Sarah Griggs, was with her during the last week of her illness, remaining with her the last night of her life.

The funeral was held in the Reformed Church, at Fulton, sermon by the pastor of that church. Interment in the North Cemetery by the side of her mother.

Three sisters are left to mourn her loss, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Mrs. John Hartman.

Esther Jones was born in Manchester, England, November 4, 1842, and died February 8, 1911. She was of Welsh parentage. Came to America in 1847, at the age of five years. Was united in marriage to George Steadman June 13, 1861, in Glendale College, Ohio. To this union were born eleven children, six having died, and five remaining with the aged husband to mourn the loss of wife and mother. The five remaining are Charles, John, Alice (the latter at home), Lucy Lapp of Moorefield, and James of Cambridge Nebraska. There are twelve grand children and one great grand child.

Sister Steadman came to Frontier County, Nebraska, with the family in 1886, settling near Moorefield, where she remained till death.

If our Sister ever had an enemy it was on account of her faith, and we doubt this very much, as she was so quiet and unassuming that her contention for the faith carried weight and not offense. As tribute to her memory nothing better attests than the fact that the church was packed, and many had to stand during the ceremonies.

We told the people we attributed the occasion with all of its mingled sorrows to the enemy death. The bright side of meeting our sister again at the resurrection of the dead, we had no hesitancy in attributing to God. We were not there to see how much worse we could make them feel, but how good we could feel under the circumstances. "Thy brother shall rise again," is soothing and just as applicable to mother as to brother. Therefore we see why our sorrow is not like those who have no hope. How much more intense the one than the other.

To show how strong our Sister was in the faith, yet so quiet, she made request that no one but one of the faith should say anything at her funeral. We came 250 miles to fulfill that request. She never allowed her faith tampered with in life, and did not want it taken advantage of after she was dead and could not defend herself. We believe her sleep will be but short. The accompanying lines were handed us by a friend.

Alice Adams.

Farewell dear mother, sweet thy rest;
Weary with years and worn with pain.
Farewell, till in some happy place
We shall behold thy face again.
'Tis ours to miss thee all our years,
And tender memories of thee keep;
Thine in the Lord to rest, for so
He gives to his beloved sleep.

"Emily Catherine Orr was born in Ohio, February 3, 1840, departed this life January 20, 1911, aged 70 years, 11 months, 26 days.

When only four years of age, she moved to this county with her parents. In 1885, she moved to Kansas with her family and returned to this county in 1904, where she remained until her death.

She was married to Jeremiah Orr January 11, 1857, and to this union four children were born. One daughter, Margaret, died in 1884, at the age of twenty, and her companion September 30, 1906.

She is survived by three children, Mrs. C. A. Sloan, of Pratt, Kansas; Merritt Orr, of Wichita, Kansas, and Melissa, with whom she made her home. She is also survived by many relatives and friends, to whom her death was a great shock; for although she had been in poor health for many years, she was seemingly much improved during the last few days of her life. God in his kindness allowed her to pour out her thoughts in conversation, peacefully drink in the last draughts of life, and as our beloved author has said, 'Lie down to pleasant dreams.' Nevertheless, we cannot but lament the loss of such a devoted Christian, for she had given her heart to him, in whom we put our trust many years ago. But let us not weep as those who have no hope, but remember these comforting words: 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.'"

Above is Sister Orr's obituary, read at the funeral, which was held in the Scircleville, M. E. Church, for which the writer was called from the protracted meeting in Scottsburg.

Her son was not present, but both daughters were.

Words of comfort and hope were spoken from the promise of the "Crown of Glory," and we laid her to rest in the nearby cemetery, to await the time when the sleepers shall awake in glory.

Joseph Williams.

James M. Williams was born February 13, 1825, in Randolph County, North Carolina, died January 24, 1911, aged 85 years, 11 months, and 20 days, was married to Maria Kivett and to this union was born nine children, two having preceded him to the silent grave. His wife, two daughters and five sons survive him to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not as those that have no hope, for we are assured that he will live again where death will never come, and no more sickness pain or sorrow, when all tears shall be wiped from off all faces.

In the year of 1869 he moved to Sumner County, Kansas, near the town of Ashton, where he has since resided.

In or about the year 1895, he embraced the faith as taught by the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith and was baptized [illegible] Miller, and has ever since manifested his faith by his daily walk.

Funeral services were conducted by the undersigned, assisted by Rev. Murphy of the Methodist faith, after which we laid him to rest in the silent dust to await the Master's call.

"Thou shalt call and I will answer thee. Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."

The funeral was attended by a gathering of sympathizing friends.

"The drink vice is the dark cloud which overshadows nearly all the young lives growing up in the cellars and alleys of our great cities, and no effort to save them can ever be successful which does not ever carry before it as a watchword a declaration of inextinguishable resistance to that great drink traffic which sweeps away so many unhappy young victims into its whirlpools. Eighty-five per cent of my orphans come into my hands either directly or indirectly through drink.'—Dr. Barnardo.

Lecture By a Thief.

A score of boys were before a New York judge on charge of petty thieving. The judge ordered the boys to take front seats and then called in a man who had just been sentenced to Sing Sing for three years for burglary. "Boys," said the judge, "I'm going to show you that it does not pay to be a thief, and I trust that what you hear today, coming as it does from a man who knows what he is talking about, will swerve you from the path of crime to one of goodness. Hirsch," he continued, turning to the prisoner, "tell these young fellows why it does not pay to be a thief."

The prisoner, pale from confinement in the tombs, rose. "Boys, let me tell you," he said, "it does not pay to be a thief. I have been one, and still am one, and I think I ought to know. I am thirty-two years old, have a wife and four children, and love them dearly.

"I have spent seven years in prison and have been arrested more than one hundred times, learned to be a thief at Elmira, where I was sent as a youth. I mingled with thieves there, and what I did not know of thieving when I entered, I was taught before I came out.

"My crime has brought disgrace and destitution upon my wife and children. My children are pointed out by those who know them as children of a thief. They are cast off by any friends they may have made. They may starve or die while I am in prison and I cannot help them. And all because I could not be a good, honest and truthful man. My first crime was a petty one. It was the step from the stone to more serious ones. In all my years of crime I don't believe I have made more than $100.

"Boys, I am about to be sent away to prison again. I shall probably never come out alive. I don't care if I don't. Before I go let me tell you this: It does not pay to steal. You will be found out later on, whether you steal a cent or a million.

"Go to church and listen to what you hear. Read your Bible once in a while. Don't mingle with evil companions. If you have any troubles tell them to your mother. She is the one best friend a boy has. Don't lie, for that is almost as bad as stealing. I hope what I have said will help make you good and upright men."

Infidelity and Christianity.

"Let us hear the testimony of one who has tried both sides. Joseph Baker, a late president of the British National Secular Society, says: 'To you who are beginning to entertain skeptical views, let me offer a word of warning and of advice. I assure you, you know not what you are doing. The path which you are entering on may seem right to you in your present state of mind, but the end thereof is death. You are preparing for yourself matter for bitter repentance. I have trodden the dreadful path from beginning to end. I know it all. It is weary and a dismal road, and it leads to wretchedness and ruin. I have seen the dreadful effects which infidelity produces on men's characters. I have had proof of its deteriorating influence in my own experience—its tendency to utter debasement. I have read and studied both sides, and what is more, I have tried both; and the result is a full assurance that infidelity is madness, and that the religion of Christ is the perfection of wisdom and goodness.'"

Cheer Up.

Cheer up! The world is taking your photograph. Look pleasant. Of course you have your troubles—troubles you cannot tell the policeman. Business worries, or domestic troubles, it may be, or what not. You find life a rugged road, whose stones hurt your feet. Nevertheless, cheer up! Your life is too self-centered. You imagine your troubles are worse than others bear. You feel sorry for yourself—the meanest sort of pity! You are borrowing trouble, and paying a high rate of interest. Smile, even if it be through tears which speedily dry. And cheer up!—Church Evangel.

It is very sad the way it "kills" a state to close its saloons. All the saloons in Georgia were permanently closed a year ago. The value of taxable property in the state has increased about four million dollars since then.—Illinois Issue.

The Bible Divine.

The Bible IS we plainly see;
Then it must have a pedigree;
If either is a book divine,
Or man to make it must combine.
So prove the latter, then they must Prove either side and you will see
A proof of its divinity.

If wicked men composed this book,
Surely their senses them forsook;
For they the righteous man defend,
And curse the bad from end to end.
If righteous, then they change their name
For they the authorship disclaim.
They cannot say "Thus saith the Lord,"
And testify it is His word;
For, if so, they tell a lie.
And all their righteousness destroy.

Can Moses and could Malachi
Be wicked men in one life?
Could Paul and Daniel with the rest,
Be numbered the world from east to west,
Be cheat and conjurer
When cowans called for even them, sir?
Not only sons, but ages too,
Hundreds of years and not a few!

Not Changed.

From correspondents we learn that because we took a definite stand at the General Conference for the doctrines of Christ's sonship, sacrificial death, and full inspiration of the Scriptures, some of our brethren seem to think that we have changed. Some write that they were "surprised" at our stand; others have charged that we have changed to such an extent that we will not now fellowship the brethren at Oregon where we formerly lived, and other Churches in Illinois where we once labored. The other day we found a copy of a letter among our sermon notes which was written at Oregon, Illinois, March 17, 1908. As this letter shows that we stood on the same platform while in Oregon that we do today, we publish it herewith. Brother Underwood will keep the copy on file in his office for public inspection. Here it is verbatim:

Oregon, Ill., 3-17-'08.

Mr. O. J. Allard,
Ft. Dodge, Iowa.

My Dear Brother Allard:—Your letter of the 16th inst. came to me in due course of mail. You say that the questions of Sabbath keeping and the Sonship of Christ are giving you "trouble," that your Conference Board are having a difficulty in getting speakers for your annual meeting in August, and finally, that we are "doing wrong to agitate these questions," etc. etc. Then you quote Tit. iii. 9, and underscore the word "avoid" to show that we are making a mistake in discussing the subjects before mentioned.

Now I assure you, my brother, that I appreciate your situation in Iowa, and that I am not insensible to the grave difficulties you have to face. God sometimes places his children in "times of trouble" to prove them. This is the explanation of why false prophets were permitted to seduce many of the Israelites, Deut. xiii. 1-4; also why they are still prevalent in the Church of God. Says the apostle "There must also be heresies among you (why?), that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." 1 Cor. xi. 19. The apostle Peter in pointing out that as "there were false prophets among the people" of Israel, so there shall be "false teachers" among us (2 Peter ii. 1) says They shall "bring in damnable heresies" "Privily.' Verse 1. He further says that they will "deny the [illegible] Lord that bought them." Thirdly [illegible] says that "swift destruction" awaits them. Fourthly, that "many will follow their pernicious ways"—they will make many converts. Verse 2. And lastly, that "the way of truth shall be evil spoken of" on account of these apostates and their doings. Our false brethren have fulfilled Peter's prophecy to a nicety. They have "privily" sowed the seeds of heresy for years with the slyness of a fox. The brethren could not be duped with a "damnable heresy" except in this way. After catching a few thoughtless souls in their net, they became a bit bolder, and "denied the Lord that bought them." Counting the blood of the covenant "an unholy thing" (Heb. x. 29), they boldly deny the sacrificial offering of our Lord, and say that he "died because he was killed." Not satisfied with rejecting the Redeemer, they refuse to believe God's word (Psa cvi. 24) for which sin the Israelites were killed in the wilderness. Heb. iii. 4. They have brought the truth into disrepute—have caused it to be "evil spoken of." These are facts and we cannot ignore them. Are we to "avoid" saying anything about the fundamental questions of the gospel, and let them go on promulgating "damnable heresies?" A damnable heresy is a false doctrine that will "damn." Surely we cannot plead that such a vital matter can be avoided for the sake of peace.

You say "Give me your exposition of Titus iii. 9." I will do so briefly, and will not forget to say something about the word "avoid" which you have underlined to emphasize. What does the text say we should "avoid?" "Foolish questions," "genealogies," "contentions," "strivings about the law," etc. I preach the divine Sonship of Christ; is that a "foolish questions?" I can hear you say No with all the noise of a thunder storm. All right. Who are contentious about genealogies, who strive about the law? The Josephites and Sabbathtarians! Now how should we treat these questions? The answer is, "avoid" them. But if you have these false teachers attend your Conference, and if you discuss questions here proscribed, are you "avoiding" them? You must not "give heed" to these subjects, 1 Tim i. 4. You must "refuse" to hear them, iv. 7; must "shun" them, 2 Timothy ii. 16. So much for these false doctrines."

Now a word about the people who preach them. 2 Timothy iii. 5 says of the teachers, "From such turn away." 1 Timothy vi. 5, says "From such withdraw thyself." Romans xvi. 17, says "Avoid them"—the Teachers, mind you. And finally, fix in your memory these words, and act upon them: "If any Man obey not our word By this Epistle, note that Man, and have No Company with Him, that he may be ashamed," 2 Thess. iii. 14.

The following propositions result from a consideration of the passages cited above:

1. That our duty as to false doctrines is clearly mapped out in the words "avoid," (not) "give heed," "refuse" and "shun" them.

2. That our duty towards Satan's ministers who are "transformed into angels of light" is to "turn away" from them; to "withdraw" from them; "avoid them;" "have no company with them," etc.

This advice may be a little hard for you to act on, but it is God's instruction, and must be the best for his children. How can two walk together unless they agree? This is a Bible question. It is folly to try to do so. "Let them alone." And let us request them to let us alone.

I have written you plainly on this matter, not because I think you need reproof, but for the purpose of exhorting you to stand for the truth in its virgin purity. I send you smiles in this letter which I have written in "great plainness of speech." Paul once was in the same situation you are; and he did not give place to the adversary for sixty minutes. He did not let the cry of "charity" frighten him from doing his duty. Look at his splendid example; imitate it: "Because of false brethren unawares brought it, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus (by teaching the brethren to "observe days"—the Sabbath, Gal. iv. 10) that they might bring us into bondage (of the law, iv. 21), to whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour" (sixty minutes!) Why did Paul act so decidedly and firmly with these false teachers? Hear his reason: "That the truth of the gospel might continue with you," Gal. ii. 4-5. By giving place to evil workers, your body of workers will soon be eaten up with the cancerous growth [illegible] truth of the gospel" to continue," you had better throw off your coat and get to work. Do this now, I exhort you Brother Allard, and then when your time of departure comes, you can say with the great Apostle Paul "I am now ready to be offered—I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have guarded the faith," 2 Tim. iv. 6-7.

With love to you, Brother Marsh, and all the faithful with you,

Fraternally your brother,
ROB'T G. HUGGINS.

Appreciation.

A sad fault of humanity, and one that is well nigh universal is a failure to appreciate, or at least, to express appreciation of our fellow men. We are slow to say how much we prize those who are the nearest and dearest to us, in fact, we never realize their full value until they are gone. Strange that we can detect one flaw, one mistake, one failure, to do a thing well quicker than we can a hundred good qualities, or favors shown, or a hundred things well done.

"Strange we never prize the music
Till the sweet-voiced bird has flown;
Strange that we should slight the violet
Till those lovely flowers are gone."

Strange that we should let pass unimproved these opportunities of cheering hearts and brightening lives when we can do so at such a little cost to ourselves.

Why tell wife that the dinner is cooked well, or that the garment which she has made fits splendidly? Why tell husband that he has made a beautiful garden, or that the home which he has provided is as nice as one could desire? Why should we commend the children when they have done their best to please us? If we read a book, or an article in a paper that proves helpful, why write a note to the author thanking him for it? If the pastor preaches a sermon that comforts us when sad, encourages us when we are disheartened, or leads us back when we have wandered, why take the pains to tell him?

There are many reasons why [illegible] should; but the principal one is because it will make their lives brighter and happier and cause them to do their work better. It may be argued that people will become too important if we tell them how much good they have done us. Never. Flattery is a curse, and will spoil men and women, but this is not a plea for flattery; there is as much difference between honest words of appreciation and flattery as there is between light and darkness.

That instance where a person has been spoiled by appreciative words remains to be produced, but on the other hand, hundreds of people in every walk of life have become disheartened and have given up trying to do or to be anything noble and good, simply because they were unappreciated. Many a wife has become unloving and unfaithful because she was unappreciated at home. Many a husband has been driven to the club and saloon by a frowning, scolding wife, and many a young man and woman in the path of sin and a discredit to the race today might have been saved from such a lot by encouragement and kind words.

Why keep all the good things that we have to say about a person until the ears that should hear them are deaf to all sound, and the heart that they should have cheered has stopped its beating? Why wait until the voice that cheered you, and the hands that ministered to your needs are silent and motionless, before you say a word of praise? Bouquets on a casket, and eulogies over the dead are good, but they are poor substitutes for flowers and kind words to the living.

Yes, the people of this world need more kind, appreciative words, more tokens of affection, more words of approval and less censure. It is a small thing to say so when we have been blessed, but the good that it will do can never be measured. We shall never be sorry for kind words and loving deeds, while a failure to speak these words and perform these deeds will cause us many a heartache, and many an hour of regret. Let us be unsparing of our appreciation; let us scatter it like sunshine along the pathway of life. "Kind words can never die."—L. F. R.

That Blessed Hope.

Again we are assembled around the table of the Lord's appointment, which brings to our remembrance his death until he shall come, the true source of comfort to all in Christ.

There is no hope but Christ. Men may point to themselves bright visions of social position, worldly prosperity, of wealth, friendship and political honor, but all these if attained are attended by many trials and even do not give an abiding comfort. For the betterment of mankind men may formulate great schemes according to their idea of desirability, but apart from God's purpose in Christ they will never be realized.

The truth has taught us what we are and what we must do to be wise. By nature we were without hope in that all have sinned; death has passed upon all; all are under the condemnation; through Christ alone can we escape and be justified unto eternal life.

For ages mankind has desired and longed for immortality, nevertheless we are still mortal and corruptible. In spite of that universal long looked for good time, we are still subjected to vanities and vexations. With all the science and philosophy of the nineteenth century we do not attain unto perfection; sickness overtakes us and death knocks at our heart's door. We cannot flee from him.

In our view of our lamentable condition in Adam, what joy surrounds this table where we meet to remember our exalted Lord, and dwell upon his life-giving words. What blessedness belongs to those who humbly seek to do his will. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life; and enter through the gates into the city." "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." Yes, "sons of God." No longer mere creatures, not even servants, but sons, exalted to the position of friendship and communion with the eternal Father. "Our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ."

The fellowship with the Father is through the Son. He is our High Priest and Mediator, by him we have access to the Father.

Jesus is before us this morning as God in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father also." "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." To him has been given a name that is above every name. To him has been given all power in heaven and earth and he will reward every man according to his works. Adorable Lord! We love thee, and like thy servant of old we rejoice with joy unspeakable, and are earnestly looking for that blessed hope. We live for it; we pray for it; the gospel has called us to it. Before we knew the gospel we were content with the groveling things of this age. Its friendship, its society, its politics, its wages of unrighteousness. From these vanities we have turned to serve the true and living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. But we mourn because of iniquity as did the righteous before us. We are now in the midst of our sorrowing probation. Now is the waiting time which is testing the faith of all God's servants. Although vile men are exalted on every hand and the scoffer says, Where is the promise of his coming? we still cling to Jesus' last words, "Behold I come quickly." Though the night be dark and gloomy and we grope as for the morning light we hear his sweet voice, "Hold fast that which thou hath." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne."

If we have committed the well-being of [illegible] unto him, let us yearn for his coming as expressed in the words we often sing,

"As a woman counts the days,
Till her absent lord she sees,
Waits and watches, weeps and prays,
So dear Lord we wait for Thee."

We wait for the High Priest to come forth and pronounce the benediction even life forevermore. We long to be made like our living head and to partake of honor, glory and immortality. We are eagerly looking forward to the time of thy coming with great power, to wrest the reins of government from the usurper which now corrupt the earth and institute a reign of righteousness, joy and peace. We are looking for and hastening unto the day of the Lord, when the earth shall be full of the glory of God as the waters cover the seas. We groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, the redemption of our bodies. We mourn because of the wickedness of the wicked, and see no hope but in Christ, the Sun of Righteousness who will put down all rule and authority. Like fathers of old we are strangers and pilgrims here, we have no continuing city, we seek one to come, the city of our God. We crave to be among the company that shall stand in thy presence and sing the new song, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and [illegible] be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the lamb forever and ever." We long to see thee face to face and to walk in the light of thy glorious countenance. We wait for the Lord, and as the prospective Bride are striving to make ourselves ready for the marriage of the Lamb.

Seeing then we have this blessed hope as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, let us draw near to God with a true heart, in full assurance of faith. "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works." "Let us look away unto Jesus who is the leader and perfecter of our faith," knowing that he is coming without a sin-offering unto salvation. Let us lift our hearts to him in humble gratitude, because he has revealed himself unto us as he has not unto the world. Let us go on from one degree of grace to another, then when the proclamation goes forth to "gather my saints unto me" we will be found worthy to enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Amen.

W. S. TOMLINSON.

Consideration.

The definition of the word consideration is serious thought in motive of action or words, or regard; and the meaning we would get from Heb x 24, "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works" is, thoughtfulness of one another.

There are several reasons why we should cultivate this one of the Christian graces. In the first place it is one of the principle virtues taught us in the Scriptures; there is need of our showing to the world real consideration, as there is so much pretense of it practiced; it also has a highly important part in the character we are building in Christ; it is a part of the character we will find to be useful in the future age; and then there is much to accomplished by it at the present time.

Now as to the practical part of consideration; Paul says in Phil ii 3, "In lowliness of mind, let each esteem other better than themselves." Now we all acknowledge that we have some faults; we do not like to acknowledge just what they are in detail, and would still less like to acknowledge them to others in public. Now, if we are going to follow Paul's instructions, how would it be? We think that much of ourselves, and if we esteem our brother better than ourselves, then what? Why, the word criticism and all that it means would be dropped entirely as far as we are concerned. And do you not think that living in loving consideration of each other would be one step higher in the divine life?

Then there is an object in being considerate as well as being unselfish; take any company of people, socially, politically, or in business life and study all of their doings, and figure what an important part consideration has in its smoothness of running; undoubtedly a great deal of it is not real consideration, but is carried on under a pretense; but we need not have any hesitation in picking out of the world that which is commended in the Word of God, and using what is pure and upright; and if that with which many things are accomplished will also exalt the truth it becomes our duty. To explain more fully, just try one day or one week to show some consideration in each thing you have to say and in all you have to do with others, and make some opportunity for so doing; pick out especially those who are given little consideration by others, and it will not be a Sunday school story merely, but will prove how much we may all carry the spirit of living the Gospel in genuineness. Then if we have opportunity of teaching any one the truth we will find it will be far more readily heard.

We are to consider one another in order to provoke unto love and good works. To incite good works in others is to uphold those good works in ourselves both in word and in deed. We are told to "Abhor that which is evil." Rom xii 9. To "Avoid the appearance of evil." 1 Thes v 22. To "Refuse evil and choose the good." Psa xxxvii 27.

This is spoken to each one, but we are not told to figure out the evil done by another; we are told to hold fast the Word of God and to warn others of the consequences of evil. There is just so much material, and just one building to go up, and if this material is divided, it will complete nothing; so there is work before us together. We are not to tear down, but to build each other up in our most holy faith, and to exhort one another. "Let us follow after the things wherewith one may edify another." Rom xiv 9.

There is related an account of a gentleman who took a position in a large church as organist; he was blind; he was a proficient musician, and he put his whole soul into the music for the praise of God, and week after week, and month after month he played, putting high inspiration into his music, but of that large congregation who listened each Sunday, not one spoke a word of appreciation to him. He could stand the silence no longer, and resigned; and one member said to him with chagrin, "Why are you going? Your music was an inspiration to me." He answered, "Why did you not say so; I needed inspiration too." And so we will find that no matter how well grounded we may be, nor how well we may be working out our salvation, we need inspiration and encouragement to go on to perfection. The idea is not that any one wants commendation for what little we can do in the Lord's work, neither do I think the musician did; what we all do need is the love and consideration of those who are fighting the same battle, and then we know that our part, however small, is fitting into the great building in Christ; for is not "all the building" to be "fitly framed together, growing unto an holy temple in the Lord"? "In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the spirit." Eph ii 21-22.

If, for no other reason we should be considerate of others, we ought to in order to show our appreciation of our Father's consideration of us. See Psa ciii 10 to 14, "He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him. As far as the east is from the west, so far has he removed our transgressions from us. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust."

I do not know what encouragement you need, but I know of my own need of cultivating more and more unselfishness in all I do. I know that the gracious provision is made by our Savior Jesus, who said: "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my fathers commandments and abide in his love." John xiv 10. And I know that I need both the love and consideration of you all to walk worthy of the high calling in Christ Jesus. May we all with this one object in view "Consider one another to incite unto love and good works."

"Their Angels."

Brother Huggins:

Not long since I attended the funeral of a little child that died in our neighborhood. A Presbyterian minister conducted the funeral services, and he took his text from Matt. xviii. 10, 13, to prove that the little one had gone to heaven. Please explain this Scripture. What is meant by "Their angels?"

Yours in search of truth.

MRS. A. J. MARTIN.

EDITOR'S REPLY.

With the 7th verse our Master begins a discourse on the subject of "offenses." Then with a "take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones" (verse 10) he begins to list reasons why we should not ignore, lightly esteem, and offend the "little ones" who are types of his own little children which "believe" (v. 6) They have "angels" which are interested in them. "Their angels;" not that children go to heaven and become angels themselves, but they have each "their (own) angel" as a guardian messenger (Psa. xxxiv. 7; Heb. i. 14.) In Jewish phraseology angels are styled Malukey Paulin, which means angels of the fall, allusion being made to the privileges granted by eastern monarchs to their favorites. Esther i. 14; 2 Kings xxv. 19; Jer. ii. 25. The angels of God's Court "behold the face of my Father which is in heaven;" that is, as the angels of his most intimate favor and presence (Isa. lxiii. 9) they "do his commandments, and hearken unto the voice of his Word." Psa. ciii. 20. Like the rest of the human family, children are lost, but the "Son of Man is come to save that which was lost" (v. 11;) and therefore through angelic media they are objects of God's solicitude. For illustrative purpose see Moses (Ex. ii. 3) and Jesus (Matt. ii.)

"They Say."

"They say!" That phrase has blasted more character and wrecked more homes than any other in the language. Call a halt on the peddler who comes at you with his wares—"They say." "Who says?" That hits the spot. You cannot afford to miss. The person who circulates a scandal is a vampire. He sucks life-blood. No combination of words in the language has caused more trouble, pain, and sorrow. Shadowy—it hits in the dark. It is anonymous. It is no personality. It cannot suffer any reaction. It is wholly irresponsible. The phrase ought to be put under the ban. It is this way: You speak to some one of a mutual acquaintance. There is a shrug of the shoulders or lifting of the eyebrows. Then a lowering of the voice, with the preface, "They say." Even when the gossip fails to give his authority, he has put an evil idea into your mind respecting the person he speaks of. You cannot rid yourself of the suggestion. The impression stays. The suspicion lurks. A great wrong is done. "They say." The ears that are eager for that always have the mouth to pass it on to other ears. The assassination of character has begun. What "they say" may sometimes be a true message. But is it a necessary message? Will it make the old world the better or worse for the telling? It is very plain that much suffering and sorrow might be prevented by cutting these ugly words clear out of the vocabulary.—Christian Advocate.

What the Bible Is to Me.

When I go to that book God speaks to me. I need no succession. I go at once to the fountainhead. It is not man that speaks. It is God who speaks, and he speaks to me as if there were but a single Bible on earth, and that Bible an angel had come down and bound upon my bosom. It is my Bible. It was written for me. It is the voice of God holding communion with my own soul, and never will I forfeit my right to commune with God.

Nor is that communion to be held before councils, or in open temples, or in the presence of sects and of priests, and through the intervention of others. It is an act to be transacted in the most secret sanctuary of the Lord. No sects, no priestly interference can be admitted. It is an affair between God and my soul: and as Abraham bid the young man abide with the ass at the foot of the mountain, so will I ascend and go to meet God alone upon the top.

That book is the book of God, and when I go out and commune with it I hold communion with my God. I am Moses, just comedown from the burning mountain, his face shining with joy and the glory of the Lord. I am Isaiah, and have come from the golden courts where the seraphim and cherubim shout hallelujah to the Lord God of hosts. I am Paul, and have seen the third heavens opened, and can tell what is uttered there, and have seen glories ineffable which no tongue can tell nor imagination conceive. I am John, and have laid my head upon the Master's bosom, and have caught, warm with his breath, the very whispers of the sweet counsel which he has breathed into my ear.

It is not from an intervention or interpretation of man that it derives its power. God gave it to me. He made it, and he has preserved it. It is still bread and food for all the world.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of The Restitution about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

The Bible: its Principles and Texts

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 399 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1 00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10623 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 95 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Wilow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

Please don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

Brother B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 366 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1 50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

A Letter to A Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will be made. Brothers and [illegible] cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when here is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

The article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs Susan Willis, [illegible] husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying, for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the first issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an ethelent wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in The Restitution some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of these small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisite of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Christ the Power of God and the Wisdom of God

Paul in writing to the Corinthian church among whom there were dissension said, "We preach Christ crucified unto the Jews a stumbling block and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto those who are called both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." 1 Cor i 23.

To a careless reader of Scripture there is but little in the statement that, Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God. To one who chooses to analyze language there is much in it. Jesus said, after his resurrection, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He is the source of our future life. He promised all who would believe on him that he would give them eternal life and he would raise them up at the last day. The life that we now live is the animal life and comes from a natural generation. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh. That which is born of the spirit is spirit." Here we have two distinct generations. One from the first Adam the other from the last Adam. The first is after the flesh, the second is after the spirit. Jesus taught his disciples, that the "flesh profiteth nothing." The creation is natural and can of itself go no higher. It may reach a maximum degree of perfection and purity that belongs to its class but can never of itself evolve into the spiritual. Corruption cannot inherit incorruption. This is a law of its class. It may reach the very highest point in perfection as an earth being as a product of the first Adam and still it is earthy. The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The natural man is placed under the environments of the natural world and must draw his correspondence from this world. He may be perfect in his class but can never get higher unless touched by a higher power. We see this in the natural world. It is divided into inorganic and organic. She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth. 1 Tim v 6. Paul again speaks of those who are dead in trespasses and sin. Those who belong to the natural world in comparing them to the spiritual world are inorganic or have no future he abiding in them. The inorganic matter is at rest unless a force drives it from without. Of itself it can do nothing. It can only be changed to organic by coming in contact with a higher force. It requires a life power to change it. The natural man can develop only along the line of his class. He is inorganic as long as his environments are of the natural world. His correspondences will be taken from this source. If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him. We must remember that he may become morally and physically perfect in his world. He may become a model man and still be of the world. Cornelius was a devout man and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always and still was in an unsaved condition. Here we have a man fully developed in a moral and a religious sense and yet without the promise of a future life.

It must be observed from this character that human perfection of itself gives us no claim to the promise of life through Christ. It makes us better prier in this life. We have under such conditions the promise of temporal blessings. The law of the Spirit of life hath made me free from the law of sin and death. The race was placed under the law of sin and death through the disobedience of the first Adam. Unless the law of the Spirit of life which is the gospel of Christ makes us free from the law of sin and death we die the death. We must have the power of the Spirit of life applied and then live the fruits of that life. We have changed our environments and correspond with these environments before we can develop into the higher Christian life. The life of Cornelius before he received the message from Peter was so nearly like the life of Christ that one can be mistaken for the other.

There is a mimicry in the religious world as well as the natural world. Certain organisms in one kingdom assume, for purposes of their own, the outward form of organisms belonging to another. This curious hypocrisy is practiced both by plants and animals, the object being to secure some personal advantage, usually safety. In Borneo there is an insect that assumes so perfectly the disguise of a moss covered branch as to evade the attack of insectivorous birds." It is said that the natives of this country have assumed the color of the foliage until it requires a practiced eye to discern the difference. Such is true in the religious world. Let us remember that unless the natural man takes hold of the man Christ Jesus he will forever remain natural or a flesh made man. The world religiously speaking is divided into Christian and not a Christian. Each of these classes have laws by which individuals are developed. The not-a-Christian can clothe himself in what seems to be a Christian garb. However if the test be applied skillfully it will be observed that the clothing is of a fig leaf character. They have been practicing mimicry. Their perfect character has been drawn from the world in which they live.

What we wish to show is that a sinner may dress himself up in a dress of a perfect moral life and still be a sinner. He becomes acquainted with the moral life of the Christ and copies it into his own life until his beauty is at the highest point in the world in which he lives. He has failed to apply the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. He has not washed away his sin by being baptized into the name of Christ. There must be a change of citizenship. Our relation to the first Adam must be changed to that of the last Adam. This can only be done through the law of the Spirit of life, which is the gospel and its requirements. Our affections must be changed. The apostle says, Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. Our affections are likened unto a field in which seeds are sown. If we are in the natural world the seeds that belong to that world will most readily propagate in that soil. If the desires of the natural man be for the Christian life the good seed of the kingdom may take root and grow. There are two conditions under which the good seed will take root. 1, The willingness of the soil to sprout the seed. 2, The desire and determination to cultivate the seed sown that conditions may be changed. The good seed will not take root and grow against adverse conditions. Every son and daughter of Jehovah has had the same struggle with receiving the first grain of truth. This is contrary to our preconceived ideas. We are unwilling to leave our father's house. We have been bound by the traditions of our fathers. We come to the point, that this step separates us from all whom we love. It often makes enemies of those of our own household. If all doubts are removed it must be from a desire to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. If one is able to reason himself out of the meshes and sophistries of this world he has changed his environments and has passed to a higher plane and is now able to say Our Father. He has passed the catastrophe of his whole life. It is not a mere incident but a catastrophe. The carnal mind has been destroyed. The spiritual mind has been attained and we are admonished to "walk ye in him." This transition has not been momentary. With many of us it lasted for years. It is to be regretted that many who started well failed to reach the higher plane. The god of this world blinded them. In viewing conditions as we do how necessary it is for us to draw our strength from the things that are above. Our correspondence must be with the God of our fathers.

Thus far we have shown that what is born of the flesh is flesh and remains that until touched by a higher power. Paul after stating that the carnal mind cannot be subject to the law of God says, If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Rom viii 11. This Spirit comes to us through faith in the gospel of the Son of God. There is no wisdom save that we get through Christ and him crucified that will give us the power that will raise us from the dead. Therefore the resurrection is the means to this end. Those who have qualified themselves will be accounted worthy of that resurrection and will become as the angels in heaven and can die no more. Paul's desire was that, If by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, let us so strive that we may in God's own time be privileged to enter into the glory awarded to those who have been faithful.

Your Brother striving for the resurrection.

The Unpardonable Sin.

It is recorded during the space of three and one half years when Jesus the Christ went about his Father's business on this mundane sphere, he encountered much opposition from the Pharisees, Sadducees, Herodians, and others. Throughout Judea and the region roundabout. This reprehensible conduct of the Lord's opponents was generously offset by the common folks everywhere he went. They gave him enthusiastic welcome, lauded his utterances, and wondrously admired his many miracles.

But the combined company of recalcitrants would not be appeased by any thing the Lord said or did. Because they had had a monopoly of mental honors, at least, claimed they had until the Lord appeared upon the scene, and intimated they were in error on points of law and very imperfectly understood the Scriptures. Their futile attempts to combat his objections, his searching questions and apt answers, only inflamed their inordinate jealousy still more, as when he turned water into "good wine," cured "the withered hand," scrupulously observed "the Sabbath day journey" limit, or keeping the Jewish law blameless. The malignity of their speech ever increased, smirching the standing of his brothers and sisters in their community, hinting they were well known and barely average people; so that they might scorn and scoff Jesus because of his plebian origin and resent a common carpenter in any way to venture on the same intellectual level with them.

But the lane is long which has no turn. For to this same Jesus, "There was brought unto him one possessed with a demon, blind and dumb and he healed him." One would naturally think a miracle like this openly and effectively performed ought to have stilled further babbling by the Savior's foes. Far from it. On the contrary, their delirium of their anxiety was quickened more, to brand the Christ as an imposter and belittle his every word and act. So they deliberately lied and published, "This man doth not cast out demons but by Beelzebub the prince of demons." Here was [illegible] belief of vindictive quality, not [illegible] styled "The insanity of unbelief." [illegible] scattered not to them that a wondrous miracle had been wrought, and the fact that better proof could not be furnished than when the man "spake and saw" out of whom the demons were cast. And so they committed wilful sin rather than be outclassed by the meek and lowly Jesus.

Eventually the Christ objected to the insinuations of his merciless critics, holding up a warning finger that they instantly desist from treading at once on sacred and dangerous ground, and here is what Jesus said: "All their sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and their blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme. But whosoever shall blaspheme against the Holy Spirit hath never forgiveness, but is guilty of an eternal sin." Guilty of what is commonly called "The unpardonable sin," which is a sin of compound texture, according to the narrative of falsehood, evil-speaking (or blasphemy) of unfaith, and blatant irreverence against God and the Holy Spirit; while the sinless Christ is derisively libeled as expert conjurer in the interest of Beelzebub, that alledged personage of many aliases by whom the great Physician Jesus was commissioned to perform all the astounding miracles credited to his name. But the imputation was the monstrous monstrings of wicked men which later culminated at Calvary yelling "away with him, crucify him."

It is true, that the drapery in and around the drama of that meeting where Jesus pronounced the irrevocable sentence, can never again be duplicated: because the motley crowd, the deaf and dumb man, the varied grades of faultfinders against the Lord, are all of them asleep in the dust long ago, and Jesus has assumed the office of Advocate for the human family at the bar of God the Father. Therefore the anxious enquirer asks, can the unforgivable sin be committed now, under changed conditions from what they were during the Savior's itinerary? Apparently there is no reasonable testimony but that this particular sin may be committed and if so it is hoped in very rare cases. For the sentence still hangs by a single hair like the sword of Damocles over the head of the unfortunate offender and may be strained to fall with retributive force.

Some poor mortals inclined to sentimentalism irrespective of the fact God's will must be done, think the ban on the sin unto death is excessive, when viewed in the limelight and splendor accompanying the joys of the soon coming kingdom, purchased by the full abandon of perfect love in Christ Jesus, for all who love his appearing and kingdom.

Editor Restitution:

As my subscription is out I enclose money to pay for renewal.

I have not made any converts here as yet, but I believe if some able man could come and hold meetings there might be some good done. We have a mixed lot of people of all denominations, and some who do not hold to any. There is no regular preaching by any one, only once in a while in the high school room that can be had almost any time.

I will close wishing you health and strength and success in this life, and what we hope for in the life to come. May we one and all enjoy it.

Your Brother in hope,

S. C. LEHMAN.

You may depend upon it, religion is in its essence the most gentlemanly thing in the world. It will alone gentilize, if unmixed with cant; and I do not know anything else that will.—Coleridge.

Sunday School Lesson.

March 5, 1911.

Elijah goes up by a Whirlwind into Heaven. 2 Kings ii 1-18

Golden Text.—"Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him." Genesis v. 24.

It seems from the history we have that Elisha was [illegible] the work that Elijah was doing, and in their association they had together he became very much attached to the older man. The time came for Elijah to be taken—when his work was to end—when he was to rest from the labors—when his work in the life was to close.

Usually at the coming of such an event in a man's life, he dies and is buried. Some have argued that because all men die—because man is by nature mortal and subject to death, that therefore Elijah must have died as do other men. It may be profitable if some are so inclined to take up the subject in this light and use the time allotted to a Sunday School lesson in this way. However, we will not discuss this matter here, but leave it for teachers to do as they wish, and simply refer to the text of the lesson stating that "when the Lord would take Elijah up into heaven by a whirlwind."

At this time Elisha was with Elijah at Gilgal. It seems that Elijah was impressed with the desire to take a trip to visit different sections, likely where there were certain schools of the prophets whom he wished to see. He told Elisha to stay where he was while he went away, but Elisha was not willing to have him go alone, so declared he would go too, and was permitted to do so.

They went to Bethel, and from there to Jericho, and at both these places their friends were impressed with the fact that Elijah was making his last visit with them, and Elisha was also so minded. From there they journeyed to the Jordan, and fifty of the young men went and watched them at a distance to see what became of them. There Elijah took his mantle and smote the water and it divided, and the two prophets went over dry shod.

Elijah asked Elisha what he should give him before he was taken away, and Elisha said that a double portion of his spirit be upon him. The old prophet told him he had asked a hard thing, but that if he should be able to stay with him to the end, he would be given his desire. While they went on and talked there appeared a chariot of fire and horses of fire, and they were separated, and Elijah vanished in a whirlwind into heaven.

His mantle falling from him was taken by Elisha, and by the same means that they had passed over Jordan did he return, and met the other prophets who had been watching. They thought that Elijah was lost in the wilderness, and proposed to go in search and find him, and fifty of them all strong men, sought three days but failed to get trace of him.

There is to most minds an air of mystery as to what became of Elijah, but we should seek to present the fact that Elijah was an overcomer. His life was full of victory, not only over sin and evil, but over self, and it is the life that is so rounded out and made to serve in every place the Lord instead of self—the life devoted fully and entirely to God and his cause, that can come when finished into the presence of God without fear. Elijah at times as we have seen, was seemingly defeated—discouraged and down hearted, yet when the Lord spoke to him, and conveyed a message, Elijah took up the burden laid on him, and went forward in the discharge of his duty. He did not hold back and try to get out of doing what the Lord wanted him to do. Such a life therefore is the kind that will be approved, such can God use in a coming age, so such a man does the Lord "take" and keep.

While Israel still did evil in the sight of God, yet there were signs of reform, though the hearts of the people were hard, and their lives crooked. Of one thing we are sure, Elijah had ever stood boldly for the truth, and while his life was sought, and he was often prompted to hide from personal danger, yet when the Lord told him to go forth and meet this danger, he did not hesitate, but went.

The best born son in the olden time was to have what was termed "a double portion," and so Elisha asks for a [illegible] that he might be given a double portion that he might the better be fitted to take up the great work that Elijah had outlined would be necessary in following up the reforms that were to be attempted for Israel. If Elisha could endure to see the end if his vision were clear enough to enable him to see Elijah in his last moments his request would be granted. So suddenly as by a whirlwind, with the power and appearance of God manifested, was the separation made, and Elisha was left alone, God having taken Elijah.

Elijah had faced monarchs who were wrought up to a furious pitch, heathen priests, and an idol worshiping people had confronted him, and the desire of his heart had not been fully realized, yet the points that stand out in his life show him to be brilliant and powerful like the fire, strong and swift as the chariot in battle, and resistless as the whirlwind: so with these symbols so fitting, he is taken away by the Lord. Elisha by having such full spiritual vision has as an added gift more power bestowed. This principle is true today as it was then. The more you do for God's cause the more you can do. Strength is given as naturally as the blacksmith's hammering increases his ability to hammer. Elijah's life was one of victory. Will yours end so? His life was the life of an overcomer. Is your life like his? Do you allow the little things of life that you meet every day—that you will meet this coming week—to overcome you? or do you fight so that you are victor when evening comes? If you are like Elijah, victor over all, then like him God will in his own good time take you into his presence there to remain and enjoy the glories that are unending. What will be the end of your life—like Elijah or like Ahab? It is yours to choose today what sort of ending your life will have. May you choose aright.

Dear Brother Underwood:

We now send you the list of names that we promised. We rejoice that we have these names to send you, as we want to do all we can to sow the good seed, and also help to support our much loved paper that has been so faithful in spreading the good news of the soon coming kingdom. May it continue to bear this dear message to loved ones till Jesus comes.

We feel there is quite a responsibility resting on the one who must judge as to what shall go in the paper, and we hope you will be very careful in this respect. We would say to those who write for our paper so sacred to God's family, please help to lighten the burden. We think it could be made lighter if each one would bear in mind that what is written for a family paper should be for the building up of God's children, and for the instruction and benefit of others whom we are trying to lead to the true light of the gospel. Besides there are new members being added to the family all the time, and they should be encouraged and instructed, so that they will not become discouraged and fall out by the way, and for their sakes all should be in harmony with God's revealed will.

With well wishes to all, we remain as ever,

Your Brother and Sister in Christ,
MR & MRS. W. H. EDEMILLER.

A single indication of the vast wealth now controlled by our banks alone was to be seen in a recent issue of a leading Boston daily. On the front page of one issue of this paper was the statements of three banks showing aggregate resources of over $225,000,000. A like number of some New York banks would greatly increase the figures.

Brother Lathrop calls our attento an error in last week's paper where he is made to say the capital of the Sultan of Turkey is situated northeast of Palestine. Brother Lathrop is a Surveyor and civil engineer, and understands directions, and tells that reference to a map will show that Constantinople is about 695 miles from Jerusalem in a northwesterly direction. Also he says the clipping he sent was from the Tri-Weekly World, instead of the Twice-a-Week World. We thank our Brother for this correction.

Suppose one brother has a grievance with another brother, and in the settlement letters are exchanged in which satisfactory adjustment is made and the last letters indicate only the heat of wishes and feeling. Suppose later on one party in the case is told by some one outside that he has fared badly in the settlement made—What according to Scripture, is the course the aggrieved one should pursue? Is it his duty to again open negotiations privately with the one who is said to have wronged him? Or should he use every endeavor to spread the word that the other brother had defrauded him? Which is the scriptural course? Which will God approve? The one might possibly result in readjustment that would be mutually agreeable—the other will surely cause division—strife. Which will God sanction?

On February 16, Russia sent China an ultimatum. It refers to a treaty between the two nations made in 1881, relating to Russian rights in the district of Ili north of Tibet, in Chinese Turkistan. The claim is made by the Chinese that this treaty according to Russian interpretation is unjust, and was not intended at the time. Now Russia threatens armed invasion of the territory if her claims are not allowed. Of course the Chinese army is in no condition to fight Russia, and the concession will be made unless the other powers interfere. Of course Germany will not take an active stand against Russia at this time, and a protest from any other nation might not avail. This gives Russia a chance to advance her troops another step on to the coveted goal. Japan advances into Manchuria from the south and Russia from the north, under the pretext of protection of interests in places where the plague has unsettled conditions. This whole movement is in harmony with the plan of national combinations and development as set forth in the prophetic word. Watch the signs develop.

A few months ago what was called a Chapman-Alexander religious campaign was worked off in Chicago, and other similar efforts were made in various localities. Brother W. H. Wilson mentioned something about this movement in one of his articles, telling of a special building erected for accommodation of the vast crowds who attended. The aim was to stimulate interest in religion and religious work, and from the thousands who were "converted" at these meetings, and the intense interest manifested, great things were expected. There has been an investigation by the organ of the Methodist Church, with a view to ascertaining what good has come to that denomination on this account, and the reply made to the set of questions sent out is startling. There were forty Methodist ministers in and about Chicago whose congregations were in the work, and their replies show disappointment. Many were of the opinion that the "net result was it had scattered the evening prayer meeting, had failed to benefit the evening service, and had made no addition to the Sunday school or the regular attendance." Twenty-two of the forty reported no additions to the membership. Thirty-five had no increase in Sunday school. Thirty-six report no increase at morning, and thirty-eight have no increase at evening services. Thirty-five have no increase at their mid-week prayer meetings. One prominent minister wrote "The prevailing opinion seems to be that we are glad we had the meetings and are glad they are over. If this experience will cause each pastor and church to feel that such matters can best be attended to by each doing his own work in his own way, should say the meetings are worth while." A very doubtful conclusion, indeed. Is something wrong with the world, or is the fault with the nominal church?

In a recent census taken to ascertain the number of Catholics in the United States it is shown that we have 14,618,761. This does not include those in the Philippines and other island possessions. There are 17,084 priests and 18,461 churches. They have 4,972 schools with 1,270,131 scholars, besides 225 colleges for boys and 696 academies for girls, and 82 ecclesiastical seminaries.

The following concerning Palestine we extract from an article clipped in such a way as to lose its credit.

Prof. Richard Gottheil of Columbia University, and director of the American school of archaeology in Jerusalem, believes that the time will soon come when Palestine will be in fact what the Hebrew Scriptures say in poetry it once was "a land flowing with milk and honey." The professor says that changes will have to come before this is realized, but he believes that the changes will come. When a friend suggested there would have to be a change in the soil as well as in the government, he replied that appearances were often deceitful in Turkey as well as America, and that what appeared to be rock on the hillsides of Judea was in reality a fertilizer in a rock form.

Professor Gottheil is a truthful man but a truthful man is sometimes called on to explain statements which seem contrary to facts, and he says the soil of Palestine is peculiar. It is remarkably fertile, as the primitive methods of cultivation show. If so much can grow as does grow with the mere scratching which the ground receives, how much might be produced if modern methods were employed? Further, the olive roots especially will find soil if the tiny root can work its way through a crevice in the rock.

I have seen trees growing where absolutely no dirt was visible, but in some way the roots had reached soil and obtained a foothold, and the trees bore fruit.

What is more remarkable still is the fact that there is in the rocks which one sees on these hillsides, chemical properties which correspond with the ingredients in the best fertilizers, and these rocks decompose from time to time, so that what seems so forbidding from an agricultural point of view is really going back into the soil as manure. There is an institution in Jerusalem founded to give work to poor Hebrews, whose manager actually pounds up this soil, not waiting for it to decompose, and he produces very fine crops as a result of the mixture. Several cases might be cited where hillsides may be made to bear, not exactly forests, but sufficient trees to prove my contention that a great future awaits this country, when conditions now prevalent are changed; and they will be changed, for a new spirit is in the air and in the government as well.

Professor Gottheil is giving special attention to the Mohammedan inscriptions, and is receiving much courtesy from the Moslems. Incidently he is cataloging rare manuscripts and books in the libraries, and is visiting various parts of the country getting acquainted with present-day conditions, as well as to help to improve them. That there is need for improvement, even his optimism is obliged to admit. Not long ago a band of men and boys stoned his carriage within twenty-five miles of Jerusalem, when his wife was riding with him. While the experience was very mortifying as well as dangerous, Mr. Gottheil had an explanation rather than censure for their act. They were off the beaten line of travel, and did not meet many foreigners; when they had come more in contact with Europeans there would be no danger of such occurrences.

Jerusalem is growing, and it is becoming cleaner. Great improvements are taking place: Imagine a sprinkling cart in the City of David! This does not mean that every street is sprinkled, or that there are no dirty streets, but it does mean that the proverb, "Cleanliness is next to godliness" applied to streets contiguous to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and to the mosque of Omar. Large buildings have been erected, and some are in process of erection. The Germans have constructed a fine hospital, the latter between Mt. Scopus and the Mount of Olives. The German crown prince is to come from his home especially to open this great hospital.

"There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart—never to believe anything bad about anybody unless you positively know it to be true; never to tell even that, unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary, and that God is listening while you tell it."

Communicated.

Gog of Ezekiel xxxviii.

In the above chapter it is written, "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meseeh and Tubal; and I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army," etc. We could not well conceive of a righteous God who would not be against such a barbarous and deceptive power as Russia is. It is as the Japanese statesman said; a treaty with Russia is not worth the paper it is written on. The point I wish to notice is that it is written, "I will turn thee back and put hooks into thy jaws." This of necessity is prior to his coming with his mighty army into the holy land.

In the decade from 1850 to 1860 the Crimean war was fought by England, France and Sardinia against Russia, to prevent Russia from gaining Constantinople from the Turk. This time Russia was marching south, but was "turned back." Later on as soon as Russia had recovered financially from the war in the Crimea, she made war again on Turkey, the fighting being mostly in the Balkans, finally she got the Turks in full retreat towards Constantinople when England and Germany interfered and Russia was again "turned back." Again we all remember the Russia-Japanese war in which the Japanese hook was firmly planted in the Russian jaw, and Russia was again "turned back." How superabundantly has this Scripture been fulfilled. It will now take Russia some years to recover from her late war before she will make another move which in all probability will be her last in which she will come to her end, and none shall help her. The agency that gathers the nations to the great and final war of this age is the three unclean spirits like frogs of Rev xvi 13. They come out of the mouth of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet. Therefore they are not so many individual evil spirits, but they appear as symbols of the unclean greed, and selfishness of the powers named. Now the question comes up for our solution before we can intelligently understand the prophecy, we must know who is the dragon, who is the beast, and who is the false prophet? The serpent in the Bible used to represent some gigantic power, crafty and malignant. In this case we must confine ourselves to its use in the Apocalypse.

The term dragon and the beast are frequently used in chapters 12 and 13. The false prophet by that name only in chapter xix 20. The red dragon of chapter xii is the same power as Daniel's fourth beast of Dan vii 7. We learn this by his ten horns. He is also the devil of Rev ii 10 who casts some of the saints into prison. But you say the leopard beast of chapter xiii has also the ten horns, and therefore represents the fourth beast of Dan vii 7. How can they both be identical with the fourth beast of Dan? The answer is that the fourth beast is said to be "diverse from all the beasts that were before it." The difference is in the fact that it passed through seven different phases, represented by the seven heads. In consequence of the war between Michael and the dragon Rev xii which cast the dragon out of the Roman heaven and in consequence of the defeat of the dragon Paganism was suppressed and a form of Christianity was established as the religion of the empire. Therefore the necessity for a change in the symbol, from the dragon the leopard beast, both symbols represent the same empire but under separate and distinct forms or phases of the power.

In this change in the religion of the empire we see the passing of what hindered the rise of the man of sin. 2 Thes ii 7. The dragon in the Bible is represented as a cruel tyrant, in opposition to the saints; used as a metaphor for heathens or pagans. As in Psa xci 13, "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet." And in Ezek xxix 3, "Speak and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers."

In Rev xii Pagan Rome is represented by a great red dragon intent to devour the manchild. After the empire changed its religion, it is no longer represented by the dragon; but by what is in the 13th chapter called, "the beast." Therefore we conclude that for all time, the Dragon represents heathenism—paganism; and inasmuch as the Roman Empire after it adopts Christianity is represented by the symbol of a beast like a leopard (chap xiii 1), which is after this designated, "The beast." As in chapter xiii "All the world wondered after the beast." "Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him? That this beast represents Rome in its Christian phase is proven beyond question, because Rome incorporated into her empire the people and territory of Babylon, Medo-Persia and Grecce. Therefore "the mouth as the mouth of a lion (Babylon)," "his feet as the feet of a bear (Med-Persia)." Himself "like unto a leopard (Grecia). "The beast" excludes the dragon from Rome as a symbol—the dragon as an enemy or adversary is in evidence in chapter xx so is "the beast" and his image See verse 4.

Therefore we are bound to conclude that the dragon as one of the symbols in Rev xvi 13 out of whose mouth comes one of the unclean spirits like frogs is the representative of China whose standard is the dragon, including other pagan nations.

"The beast" out of whose mouth comes another of the unclean spirits like frogs is Romanism, a mixture of paganism and Christianity, including Russia who is as said W. L. Skeels, "It is Russia that has alone the characteristics of the beast with ten horns." They were one with Rome until the middle of the eleventh century. Last but not least is the question, who is the false prophet? The term "false prophet" I think is first used in Rev xvi 13 out of whose mouth come one of the unclean spirits whose mission is to gather the nations to the final contest. He is referred to again in chapter xx 10. But the key to his identity is found in chapter xix 20, "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image." Here we find without doubt reference to the two horned beast of chapter xiii 11-18. Where he is working miracles in the sight of the beast, forming an image to the beast, and giving life to the image, etc.

Rome Christian and papal is described in the first part of chapter xiii. After the passing of paganism in the last part of the fourth century that is in the Roman empire. Verse 1 describes the rise of beast. Verse 2 describes his likeness, his power and authority. Verse 3 the wounding and healing of one of his heads, and the extent of his worship. The wounding of one of his heads was by sword of the northern invaders in the 4th and 5th centuries, ending in the fall of the empire A. D. 476. The head that was wounded to death was the imperial head. Life then lingered in the empire under the Exarchs of Ravenna, until the rise of the papacy in the sixth and seventh centuries, which is in the fifth verse described as a mouth given to the beast. All you have to do to prove this fact is to compare the acts of this beast after the reception of the mouth with the blasphemous acts of the little horn of Dan vii 8 and verse 25. Some writers call the little horn the eleventh horn which is true. The saints are given into his hand, for a time, times and the dividing of time—in symbolic prophecy 1260 years. Notice now in Rev xiii 5, the same verse in which the mouth is said to be given to the beast; that it is written, "and power was given unto him to continue (margin, to make war) forty and two months; the same 1260 years that are given to the little horn of Daniel.

Now I think the ground is cleared so we can proceed to examine the "false prophet" of xiii 11-18. We are here in the midst of symbols, the first of which is the earth out of which the beast comes, unlike the other beast that came from these. Now of what from a Bible point of view is the "earth" a symbol? I answer, it is a symbol of democracy—common people. Proof Deut xxxii 1, "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth." Here the rulers are the heavens, and the earth, the common people. Hosea ii 21, "And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezreel."

Isa xlix 13, "Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; Rev xii 16 reads, "And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. An understanding of this last quotation will be all that is necessary in order to know what the earth is a symbol of. In this chapter we have the account of the persecution of the woman by the dragon. The dragon is determined to blot out the Christian name. Now keep in your mind the earth is the symbol of the common people. God in his providence is preparing better days for the woman." In the year 306 Constantius Chlorus dying in Britain, the army sainted, with the title of Augustus, his son Constantine, surnamed afterwards the Great on account of his illustrious exploits, forced him to accept the purple." Mosheim p. 78 Sec. 5. Constantine in his victorious march from France to Rome was hailed by the people as their deliverer from the tyranny of their rulers. And by giving liberty of worship relieved the Christians from pagan persecution; and in this way, the earth helped the woman, and by defeating their persecuters in battle—figuratively—"Swallowed up the flood, that the dragon cast out of his mouth."

Now we know what is symbolized by the two horned beast "coming out of the earth." He is a Democratic or Republican nation. The testimony in Daniel foreshadows Democratic nations. The clay of the image is democracy, it is mixed with the iron in Europe, but does not adhere one to the other. The clay is having a hard time in Russia. Switzerland, France and the United States with South America are clay nations. If the clay is not formed into nations how could it be broken with the gold, iron, and the silver. Dan ii 35. That the two horned symbol represents a democratic state is indicated by the language in verse 14, "Saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast." The people being consulted in the formation of the image indicates democracy. The image is not an image to the papacy, but is an image to the form of Christianity existing in the Roman empire after the passing of paganism, and before the rise of the papacy. The faith of the orthodox Protestant of today is the same as the faith of the Catholics of the 4th and 5th centuries. Therefore how far have they got to proceed before they will form an image or likeness to the Roman church symbolized by the beast, and enforced by his authority? At this time the power of Church and State was vested in the emperor. Therefore we find in A. D. 380 Theodocious, the emperor, giving out his edicts. Saying, "Let us believe the sole deity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; under an equal majesty, and a pious Trinity. We authorize the followers of this doctrine to assume the title of Catholic Christians; and we judge that all others are extravagant madmen, we brand them with the infamous name of heretics;.....they must expect to suffer the severe penalties, which our authority, guided by heavenly wisdom, shall think proper to inflict upon them." I cannot conceive of anything that could more plainly reveal "the mark of the beast," than this edict of the emperor Theodocius. The followers of that doctrine then and now are strictly speaking idol worshipers. And it is not strange that Catholic, Greek, and Protestant all teach the doctrine of a triune God.

In conclusion will say, let us not teach that Christ may come any day. But remember that Paul said, "That day shall not come except.....the man of sin be revealed," that is there was then as there is now prophetic utterance yet to be fulfilled first. The image to "the beast" has to be made, and the saints will yet feel the hand of persecution before the Lord comes. Read carefully the following Scriptures Rev vi 11 and xv 2 and xx 4. While I believe firmly that are in the last half of the last century of Gentile times, yet it is plainly revealed that the end will not come until after the saints suffer persecution by the power symbolized by the two horned beast. Watch the movement for the confederation of all the Protestant churches.

Geo. Francis.

To be anxious for souls and yet not impatient, to be patient and not indifferent; to bear the infirmities of the weak without fostering them, to testify against sin and unfaithfulness and the low standard of spiritual life, and yet to keep the stream of love free and full and open, to have the mind of a faithful loving shepherd, a hopeful physician, a tender nurse, a skillful teacher, requires the continual renewal of the Lord's race.

Speak well of the absent whenever you have a suitable opportunity. Never speak ill of them or of anybody unless you are sure they deserve it, and unless it is necessary for their amendment, or for the safety and benefit of others.—Hale.

Under Subjection.

Dear Bereans:

The time will come when all things will be under subjection to the will of God through Christ Jesus.

In Heb ii 8 we read, "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him," but in the last clause of the same verse we read, "But now we see not yet all things put under him." But it was so ordained of God that it should be, but when will this be and why not now? These questions might naturally come to us if we are anxiously watching and praying for these things to come to pass.

But Paul tells us in 1 Cor xv 23, "Every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." So I believe that all of us that may subject ourselves unto the will of Christ by obedience to his commands will be at his coming and when the sufficient number is taken out he will come, "for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." 1 Cor xv 25. So dear Bereans, let us strive to keep ourselves under subjection to the will of Christ by studying his Word and obeying his commands, and escape many painful experiences that the worldly person might have by leading a sinful life. And as the safety of our lives, liberty and prosperity depends upon our subjection to the laws of our land, so, also, our eternal life depends upon our subjection to the commands, or laws of God. Let us strive to so live that we may be one at his coming.

Be Ready.

When Paul was entreated by some of his friends not to go to Jerusalem, lest he should be put to death, he answered them: "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." Acts xxi 13.

While we can worship without fear of molestation, let us be ready to defend and scatter the good news.

In 1 Pet iii 15 we read: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

Christianity requires attention and diligence if we would not lose our crown. While the foolish virgins were gone to buy oil for their lamps, the bridegroom came and they who were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

Anna M. Wertz.

"And with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

There never were truer words spoken than the above. We find it out every day we live. We receive the measure that we give; scant if we give scant measure; full to overflowing if that is what we give to others, we always get it back. Friendship is the best treasure of life. To be surrounded by good friends, satisfies a great desire and is a treasure which belongs to the friendly. It is the blessing of those who care for others. Therefore, all our kind words and thoughts are repaid with interest, and especially when we cultivate a habit of estimating actions according to the better than to the worse and speak well rather than ill of others. Thus kindliness is an investment, as is also criticism and each is paid back in its own coin, with interest.

Obituary.

Mrs. Edith Asher Wilder died Feb. 11, 1911, aged 10 years and 8 days.

The writer immersed her near Phoenix, Arizona, May 25, 1907. She remembered her Creator in the days of her youth. The lesson selected in the home from which she was carried to her grave, the lesson from which her hope was taken, was 1 Thess. iv. 13 to end. The many weeping relatives and friends caused the speaker to select John xi. 35 "Jesus wept." In order to further awaken confidence in our hope of the exercise of his power love was dwelt on for a short time, and the beloved was taken twelve miles to the Greenwood Cemetery near Phoenix, and left there in her painless sleep till Jesus returns to exercise his limitless power.

Some twenty-four well-filled conveyances made up the company that had traveled twelve miles to bid a last good by to the sleeping place of this young saint.

How to Preach so No One will be Converted.

Study to please and thus secure a big reputation.

Preach lots on popular, sensational themes—avoid referring to essential doctrines of salvation.

Denounce sin in the abstract, but appear not to see the sin of your own congregation.

Preach often on the love of God; but never hint that God is a consuming fire.

Discourse again and again on the universal Fatherhood of God and Brotherhood of man, and thus slyly do away with the necessity of the new birth.

Join all the secret societies of your town.

Be liberal. Admit there are good men and Christians in all churches. Let your church be a get-together place for Jews, Romanists, Christian Scientists, and all classes of Unitarians, and by "union" help lift up humanity.

Make religion attractive, progressive and up-to-date. Split up the church into worldly clubs and societies for the sake of fun. Instead of meeting for prayer, meditation and worship let them "sit down to eat and to drink, and rise up to play."

Speculative?

Many good things in your book, "The Bible, Its Principles and Texts," but pardon me for stating one thing about it which I feel; sometimes you (while plausible and logical) become — shall I say speculative? An instance on page 114, about what became of the risen saints. The article is ably written, and you may be right that they came forth mortal, but as there is nothing about that point in the Inspired Record, the article, full as it is of good logic, shrewd reasoning, etc., is yet "speculative."—D. L.

EDITOR'S REPLY.

The article objected to is a response to Bro. C. A. Thomas, answering his question, "What Became of the Risen Saints?" We quote verbatim from our book, page 114, the whole article as follows:

"We transcribe entire the 52nd and 53rd verses: "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." When Christ, "yielded up the spirit" (verse 50,) there came a terrific earthquake (v. 51.) Extraordinary rents and fissures are still visible in the rocks near the cross where Christ died. By the earthquake several bodies that had been buried were thrown up and exposed to view, and continued above ground till after Christ's resurrection, and were seen by many persons in the city. Like the two witnesses in Rev. xi. 8, 11, their "dead bodies" lay "in the streets of the great city" for "three days and a half" before the "spirit of life from God entered into them." Notice that the writer is particular to state that they "came out of the grave after his resurrection;" not before as some have thought, for Christ is the "first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. xv. 20. Thus was established the truth of our Lord's resurrection in particular, and the resurrection of his body in general. Christ, be it remembered, was the "first that should rise from the dead." Acts xxvi. 23; 1 Cor. xv. 20; Col. i. 18; Rev. i. 5. Christ was not the "first" to emerge from the grave in mortal nature; Nain's son, Jairus' daughter, Lazarus, and the man who "revived and stood upon his feet" when he touched the bones of Elisha (2 King xiii. 21,) were all re-eucitated to mortal life before Christ's resurrection. He, however, was the first to emerge from the death state immortal. All resurrections before his, and any that occurred with his, must have been revivals to natural life. With this principle settled, we cannot go wrong when we say that the saints who came out of the grave when he was raised, merely emerged from the death state in mortality. And the record of what they did after they were raised, the design or end in view of the resurrection; confirms this interpretation: they "went into the holy city (Jerusalem,) and appeared to many." No one would believe in such an extraordinary thing as the resurrection of Christ unless attested by infallible proofs. As God knew this, you can easily see the design he had in raising these saints when Christ was raised, and sending them to the "holy city," to remain there as living witnesses, like Lazarus, and "appear unto many" in that capacity. 1 Cor. 15th chapter read with this thought in mind appears in a new and beautiful light."

Read above remarks several times, reader, and see if you think it is fair to call them "speculative." Remember our book is made to study, not merely "to read." It is brief to a fault. Travelers in high altitudes make use of a highly concentrated food called Pemmican. Its compressed fattiness and pungent juniper flavor are not available, however, until it is moistened and warmed. So with "The Bible, Its Principles and Texts:" read merely it is a dry and choking morsel; studied thoroughly it will prove to be a savory mess. What at first was thought to be speculative reasoning after mature thought will be seen as actual truth. Let us see in the present instance.

All admit that Christ was "The first" to rise from the dead. Acts xxvi. 23. That he is the "firstfruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. xv. 20. "Every man in his own order," says the apostle Paul in his masterly argument on the resurrection. We are in no danger of speculating when we follow the "order" of resurrection Paul here lays down. Here it is:

I. "Christ the firstfruits."

II. "Afterward (the next) they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 23.

III. "Then the end." V. 24.

The saints spoken of in Matt. xxvii. 52, 53, came out of their graves "after his resurrection." After Christ's resurrection Paul's "order" requires that none can be raised as the harvest till "his coming." Thus the matter is settled by Paul's "order," not by our speculations.

Danger of Riches.

The Word of God does not make any definite arguments concerning the reasons for its being so difficult for a rich man to get into the kingdom.

Certain it is that those of God's children who have been blessed by him with an abundance of this world's goods, have increased temptations of all kinds, and much more have increased responsibility to him for stewardship.

I can see no justification in the accumulation of more than we need unless it be [illegible] a certain end in view of bettering [illegible]rs than ourselves. After discoursing on the evils of wealth and stating that the love of money is the root of all evil, which some have coveted often and have been seduced from the faith, Paul tells Timothy and us as well, to flee these things and follow after righteousness. However, we have examples of rich men of whom David was chief, whose lives were approved by God.

Probably the chief danger lies in the deceitfulness of riches as Christ says. They seem to promise much more than they are worth in the sight of God; they promise us power to do services for God that we imagine we cannot do without them.

Any selfish reasons for the attainment of riches brings one within the scope of God's anger, for the fool that layeth up treasures for himself, Christ says, and is not rich toward God will find his soul required of him. What does rich toward God mean? If God gives us an income of $1000.00 a year, can $1.00 a Sunday be considered the most that is required of one? Did any one ever experience any feeling of loss when even in the straights of poverty, a tenth was given to his service? If one can give a tenth of a small income, then surely a quarter tithe ought to be rendered from a large income? This then is one of the dangers of riches, the failure to give unto God his due of that he has blessed us with. We cannot give anything to God as a gift, for David says in Psa. xxiv. 1, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof."

Another danger of riches is the looking down upon those in poorer circumstances. Unconsciously this seems to steal into the habits of even the best intentioned. Things sanctioned by the business world are by no means sanctioned of God. As one's wealth increases to any great extent, investments must be made that when resolved into their details means oppression and injustice; riches give their possessor a confidence in their worldly future and alas, the one great future is too often forgotten when one knows that in the bank are funds sufficient for all earthly needs.

The foolish and hurtful lusts which Paul tells us drown rich men in destruction can be conceived to be largely those of rivalry, there is always something that is wanting possessed by those of a little more wealth, and so step by step covetousness creeps in and spirituality creeps out.

Christ says, Woe unto you that are rich, for ye have received your consolation. Luke vi. 24.

A rich man is never certain of his friends and with misfortune learns sadly that it was his possessions his friends loved and not himself.

The rich have a much greater circle of acquaintances among whom to spread the truth, but too often the result of constant association with worldly friends lessens the brilliancy of the light which ought to thereby shine the brighter.

In conclusion, let us quote Solomon, "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him." Pro. xxviii. 22.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver or gold, for we brought nothing into the world and it is certain that we carry nothing out, and having food and raiment let us therewith be content." 1 Tim. vi. 7.

How little we really need in this world, if we could be more content, and is it not a strange thing that the more we have the more we desire?

Let each of us strive for the riches and wealth that cannot pass away, and may the Word of God dwell in us richly, that at our Lord's return we may all be ready to meet him.

EMILY GROVES.

Foolish Excuses.

Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God. A certain man made a great supper, and bade many, and sent his servant to bid them come, for all things are now ready, Luke xiv. 15-24. Those bidden began to make excuse.

Now what is a foolish excuse? It is one that is absurd, or marked with folly, or silly, or indiscreet. The first excuse, I have bought a piece of land and must needs go and see it, was an indiscreet excuse. Because he had bought ground, and if had never seen it, it made no difference, he had already bought it, and it would not perish nor run away. He could have eaten many suppers, and it would not affect his title to the ground in the least, so his excuse was very needless and hasty.

The next, I have bought five yoke of oxen and I go to prove them, was a silly excuse, because he had already bought the oxen, and as far as I can see there was no need of proving them just at that moment. It showed disrespect to the man that gave the supper.

The third I do not think gave a foolish excuse. He had married a new wife, and if she was not invited, I think the man was not foolish in refusing. The old Jewish law was, when a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business; but he shall be free at home one year, and shall cheer up his wife which he hath taken, Deut. xxiv. 5. From the reply of that man we think he was a Jew and was living up to their law. He does not say like the rest, Pray have me excused, but he says, I cannot come.

We think the lesson is intended to teach us when we have heard the gospel, in its purity, and have learned that salvation and eternal life are offered to all that will come to Jesus, it is our duty to accept the gracious invitation and come. Jesus says Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door I will come in to him, and will sup with him; and he with me. Can any one refuse to open the door of their heart when they hear his knock and voice? How can they hear his voice? By becoming his sheep. I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved. I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep. They shall hear my voice. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, Heve[illegible]i. 20; John x. 4, 9, 16 24.

Peter on the day of Pentecost had preached the gospel of salvation to the people. They heard the knock and voice and were converted, and asked What shall we do? Peter answered, Repent and be baptized, and about 3000 souls did not make any foolish excuse, but went forward and obeyed Peter's command.

By so doing they entered the door of the good shepherd. They sleep now in the grave, but the Good Shepherd is soon coming in the clouds, with a voice that his sheep will hear, and they will arise out of their graves to meet their Shepherd, and so shall they ever be with him.

Do not the people of today make as foolish excuses as they did 1900 years ago? Certainly they do. We sometimes hear a young man say, I believe the doctrine taught by this Church, and would like to join it, but Susie belongs to another Church, and if I cannot get her to join this, think I will join hers. A very common and foolish excuse. Why? Because there is but one true gospel, and Paul preached that gospel, and said anyone that preached another should be accursed. We know it is a gospel that is despised and very unpopular, but the time is very near at hand when it will be the only gospel in the earth, and will be very popular. So accept it, and let us see to it that we make no foolish excuses.

E. W. KNAPP.

Debts.

A brother calling attention to Paul's command, "owe no man anything," and Christ's words "from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away;" says: "Some seem to be of opinion that the latter renders the former null and void, and are ready to borrow for purposes of speculation.—My view is: That we should not borrow unless compelled by dire necessity—caused by circumstances over which we have no control, such as a want of employment, sickness, etc., and that a brother under such circumstances should (if applied to and has the wherewithal) not turn away. On the other hand, if asked for the purpose of paying debts incurred in speculation, he would be justified in not lending, as the speculation if a failure, might become the lender's loss, and not borrower's, and might disable him from providing things honest in the sight of all men. I have a horror of borrowing myself, and an old adage is, that if you want to convert a friend into an enemy, lend him money."

These remarks are self-evident discreet. Paul's advice to keep out of debt is not inconsistent with the merciful attitude prescribed by Christ to those who may be in a position to help the distressed. On the other hand, Christ's command to be ready to help will never be used by a true man as a pretext for evading the words of Paul which are of equal authority. A righteous man will be as afraid of burdening his neighbor as he will be of getting into debt. As to debt, it is often asked whether the modern system of credit is inconsistent with Paul's command. Attention to the context ought to dissipate anxiety on this point. Paul is commanding the payment of dues. "Render to all their dues; tribute to whom," etc. This is equivalent to commanding the payment of debt, for a "due" is a debt. Do not put off the meeting of your obligation. Paul does not forbid the incurring of obligations, but the punctual discharge of them when due. Your rent is not "due" till a certain day. Your quarterly account is not due till the end of the three months; so in business, if a man give you goods on credit (which of course you won't accept unless you are sure you can pay), the payment of them is not due till the time stipulated. The spirit of the two (not at all contradictory) precepts, may be expressed thus: "Pay your debts," and "Don't shut your ear to genuine distress if it is in your power to help."

Criticizing the Bible.

A prison visitor gave a convict a Bible. He employed himself in raising questions on difficult passages to ask the donor at every visit. Seeing that the study was of no profit to the convict, the visitor said, "What would you think of a hungry man who had not eaten a morsel of food for the last twenty-four hours, and was asked by a charitable man to come in and sit down at a richly covered table, on which were large dishes of choice meat, and also covered ones, the contents of which the hungry man did not know? Instead of satisfying his exhausted body with the former, he raises one cover after another, and insists on finding out what these unknown dishes are composed of. In spite of all the advice of the charitable man to partake first of the more substantial dishes, he dwells with obstinate inquiry on nicer compounds, until, overcome with exhaustion, he drops down. What do you think of such a man?' "He is a fool," said the convict; "and I will be one no longer. I understand you well."—Anon.

Selections.

"Only a Thing."

In a pretty, sunny parlor, modest but tasteful, two women were arranging flowers. One was the hostess, the other a visitor, who was helping with the preparations for a tea that afternoon. It was from the visitor's hand that a delicate vase slipped and crashed to pieces on the earth.

"Oh, Ellen, I'm so very sorry!" she exclaimed, in distress. "The Venetian glass vase your sister brought from Italy—the very one I can't possibly replace! It's too bad!"

"It was pretty, and I'm sorry, of course," acknowledged Ellen, frankly, burrowing promptly in a closet for her dust-pan; "but don't stand there frozen with horror, and your face like a tragic mask. After all, it's only a thing."

Ellen laughed outright.

"Most things certainly are things," she admitted, "and a few things are precious; but even then there's a difference. I forgot that you did not know the family byword, and couldn't finish it out for yourself. You see, I was quoting my name-aunt who was the dearest, coziest, most comfortable, and yet the most wide-awake and spirited old lady in the world. She always declared that the richest gain that came to her through age and experience was the perception of relative importance. Life is so much more easy and interesting if we never let ourselves be troubled about what need not really matter; and compared with people and actions, things, our mere little possessions, are, after all, so trifling. She deemed it disgraceful that anything less than war, earthquake or fire, affecting things, should make us unhappy.

"When a heart, a promise, or a principle, is broken,' she used to say, 'that's disaster, and one may grieve; but when a teapot is—a thing is only a thing. Laugh and take a brown pitcher, and the tea will taste just as good."

"I suppose it would," agreed Ellen's friend, reflectively, "if the laugh were genuine, but so many of us couldn't laugh. It's Emerson, isn't it, who says, 'Things are in the saddle and ride mankind—it's the housekeepers who are slaves to things?"

"Oh, not all of us," protested Ellen, cheerfully. "Suppose you put the pink chrysanthemums in that old Dutch mug and twist the trailing fern round the handle—I'm not sure it isn't going to be prettier than the Venetian vase, after all."—Youth's Companion.

Humility.

Oh! be little, be little; and then thou wilt be content with little; and if thou feel now and then, a check or a secret smiting,—in that is the Father's love; be not over-wise, nor over-eager, in thy own willing, running and desiring, and thou mayest feel it so and by degrees come to the knowledge of thy Guide, who will lead thee, step by step, in the path of life, and teach thee to follow. Be still and wait for light and strength.—I. Pennington.

Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.—Solomon.

The Waiting Bride.

The true attitude of the waiting bride of Christ is that of constant expectation and joyful anticipation of the soon coming Bridegroom. It will be no surprise to her because she has prepared herself for his reception, she is not in ignorance of the near approach of that day, for the signs that the Bridegroom gave, that should usher in the bridal morning, are closely watched, and "when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh," said the absent Bridegroom. The marriage robe of divine holiness has been provided, and put on, and the work of adornment progresses during the tarrying time, the fine needlework and the inwrought gold, the figure of fiery trials and tests of faith, that prove her loyalty to the betrothal vows. "For many shall be purified, made white and glistening, and the wise shall understand."

As Noah's dove returned to the ark with an olive leaf, emblem of the new world, so the Holy Spirit, the Heavenly Dove, brings to the elect bride many evidences of the nearing approach of the coming King and his heavenly kingdom. Soon, yea very soon, shall we hear a great multitude, whose united voice will sound like the voice of many waters and mighty thunderings, saying "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come and his bride has made herself ready."

From Experience.

Satan is busily engaged in trying to break down our faith in the Bible. Those who say that it makes no difference what one believes, little realize what a pernicious idea this is. It makes all the difference in the world. Unbelief is making havoc with some who once held the faith, but who alas! have made shipwreck of it. Little by little the work is done, and God only knows the terrible results. It is a sad thing to wander from God.

My heart is touched when I think of Jesus, and his love for mankind. Instead of uttering harsh words to the wanderer, he says, "Go, and sin no more." If anything wins men to God it is love, pure love.

I accept the blessed Bible as the inspired Word of God, praying for heavenly wisdom, and for a correct understanding of its teachings. I believe that truth and righteousness go together. O that God might quicken us and that we might move forward with "Truth and Purity" on our banners. There are better days before us, if we live for God. If we can win even one poor soul for Jesus by our godly efforts, how blessed it will be.—T. L. Waugh.

It does not make a man a Christian just because he attends church regularly, reads the Bible and mumbles a few prayers. He must be sincere in all he does, must put his whole heart into his business, his family, or his dearest and most cherished pleasure. In fact, Christ's service must be his uppermost desire, always and everywhere.

Baptized at Blair 8—Arthur White, May White and Howard Appletree. The two former are husband and wife and we are very proud of them, as they are highly esteemed by all. Bro. Appletree is a young man of sterling qualities. The interest through this entire meeting was fine, and others will surely obey soon.

During the month we conducted one funeral, that of J. W. Sisle of Columbus, Nebraska.

The work for the month was very profitable.

Submitted in hope,

ALMUS ADAMS, Evangelist.

Faith.

Faith saves, but only by uniting to the Savior and resting in him. As the feet rest on the bridge, which itself rests on the piers, so rest on faith for salvation only, because faith itself rests on those two pieces of redemption, the death and resurrection of Christ.

It is not the quantity of thy faith that saves thee. A drop of water is as truly water as the whole ocean; so a little faith is as truly faith as is the greatest. A child eight days old is as really a human being as a man of sixty years; a spark of fire is as truly fire as a great flame; a child is as truly living as a full man.

So it is not the measure of faith that saves thee—it is the Blood that grips that saves thee. As the weak hand of a child, that lifts the spoon to the mouth, will feel as well as the strongest arm of a man, so is faith; for it is not the hand that feeds thee, but the meat. If thou canst grip the Christ, though ever so weakly, he will not let thee perish.

Happiness is not like a large and beautiful gem, so uncommon and rare that all search for it is vain, all effort to obtain it hopeless; but it consists of a series of smaller and more common gems, grouped and set together, forming a pleasing and graceful whole. —Samuel Smiles.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compels all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second considers its "Principles" in formulated propositions and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 309 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10823 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

PLEASE don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

BROTHER B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 866 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 8 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1.50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

THE RESTITUTION is only $1.50 per year. Try it a year.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1850. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will be made. Brothers and Sisters, you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send on the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it she become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies post paid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used it will be accomplished. See to it in this way.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought from knowledge and obedience of the truth by handing her one of those small tracts containing "Five hundred dollars rewarded" to the person finding certain printed phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 1, 1911. NUMBER 9.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Gratitude.

Do you give thanks for this, or that? No, God be thanked,
I am not grateful
Is that cold, calculating way, with blessings ranked
As one, two, three and four—that would be hateful!

I only know that every day brings good above
My poor deserving;
I surely feel that on the road of life true Love
Is leading me along and never swerving.

Whatever turn the path may take to left or right,
I think it follows
The tracing of a wiser hand, through dark and light,
Across the hills and in the shady hollows.

Whatever gifts the hours bestow, or great or small,
I would not measure
As worth a certain price in praise, but take them all
And use them all, with simple, heartfelt pleasure.

For when we gladly eat our daily bread, we bless
The hand that feeds us;
And when we walk along life's way in cheerfulness,
Our very heart-beats praise the Love that leads us.

The Future Doom of Russia.

My last article closed with showing that when the "Gog" of Ezekiel, the equivalent of the "King of the North," of Daniel, should "overflow and pass over" "into the glorious land," and "plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas (the Dead and Mediterranean Seas) in the glorious holy mountain," "he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." It would be "at that time," that "Michael shall stand up, "the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people" of Israel. And at "that time," "a time of trouble such as never was," will ensue; and also "at that time, thy people shall be delivered every one that shall be found written in the book." And also "at that time," "many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." And "at that time," "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

This is the most important sign we have, seeing that it is the last sign prior to the resurrection of the dead.

Dan'el was then instructed to "shut up the words, and seal the book." For how long? "To the time of the end." Remember "the time of the end" is not the "end" itself, but prior to "the end." How shall we know when we arrive at "the time of the end?" Daniel says, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

It was necessary before "many should run to and fro," to any extent, that "knowledge shall be increased" to the extent of providing the means of "running to and fro," which did not then exist.

Of a truth,

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time,
In an age upon ages telling,
When to be living is sublime."

Men of science see this, I quote from the "Scientific American," as follows: "The material world has advanced so rapidly during the last half century, and with a pace so accelerated, that mankind has almost lost one of its most important faculties and one essential to happiness—that of surprise.  The most marvelous developments are taken as a matter of course. The condition of things fifty years ago, is seldom pictured to the mind; and all the material blessings which we now enjoy are used as conveniences of daily life, and no more.  Notwithstanding the pages of matter and quantities of illustrations, we feel that the task of telling about the progress of a lifetime at the least can be only inadequately performed—so much has been done."

Suppose our forefathers who died fifty years ago, should be raised from the dead, and we should take them on board of our steamships, great magnificent floating palaces, which can cross the ocean in about as many days as it used to take weeks. They have "palatial dining rooms and parlors, their fine baths and bed rooms, their passenger elevators." On board these steamers we have printing offices which print daily news papers. The news of happenings in various parts of the world, is sent to them by a telegraph which has no wire; do you think they could hardly credit their own senses, knowing only the condition of things when they fell asleep?

Then suppose we take them to our telephones and let them talk to friends hundreds of miles away, just as they do face to face; you would not have much difficulty in convincing them that we are now living in days of marvelous miracles. Then introduce these resurrected sleepers to our talking machines. Let them hear the identical voices, tones, words, speeches, songs and prayers repeated, of people who are now dwelling in the dark and silent chambers of the dead; tell me, what could they think?

The greatest power in the world to increase knowledge is the printing press. I was raised a printer and know something about it. Printing has been done for hundreds of years by crude and slow presses. The old Franklin hand press was considered a marvel in its day, and so it was, it was much better than nothing for disseminating knowledge. It now stands in the National Museum, simply as an article of curiosity. Next came the Washington Hoe press, a slight improvement over the Franklin. It was a hand lever press, the same as the Franklin. My Uncle Benjamin Wilson, and myself, printed the first copies of the Emphatic Diaglott from this hand lever press. From this time on improvements kept being made, until today our daily news paper presses, to many people are more wonderful than the so called "seven wonders of the world." If I should relate to you the capacity of the press invented by Richard M. Hoe, you could hardly credit it. A writer computes that it is capable of printing 8,800 papers per minute, and 200,000 per hour. It is in fact a combination of eight presses in one. On these eight cylinders are placed the stereotypes to be printed, and connected with these are ink rollers, which inks these stereotypes on the cylinders. Near this are eight rolls of continuous sheets of paper, which passes over these inked stereotypes, and prints on the paper whatever is on the stereotypes. The paper is reeled off these rolls, and passes through the press at the rate of thirty-two and one half miles per hour; this is as fast as many railroad trains run. Both sides of the paper are printed as it passes through the press. There is an automatic attachment to the press which cuts, folds and counts the number of papers printed. Some of our largest city papers on special occasions have to print one million copies in twenty-four hours. Here is a means of placing knowledge before the people, that borders on the miraculous.

It is said, that one hundred or more years ago, the mass of the people could not even read. Of what use would have been these tremendous preparations to disseminate knowledge?

In these last days a tremendous wave of education has rolled upon the world, and there is a demand for these unprecedented facilities to supply papers, books, magazines, etc., that "knowledge may be increased." Religious literature has also been printed and circulated by leaps and bounds. In the beginning of the nineteenth century Bibles were still a scarce article. Prices were so high but few people could afford to own one, and many would walk a great distance to hear it read.

The change started in 1804, when the British and Foreign Bible Society was founded. In May, 1816, the American Bible Society was organized, and since that time, hundreds of auxiliary societies have been founded. And what has been the result? Why the Bible either in parts, or as a whole is now read in five hundred and twenty-five languages and dialects. Some over three hundred million copies have been circulated since March 1804. It is said to be printed today at the rate of some ten millions two hundred and fifty thousand a year. Railways and steamships at the same time have been perfected, to such an extent that "many are running to and fro," over all the world, as "on the wings of the wind," carrying the Word of God with them, to all who dwell on the face of the whole earth. It is hardly a possibility to estimate the millions of people who are on the move at this hour, on railroads and steamships, in pursuit of pleasure, business, or religious work.

We can hardly realize the privileges of today, unless we compare them with the past. Let us go back as far as 1877, when Congress was petitioned to print thirty thousand Bibles to supply the demand. This could not be done at that time on account of the lack of both paper and type.

Let me call attention to an incident, which occurred in 1794. A Welsh girl by the name of Mary Jones, had an intense craving to own a Bible. For six years she saved all the money she could, to buy one. In the year 1800, she found she had the required amount. She was directed to Thomas Charles, who lived at Bala, twenty-five miles away, which distance she walked. Mr. Charles told her, that the few copies he had were preserved for people who had already made previous application for them. Her hopes of years seemed to be blasted, she sobbed and cried. Mr. Charles said: "My dear child, difficult as it is to spare you one, it is impossible to refuse you." This remained her cherished possession for some sixty-six years.

Bibles continued at high prices, so that it became difficult for the poor to possess one, until the Bible societies sprang into existence, and now with the increased facilities, any one can have one at but little cost; and if too poor to purchase one, they are given to them. This is all due to "knowledge being increased" in "the time of the end."

In the nineteenth century over ninety million dollars were expended by Bible Societies to supply the destitute with God's Holy Book. On the day of Pentecost we read: "The multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?"

Today the Word of God is carried into all lands, and all nations can read God's Word in their "own tongue wherein they were born."

Among other wonderful things which have sprung into existence in "the time of the end," is a universal language (Esperanto) by which means today "the gospel of the kingdom" which is so precious, and near to the hearts of all true believers, can be read in all the world, if we would but interest ourselves to send it to them.

The World's Congress of scholars in this language, recently met in the city of Washington, D. C. There were 22 nations represented, and 85 states. Our Brother J. G. Haupt of Crowley, La. was one of the delegates.

Beloved in the Lord, the world is moving rapidly toward the great consummation. Let us be ready for it. It may yet take several articles to finish the topic. It can be comprehended better by considering it more in detail.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.
W. H. WILSON.

God asks of thee works as well as words; and more, he asks of thee the works first, and words after; and better it is to praise him truly by works without words, than falsely by words without works.

The Story of a Happy Christian Life.

SECOND SERIES. NUMBER 60.

Sister Sallie Roter and her husband had come east the winter of 1905—06, had been twice to Haddonfield to visit Auntie Willard and were "amazed to find her looking so young," and to see her "sitting up as straight as when they first knew her,"—though not able to sit long at a time.

As Sister Roter thought that "The wandering of Auntie Willard's mind was due, in great part to her blindness, and that —could she have had her eye-sight, she would have been just the same as of yore. But I think in this she was mistaken, and that Auntie Willard's second childhood had come—a pathetic and beautiful childhood indeed. I felt instinctively, when I heard how it was that the end was only a few weeks away, and so it proved, for she died March 11, 1907, as stated in the beginning of my story.

She had ceased eating at the table only a week before the day of her death; at noon on that day she seemed weaker and unable to eat at all, in the afternoon began laboring for breath, and at 10:30 P. M. had fallen asleep in the blessed sleep that the Lord giveth his beloved.

The dear one was beautiful in her coffin and looked to be not more than [illegible] instead of nearly 93. The Happy Christian Life that she had lived, had written lines of loveliness on her face, which [illegible] could not destroy, however desperate. There had been no [illegible] wasting away, no suffering in the last, only a simple giving of the breath back to the Father to be breathed upon her again when the last trumpet shall sound, and the dead arise forth to die no more.

She had kept the faith inviolate, she had declared in perhaps the last letter of any length that she ever wrote, that "the Word of the Lord is infallible," implying that whatever we find written there is fact, and can be depended upon; that we may not say [illegible] parts of a narrative are literal, though the third [illegible] nor make mythical certain [illegible], whom the Scriptures say, "fell and trembled." O how I glory that in these days of Higher Criticism, when men are vieing with each other as to who shall be the smartest and most cunning of his followers in the endeavor to overthrow faith in the validity of the Scriptures, to find one whose faith could not be shaken though "tried as gold is tried in the fire!" Who of us who remain shall be able to stand?

A beautiful incident occurred before the funeral that illustrates in a striking manner Auntie Willard's simple, childlike faith in the over-ruling providence of God even in the smallest matters of life.

We all know how fond grandparents are of the first grandchild, and what great store Auntie Willard set by Lizzie May.

Well, Lizzie May,—long before the dear grandma had lost her eye-sight—had had some very handsome photos taken and had of course given her one. Auntie Willard prized the picture very highly;—would look at it frequently and then lay it away. But at last it disappeared and no one knew what she had done with it. And now comes the strange part of the story. When the last sad rites were about to begin, a reporter called and asked for a likeness of Auntie Willard. Lizzie May ran up stairs at once to get one, and in her search through the bureau-drawer, where she knew the picture must be, she discovered her own long-hidden photo! "On the face side of it, and near the bottom of the card, were written the words, "Over—Over." She turned it, and there in perfectly plain lettering was the following—"After my decease and the last thing before the coffin is closed, I desire to have this picture placed on my face, face to face."

She had hidden the picture and had mentioned the matter to no one, not even to Lizzie May.

You may imagine how deeply the friends were touched and how thankful they were that the picture was found by the very one most interested so that the tender request could be carried out,—as it was in every detail. She had told the Father in secret what she wanted and he had answered the prayer at the exact moment—not a moment too soon nor a moment too late. And that is the way the grand-daughter's picture is on the grand-mother's face, covered with white silk, and spoken of [illegible] though but a mute immortelle.

The funeral services were held in the parlor of the Walnut home. Wesley Smith, Philadelphia Missionary, was the speaker. Wm. H. Eckhardt, converted at thirteen, at Brother and Sister Willard's meetings, at Hammonton, N. J., in the sixties, followed and then Brother Henry T. Taylor, their beloved son in the gospel, paid his tearful tribute to her memory, all alike testifying that "largely to her, under God, they owed the spiritual impulse of their lives."

Brother and Sister Roter, Sister Berghouse of Hammonton, (dear loving friend) and Sister Hannah F. Moore, all brought into the truth through Auntie Willard's influence were there, and of course, her son and wife from Washington City, necessarily beloved personal friends, not of our faith,—the members of the dear Philadelphia Church, and other scattered brethren and sisters having for most part fallen asleep,—or at least those of them who were best known and most closely associated with Brother and Sister Willard.

On the brow of the hill by her husband, "near the edge of the woods first touched by the morning sun" and not far from where Brother C. Hudson sleeps, Auntie Willard was laid to rest,—"a stream of water [illegible] below and one hundred feet away, and the old mill in sight where Brother Willard took wheat to grind from the farm near by."

All sorrowed, but what the loss of his mother was to Rowland no one can ever estimate. He had been her care-taker for so many years, had nursed her through the dangerous illness that followed her fall when her life hung as it were by a hair, and after her recovery had heeded every call and tried to anticipate her every wish; and her death seemed much as if a beloved child had been snatched from his arms.

He cried through the letters he was obliged to write, exclaiming, "O how shall I stay my hand and keep the tears to talk to you again?"—though "buoyed up by the never-failing promises of him who is the Resurrection and the Life," as were all the dear, faithful ones who bade her "Good Night," "till the dawn of the eternal morning."

Charles A. L. Totten died April 12, 1908—a year, one month, and one day later than Auntie Willard, and as one of her last written utterances was as to the infallibility of the Bible, it is fitting that we give his last written words as paralleling hers.

"Go to!" said he "Search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal (Sectarian: May God forbid!) life, for they have those (oracles) that speak of the one only name thou must confess with thy lips, and believe in with thy heart—if thou art ever to be saved. Look it up, that TEXT, nothing can control it, nor supplant it; no, not all the saints and popes or all the days of the 'crazy calendar they have handed down to us, can ever change the WORD OF GOD."

My story is done.

"I stretch my hands toward you
Loyal 'watchers' of today,
Who are treading in the footsteps
Of the watchers called away;
And I pray that through the gloom
And blackness of the night,
You soon may hear the watch-word—
Changing darkness into light;
For the mist upon the mountain
Must fade before the sun
And the watchers watch can only end
When the watchers joy has come."

I would that joy might come this very year!

Lest We Forget.

Let us turn to Mark xii. 28-32 and read. We will find where Jesus in answer to the Scribe when he asked him which was the first commandment, gave it. "Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

This is the first commandment, and the second, namely this "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." There is none other commandment greater than these.

Dear readers, this is what I want to ask. Are we fulfilling the royal law? I am sure we are. How did the Scribe answer? Let us read a little further. Well, Master, thou hast said the truth, for there is one God, and there is none other; and to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices. When Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.

Now let us turn to Galatians v. 14-15 and see what Paul says, For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

Oh! let us keep the words of our dear Master ever before us. Let us make an effort to love our neighbors, for fear we will wander far from the Kingdom. May we have the love of God in our hearts good and strong. Your sincere friend and most sincere [illegible] fall now and then, it wont last long. They may help to open up the [illegible] of our hearts, and make us more tender one toward another. Let us keep the Star of our Hope ever before us, and his faithful words as our motto—

LEST WE FORGET.

Editor restitution:

The past year has been a busy one for the writer in the work of the Lord. I have worked 138 days, preaching 126 sermons, traveled 5085 miles, and baptized quite a number.

The harvest is great but the laborers are few. Yet we have a wonderful message for the world. The message of life, and a home in the kingdom of God.

Brother Huggins, What is the sign of the Son of Man, referred to in Mat. xxiv. 30. I wish our able writers would give us something more on the prophecies.

J. H. ANDERSON.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Find enclosed $1.50 for THE RESTITUTION to my address another year, and as I am a little past will hasten to send it. All things seem to point more and more to the nearness of the coming of the Master, as everything is more or less disturbed on every hand. Distress seems everywhere, but let us bear it patiently, ever looking to God for sustaining grace in every trial.

Your Sister in the Blessed Hope,
ELIZA A. RAHE.

Editor Restitution:

I will renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION again, and a mite for to help others, so you find an order for $2.00 in this.

THE RESTITUTION is a real feast to me, it helps me so much to understand many things in the Bible. I hope all will take God's Word for their creed and guide, and nothing else.

Pray for me dear brothers and sisters, that I may hold out faithful till the Lord comes, or while I am among the living.

Your Sister in Jesus Christ,
MRS. M. E. DARNALL.

The humblest tasks are often the most difficult, but they may yield the largest returns.

BROTHER Edwin Kinder of the old Northfield (Illinois) Church that included so many of the tried and true old pioneers of days gone by—when Brothers Asa W. Button and Richard Appleyard and other names were household words among us—is still among the living, ninety years old, and though afflicted by deafness and other infirmities of age, is still firm and faithful, looking with bright anticipation toward that Sun-rising that no cloud will ever dim. Each one of the Church of God who ever met this aged Brother, and all those who never had this pleasure, will we are sure join with the Editor in an expression of loving remembrance of him as he shall pass on March 9th, the 90th milestone on his journey toward the kingdom of God. May the time that yet remains to him be pleasant hours, and when he shall enter the valley and shadow of death, may the blessed hope of soon awakening to the new life be his stay and strong fortress. May kind and loving friends, with willing hands minister to his needs, and with tender words of love cheer the few days remaining to our aged Brother, so that no touch of sadness will mar the beauty of a life so true to God and his fellowmen as has been the life of Brother Edwin Kinder.

FAITH—
Vital principle, which keeps my heart
Firm, 'mid the pressure of a thousand ills,
Thou my life's solace and supporter art.
Mingling with bliss the bitter cup it fills.
Far in the future hath thy watcher's glance
Discover'd peace, and many a blissful spot;
While present griefs seem shadows that enhance
The opening glories of thy future lot.

NEWS from the bedside of Sister Chaplin-Wickizer on Monday morning informs that her condition is very critical. The following message from Sister Wince gives Sister Chaplin's own words as far as possible:

Dear Readers of Restitution:

Mother—Mrs. Sarah Chaplin-Wickizer—wishes you to know that "she is no better," but that "she is thankful she has a loving Savior, and a dear Father in heaven in whom to trust." She says "I lean upon God; I have no where else to go."

She has the most loving care from friends in Pierceton, and thanks God for this proof of his watchful care over her. She is also so thankful for the visits and letters from friends, and for the kindly interest you all take in her.

AGAIN reports come of persecution of Jews in Russia. In the province of Tchernigov, a government of Little Russia, the governor has ordered the expulsion of all Hebrews. In spite of the intense cold the police opened the doors and windows and drove them out through the snow drifts, to the outskirts, where they are conducted from the province. There were 219 families, among them being a number of wealthy land owners and manufacturers. They attempted to appeal to the governor, but he refused to hear them, and now they are seeking to get a hearing at St. Petersburg, but that cannot help the suffering of delicate women and little children driven from their homes into winter's storm and cold. No matter what charge is made against the Jewish men, nothing can justify this cruelty.

Remembrances of Friends.

Elder B. W. Woodward passed his 80th milestone on Sunday, Feb. 19th. The day dawned cold but pleasant, and the Elder had been asked to go to the Church and speak on this especial occasion. He was expecting the usual number out, but they kept coming, some from long distances, until the house was well filled with neighbors and friends. He gave an appropriate talk from the subject "Does it pay to be a Christian?" with a stirring exhortation to make the wise choice before too late.

After the sermon the emblems of the Lord's Supper were partaken of; so many felt this such a privilege, as they are deprived of it, being alone in the faith in their neighborhoods.

When we reached home he was again surprised to find the congregation had preceded him, and had dinner nearly ready. Sixty-six people dined with him that day.

His surprise and pleasure was complete when he was presented with a beautiful large pink Azalia and a purple Cyclemen, two beautiful plants, the gifts of his friends. How they will brighten the remaining winter days. He was also remembered with many beautiful birthday cards and booklets from all points of the compass. Sister Bell McCandless of Pence, Indiana, now in California for her health. Bro. and Sister Good of Tennessee, and their son Edison who came the long journey last June Conference to have Elder Woodward baptize him. Bro. and Sister Evert Byers from Washington. Brother and Sister Arnot Byers. Sisters J. Evans and L. Himelright of Pleasant View, Indiana. Brother J. Williams, Brother and Sister R. Worthington patient faithful souls, Bro. and Sister Harper, several from the Adrian Church, from Plymouth, Ind. O, so many had thought of him in loving remembrances—nearly 60 in all, and if he was well enough and I had the time, we would write to each, but instead take this space in our paper to thank you all, and exhort you to meet him on that other blessed birthday we hope you are all looking for, the day of Christ's return, when our birth out from old mother earth will be an immortal birth to eternal life in his kingdom.

O, how much that will be worth to us. These beautiful tinseled cards, which we appreciate so much, will sink into insignificance when compared to the white-robed, jewel decked beloved of the Father, who will be heard singing victory over death and the grave.

May that birthday dawn for each of us, is the prayer of

Sunday School Lesson.

MARCH 12, 1911.

Elisha the Prophet Restores a Child to Life, 2 Kings iv. 8-37.

Golden Text—"The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Romans vi. 23.

To fully appreciate this lesson the Scripture text between last lesson and this should be read. It seems that in his travels back and forth, the prophet Elisha had attracted the attention of a certain woman living at Shunem, and she saw that he was a man of God, and so proposed to her husband that they build a room on to the their house and furnish it with the necessary furniture, so that when Elisha passed that way he would have a place to stay and rest from his journey. This manifestation of kindness was taken note of by the prophet, and he wished to render her any favor that he could. She was childless, as was Sarah, but a son was born to her, and to an Oriental woman this was the greatest favor that could be bestowed upon her. As this boy grow up he went to the field one day where his father was, and there was taken sick. They carried him home to his mother where he died. The poor woman was stricken with this great grief. The child had come into her home as a miracle of God, and so she took him up and laid him on the bed of the prophet. Then she started on a journey to where Elisha was, and by her persistence induced him to go back to her home, and when there he went to the room where the boy was, and the lesson account tells of how he was given back alive to his mother.

In this lesson we are taught the value of a life. Our present day education and the great movements we hear so much about in the way of laws governing the way our food must be handled and kept from contamination, and the efforts to stop the spread of disease; the work of the Red Cross society in times of disaster and peril, of war and pestilence, and the ways that the young are educated to care for themselves in emergencies, when in danger of drowning, etc. All these are but lessons we are daily getting on the value and worth of a life.

Here was a little boy, whose very existence was a miracle. His mother was of course all wrapped up in her little son, expecting much to come by his life, and now to have all her high hopes blasted, was a severe blow to her. The incident shows the value and sacredness of even this little boy's life. Of course it follows that if value attached to this life, then other boys and girls are also worth caring for and protecting, even in this day.

It may be noted here that the mother of this boy was willing to make all sacrifice for her boy. She had strong faith the man of God could help her, and for fear that a messenger would not present her case strong enough she went herself. She based her plea on the fact that this child come to her from God as a reward for her kindness to God's servant, and now that he is taken from her, her faith prompts her to seek Elisha, as the medium through whom he can be restored to her.

Possibly she had heard of other miracles that Elisha had performed as is given in the preceding chapters, and thus she would have ground of hope that he could help her. When Elisha would send his servant to look after the case, the woman would not be put off so, and refused to leave the prophet, insisting on his giving it personal attention. The whole story shows the value the mother put on a boy's life.

When Elisha came to the scene he too seems to have recognized the sacredness and preciousness of this life, and he puts forth every power of his being to restore his life, and in answer to his prayers and supplication to God the boy is made to live.

In days gone by in some heathen lands, mothers sacrificed their children to appease the supposed wrath of the idols they worshipped. Even in our day the man who is made reckless by strong drink, or to satisfy some desire, does not recognize the value of life as did this mother, but we are indeed glad that so many are at work along the lines of temperance and proper living, thus showing an interest in the present lives of those about them.

If this life, that is but a vapor, is so precious, and so worth while the effort put forth to sustain it, how much greater should be the effort to secure that life to come—eternal life in the kingdom of God! There is no possible comparison between them. If we are ready to make any and every sacrifice for health that this life may be extended, how much greater our sacrifice to make sure of an inheritance in the better life when Jesus comes to gather his jewels.

What value do you place on the life to come? What sacrifices are you now making for it? Do you want any of your friends to go into the kingdom with you? What are you doing right now for them? Are you paying the preacher or sending papers and tracts to them?

Work in Arizona.

Some time ago I wrote to THE RESTITUTION that I had closed a meeting at Arlington, Arizona, which made me happy by resulting in seven repentant converts coming to the stand, and expressing a desire to be immersed. [Must have gone wrong as this is the first we have heard of it.—Ed.] Obedience was postponed for further study of the faith as made known in the Bible, the basis of all saving faith. When the appointed time February 5, was reached, my son-in-law and my daughter, accompanied by their daughters, two sons, and two school teachers from a school near by, took me to the appointment a distance of seven miles. The neighborhood was being scourged by the measles, including some of those who desired immersion, and a number of the interested ones were necessarily away working on an irrigation canal, but there was a goodly house of interested hearers.

By previous request and appointment I canvassed the Sabbath question, and although my readers are informed that I have been engaged for years in a struggle with heart failure, I am thankful for the opportunity to talk to those who can be convinced that the law Sabbath was given to those who were under the law, and nailed to the cross when he that redeemed us from the curse of the law was nailed to the cross.

On account of the health conditions at Arlington, meetings were postponed again until February 26. As soon as a series is held counting from that date, I hope to be able to return through California to Washington and Oregon. Any who are interested may address me at Arlington, or care of Mrs. Grace Lawrence, Palo Verde, Arizona.

I wish all would read and reread the "head-light" as printed in the upper right hand corner of THE RESTITUTION. We have never thought of it as a creed which must be believed in order to assure salvation, but as it is the most concise expression of what I believe to be important truth, I have long accepted and taught it, and may I boast, by the Providence of him in whom I trust, sufficient strength has been given me to immerse about 500 believers into the saving name. Unless I can see some advantage can come to me, we will remain with the Bible and that alone.

I was greatly pleased to read the letter published January 25 from our old pioneer, Brother B. W. Woodward. Could only repeat like sentiment by signing the same article. I enjoyed a meeting several years ago conducted by our Brother and Sister Woodward, and I thought then, and think yet that I know the pure gold.

I believe, both from experience and observation, that when differences spring up between brethren, misunderstandings go with the differences of view that create real misrepresentations. From my own experience—Some years ago, a position I took, caused word to go out "Brother W. L. Skeels has endorsed universal salvation," but my creed was and still is against it, in such expressions as "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy," Psalm cxv. 20.

So I remain with the Head-light of THE RESTITUTION, and see no reason for substituting any other. I hope its principles will be sustained, and that the spirit of 1 Cor. xiii. will be manifested by all. "Be ye also ready, for such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Let us press home the sentiment "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," John xiii. 34. We need more love.

May Love abound,

word has thereby been preserved, and now 'tis seen in every land and clime. 'Tis true that lives no more are slain in its defence. That mode of persecution has for ever gone. The words of men now take the place of swords. We live in days when human thought is free—free to bless, and free to curse; free to preach the Word of truth, and free to teach a lie. And O, such lies—lies presented in the garb of truth, partly fact and partly fiction; beguiling lies, which fascinate unstable minds with things of nought. From every class they come; from those who have no hope in God, as well as those who have; from unbelief in all its [illegible]; from superstition's many-[illegible]forms; and, as in days of yore, [illegible] those who claim the name of light. With these we have to [illegible]—to fight for each and all the truths of Holy Writ and now to fight for that in which they are found. That written Word we have been told doth come in parts, but not in whole from God; or if from God, he hath in some things made mistakes. We this reject, and cannot bid God-speed to those who claim to be his sons, and will do the same. But let them speak; hear what they say; and give the hand to those with whom ye deem it right in [illegible]ship to meet,"

[illegible]h Vial Apologists for Fallible [illegible]rship.—"Ye well-meaning but unwise and mistaken brethren of the [illegible]eal, why need ye have been mar[illegible] in the way ye describe? 'Twas through a "mere mechanical test." The manuscripts ye sought to preserve were only copies, they were not autographs. And how did ye know that they were correct? Nay, what proof had ye that the autographs were infallible? The writers may have been inspired, but what proof is that that in nothing they did err? May they not have made mistakes in things where doctrine plays no part? In treating only of salvation's way could ye have guarantee of absolute perfection. In other things they might not give more solid ground than writings uninspired. And was your faith in God so slight that ye would risk your lives for parchments such as these? Ye must have known that everyone could not be burnt; that Pagan satan's evil work must fail; that God, apart from any strife of yours, would keep or reproduce for future use the sacred scroll which taught the way of life. If ye had truly known that way ye would have felt its vital force, and need no longer trust in words which merely clothe divine ideas. Ye say those words had found a lodgment in your minds; what more then did ye need? If ye had sucked the honey, why cared ye for the comb? Could ye not have copies made of needful parts and left the rest? Why throw away your lives on rolls of skin which once were things of naught, and soon must waste away? Ye were self-made martyrs for mere theory. The truth is in itself so strong that none can break it down; the forces of a mighty host no breach could make wherewith to pass its adamantine walls; it is its own natural fortress and needs no buttress of man's design. Your martyrdom was not for God's pure truth, but for parchment scrolls in which that truth was found; ye lost your lives through folly's own device. Consider your mistakes—what harm ye did to that grand cause which ye had sworn to serve. If ye had not demurred to Satan's first demand, his fury would not long have lived, and then your course had been quite free. Ye added fuel to the fire, and caused the flames to spread. The more ye did resist the fierce decree so strong became the will to give its hatred fullest vent. Consider what effect your conduct had within the church's pale. 'Twas you who formed two parties there; 'twas ye who placed a stumbling block before the weak; 'twas ye who threw on them the weight of bearing with the strong; 'twas ye who interrupted peace, and stayed the progress of the truth. Alas! alas! for such a flock of foolish wayward sheep from simple paths of truth to stray."

Fifth Seal Martyrs for God's Word.—Ye sixth vial Laodiceans! Is this the cold-blooded way in which ye measure our zeal for God? Our self-sacrifice for his Word? Have ye so little love for him whose name ye bear that ye would not lose all ye have for safety of his Word? Are ye not sons of God and children of the light? How can ye cause the light of truth divine to shine without the Word in which 'tis found? And how can ye hold forth "the Word of life" (Phil ii 15, 16), unless ye have a transcript of that written Word? How can ye yourselves in this dark world "walk circumspectly" (Eph v 15), (Eph vi 12), without the Spirit's "lamp" to guide your "feet" (Psa cxix 105)? How can ye measure righteousness with unrighteousness unless ye have the rule by which to measure (Lev xix 35)? How can ye "weigh actions" (1 Sam ii 3) like your Father in heaven, without the scales and weights of his providing? Know ye not that "a just weight and balance are the Lord's" (Prov xvi 11), and that "divers weights and divers measures," which many-sided human nature doth provide for its own acts, "both of them are alike abomination to the Lord"? Prov xx 10. Are ye so "perfect" that ye "offend not in word" (Jas iii 2) and need no further "reproofs or instructions" wherewith to walk "the way of life"? Prov vi 23. Are ye so "undefiled" (Psa cxix 1) in thought and deed that ye no longer need "the Word" in "spoken" (Jno xv 3) or in written form (Psa cxix 9) wherewith to "cleanse your hands" and "purify your hearts" (Jas iv 8; Psa xxiv 4)? Are you so well able to "keep in memory" (1 Cor xv 2) "the statutes of the Lord" (Psa xix 8) that ye can at all time, without fail, "put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean." Lev x 10. Are ye so faultless in keeping Jehovah's "covenant and his testimonies" (Psa xxv 10) that ye need no "book of the covenant" to remind you the terms thereof? Are ye so "filled with the knowledge of God's will" (Col i 9) that ye can for "increase" (ii 19) find no room? Have ye partaken of so much spiritual "nourishment" (Col ii 19) that "hunger" (Luke vi 21-25) and ye have parted? Can ye keep your minds "alive unto God" (Rom vi 11) without an "every day" supply of "bread from heaven"? Ex xvi 4. And have ye even now so freely drunk "the water of life" (Rev xxi 6) that ye have ceased to "thirst." Matt v 6.

If ye can answer Yea to each and all of these, we must express surprise and doubt, and plainly say that ye are "wretched" in the extreme, "miserable" beyond compare, the poorest of the poor, blind to things outside the natural sight, and naked as the sinning pair who lost the right to Eden's tree of life. Rev iii 17; Gen iii 11, 22. If such be your state, we counsel each of you to buy the Spirit's gold tried in the fire that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with the Spirit's "eyesalve, that thou mayest see." Rev iii 18.

"When we were pilgrims in the narrow way" that "leadeth unto life" (Matt vii 14), we felt the need of that staff (Psa xxiii 4,) which once did comfort him who always sought his Father's will. John v 30. We desired like him to meditate on Jehovah's law day and night. Psa i 2. "The Word of the Lord was precious" to us; for, as in days of youthful Samuel, "there was no open vision". 1 Sam iii 1. "The words of his mouth" were to us as unto Job "more than necessary food." Job xxiii 12. Like Jeremiah we "did eat them" for they were the joy and rejoicing of our heart." Jer xv 16. We had learned that by them alone could we be "kept from the destroyer" (Psa xvii 4); and though man might "kill the body" we feared him not, but we feared One who "is able to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna." Matt x 28. Yes, we not only feared him, but we loved him with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our mind (Matt xxii 37; and our ardent desire was to see God (Matt v 8); to be made pillars in his temple, to receive his new name, to form part of the glorified throng, which includes them that were beheaded for 'the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God" (Rev xx 4), to be wedded to him who is altogether lovely, Cant v 16, who, in reflecting on the past, is able to say, "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk." Cant v 1.

Can ye wonder that we loved so well the parchment scrolls on which these good things were inscribed? We cherished them as means unto an end—the only means by which that end could be attained. 'Twas this, and this alone, that stirred our souls from inmost depth and bade us use what strength we had to keep within our grasp such precious pearls. "All that a man hath will he give for his life." Job ii 4, it hath been said by even one who spake not always truth. We fought for life—not a vapor-like which after a little time "vanisheth away". Jas iv 14. We fought for that unending "life hid with Christ in God." Col iii 3. "The good Shepherd" had given "his life for the sheep," Jno x 11, and we could do no less for him. It devolved upon us, "not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake", Phil i 29, and to "lay down our lives for the brethren," 1 John iii 16—the brethren of our age, and of ages to come. At the call of duty we offered ourselves on the altar," Rev vi 9, of Christ's love.

"Ye say our scrolls were only copies. What else could we expect to have? How could each enlightened Son of God possess an autograph? He might as well receive the truth direct by God-breathed power. Both special virtue dwell in writings first produced? How many things have ye not read from human pen of which ye never saw the autograph? Ye read from copies and asked for nought beside. Aim ye to be as perfect copies of your Master and your Head as those decaying scrolls for which we lost our lives.

Ye say we were victims to a mere theory, and could not be certain that inspiration's record was free from error. We do not understand such Ashdod talk, and must leave it to the brethren who have greeted us with words refreshing to the Man of God. We knew that every good gift and every perfect gift was from above," and that it came "down from the Father of lights," who "of his own free will begat us with the Word of truth." Jas i 17, 18. We knew that Word to be a gift from God and therefore perfect, and that words which come from him must be like him. We knew that such portion of that Word as was on Israel's race bestowed had been, when they were "broken off" transferred to those "grafted in," that of the root and fatness of the olive tree the Gentiles might partake. Rom vi 17. We knew that of the rest, it had been cared for with the utmost care by those to whom it came in apostolic days, 1 Cor xiv 36, and by those who followed in their steps for twice one hundred years. Its writers were "stewards of the mysteries of God," 1 Cor iv 1, to whom was committed the Word of reconciliation. 2 Cor v 19. When that word was put into writing all who received it became stewards thereof, and it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. 1 Cor iv 2. We esteemed it as a most important part of the talents for which we should have to account when our lord returned from the far country. Without it the remaining talents would have been useless. We dare not betray our trust. If we had, what hope that we should hear the much longed-for verdict? "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of the Lord." Matt xxv 14-21.

"Ye sixth vial apologists speak much like those by whom the sacred scrolls which we esteemed so much were given to the foe, for which we called them Traditors. They acted thus because they did not prize enough the God-breathed words inscribed thereon. We fear it is the same with some of you, and therefore pray that you may soon repent your godless talk and receive "the Word of God," not as an imperfect, but a "perfect gift," and "not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe. 1 Thes ii 13. Until then we are in sorrow but in duty bound to decline the hand of fellowship; when next we meet we hope your change of mind will permit us to say God be with you."

A Prayer.

We come to Thee for strength Lord,
We need it day by day;
It works a guard and guide us,
Is with us 'mid our weary.

We come to Thee for help Lord,
For help to do Thy will;
To walk in Jesus' footsteps,
The cross is all to bill.

We come to Thee for light Lord,
For we are weak and blind
[illegible] of light, Lord,
[illegible] mankind.

We come to Thee for wealth Lord,
[illegible] day by day
[illegible]
And [illegible] to pray.

[illegible] Lord,
[illegible] white;
[illegible] of Jesus,
And walking in the light.

A. WALLACE MASON.

With this issue we begin a series of articles entitled "The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship." It is a pamphlet of English origin called "Bible Authorship and Fraternal Fellowship," now out of print, revised and abbreviated. It is up-to-date—editorially revised it is sent forth as our sentiments, and our endorsement of its position on the question of Bible inspiration is full. If Bible inspiration is not a test of fellowship there are no tests. These articles have cost us much time, labor, and some money. Reader, you will do yourself a great injustice if you miss reading them. Read and study every one.

The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship.

Is it desirable for the brethren of Christ to be well instructed in the evidence on which the infallible authorship of the Bible is based? To this question there can be but one reply. If any doubt should exist concerning the foundation of their hopes, their faith cannot be of that robust, sterling character which alone will stand the fiery trial of purification (1 Peter i. 7.) It is a law in the organic world that where there is perfect health, disease can with difficulty obtain a lodgment. But when the vital forces are reduced by any means, the organism becomes a prey to the enemy in the most insidious form. The same law is in operation in the moral world: where there is strong conviction based upon knowledge, unbelief can find no place; but if weak, the outside forces will soon overcome it. Convince and conviction are derived from two Latin words, viz., con, together, and vinco, to conquer. The state of mind which they represent is one, not only of resistance, but of attack. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 Jno. v. 4.) An enemy cannot be overcome without effective weapons; and in relation to the things of God, those weapons must be of divine providing. The armory containing them is the Bible. In human warfare, the repository for holding weapons of attack or defence is carefully guarded. How much more important to shield the divine armory from the least encroachment. It contains "the weapons of our warfare, which are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds;" they are devised for the purpose of "casting down imaginations (or reasonings, Marg.,) and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringeth into captivety every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 4 5.)

From this aspect, what do the events of the past year teach? That the soldiers of Jesus Christ (2 Tim. ii. 3) were so completely equipped with "the whole armor of God" (Eph. vi. 13) as to need no addition? That they were so skilled in using the weapons of their warfare as to require no further instruction? That their loins were firmly "girt about with truth?" That they were securely covered with "the breastplate of righteousness?" That their feet were adequately "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace?" That they were so protected with "the shield of faith" as to "be able to withstand in the evil day," and "to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked?" That their heads were so sheltered by "the helmet of salvation" as to be in no danger of the missiles of destruction? And that they were able to wield with dexterity, in offence and defence, "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God?"

If these questions can be answered in the affirmative, how is it that so many have allowed their principal weapon, "the sword of the Spirit," to become tarnished with a human, and, therefore [corruptible element? Does it not prove that something was needed to drill them more perfectly in the duties of their military service? And what could have been more effective than the agitation through which we are now passing? Could any amount of research and reflection have elicited such a variety of conclusive evidence? Could any calm discussion have produced so deep an impression on this generation of Christ's brethren? Their principal weapon is the sword of the Spirit. If that becomes blunted, will not the other parts of their armor soon become useless?

It is true of adult, as well as of juveniles, children, that "The rod and reproof give wisdom," and "That a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame" (Prov. xxix. 15.) The "mother" of God's children (Matt. ii. 19) is "wisdom" who "hath builded her house" and "hewn out her seven pillars" (Prov. ix. 1.) Her "law" they are exhorted not to "forsake" (Prov. i. 8.) She crieth to them, and uttereth her beseeching voice in the following language:—"How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? And the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge? Turn you at my reproof: behold I will pour out my spirit unto you." To those children who reject this exhortation, she says: "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded. But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me: for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord: they would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. For the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them," Prov. xx. 32. The "simple" or deceived ones who "turn away" are they who do not "understand wisdom," Prov. viii. 5. They refuse to listen in times of calmness, to the knowledge, counsel and the reproof, expressed in the varied words of the Spirit; and their turning away is the means of "slaying" those of a like mind whom the wisdom of the Spirit describes as "the scorners" that "delight in their scorning" and "the fools" that "hate knowledge."

Divine reproof is not confined to plain injunctions and interdicts. It comprehends all the "things written aforetime for our learning, and admonition," (Rom. xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11,) whether by inspired prophets, apostles or scribes: in other words, the Holy Scriptures, which from Genesis to Revelation, are "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," 1 Tim. iii. 15-16. Inspired history and biography present divine reproof in a practical form; and this we know, from our acquaintance with human affairs, is a most powerful deterrent in enforcing the laws of a nation. The government may frame enactments, but only by the law-abiding citizens will they be regarded. "Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil," (Rom. xiii. 3); and only to the evil when they see that the ruling power "beareth not the sword in vain" (verse 4).

Human statutes, if not supplemented by practical examples of their application, soon cease to be operative. A legislature, elected or hereditary, may devise the most elaborate code of laws, but if there are no officers of state to put them into execution they will be as worthless as the paper on which they are written. The law courts, prisons and scaffolds, are analogous to the administration of Divine law towards nations as recorded in the historical portions of the Bible; all of which are "profitable for reproof or correction."

In like manner the examples of divine commendation are of inestimable value "for instruction in righteousness;" none—either warnings to avoid or patterns to imitate—could be dispensed with; all are necessary "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," 1 Tim. iii. 16, 17. Would man of his own volition have recorded these? He might have done so in respect to the marks of approval; but would he voluntary have chronicled for the information of future generations his own misdeeds, and the divine judgments they incurred? We have only to look at current literature to obtain an answer. "Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness, but a faithful man who can find?" Prov. xx. 6. It requires, indeed, a mind strongly imbued with divine principles to give publicity to a mild reproof.

The present is not a time when God's judgments are so manifest to the natural eye as they were in the days of Israel's nationality. They are in operation, but to a limited extent, and are visible only to the eye of faith. They affect both nations and individuals, and the measure of their application is dependent on the degree of relationship toward the things of God. The divine condemnation of Israel expresses this in a most striking manner. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore will I punish you for your iniquities," Amos iii. 2.

The community of which Israel is a type must not expect to escape; it is as true now as in the days of old that "that judgment must begin at the house of God," 1 Peter iv. 17. The ecclesias at Ephesus, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, and Laodicea (Rev. ii. and iii.) were exhorted to repent of their sins of omission and commission. The warnings given to them are for the admonition of all succeeding generations of saints. "He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," is the Nota Bene of each epistle. The voice of inspiration is now silent, but its author can, by events, cause its past utterances to make a deeper impression than hitherto on the minds of wisdom's children, and this will unquestionably be one result of our present tribulation. Those who are of "poor and a contrite spirit, and tremble" at Jehovah's word (Isaiah lxvi. 2) will be led to inquire what more they can do, as "followers of God" (Eph. v. 1) in attaining to the perfection of their heavenly Father, Matt. v. 48

"The Lord looketh from heaven; he beholdeth all the sons of men. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth" (Psalms xxxiii. 14;) and "all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do," Heb. iv. 13. The controversy concerning inspiration is an illustration of these statements. Prior to its commencement, it was within the knowledge of few, if any, that there existed in our midst some who were inclined to accept a false doctrine concerning the authorship of the Bible. It was known, however, to "Him with whom we have to do." The Creator and also the Head of the One Body perceived that which was hidden from its members. Hence the necessity for a chain of circumstances by which it should be developed. All the wholesome lessons which will be either learned or emphasized by means of the present disruption it is impossible to foresee, probably many more than any of us dream of. Increased acquaintance with, and reverance for, the inspired word cannot but have a powerful effect in deepening and extending the application of its immutable principles. Thus that which would be the destruction of a mere human organization may, under God's guidance, work out the salvation of his Household.

Some brethren have been blamed for hasty action, and others for tardiness, but rest assured, it will be seen, are long, that both have had their use; that, in fact, the deficiencies of one and another from the very inception of this controversy, have helped to produce the results intended; and that consequently, however imperfect the instruments used by the Most High, the work wrought through them, whether by inspiration or providence, is infallibly perfect. We may even yet see alienation give place to firm friendship, discord to harmony, war to peace, division to unity, sadness to exultation, condemnation to praise, tribulation to comfort, the thoughts of the flesh to the thoughts of the Spirit, the words of the man to the words of God, and human action may become a more complete reflex of its Divine Model.

If such a blessed result should be realized, it will demonstrate on a large scale that which has been experienced individually, that divine "chastening" though "grievous for a time, afterward yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" Heb. xii 11), and it will lead many to exclaim in language similar to that which Joseph addressed to his brethren (Gen. l.xv. 5-8), it was God who did it. We might then see a repetition of that fear of God which in the early days of the apostolic age was visibly expressed in "breaking bread with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people," Acts ii. 46-47.

The formulating of propositions concerning the Bible, such as those we have elaborated, has been described as "artificial buttressing." The Bible, it is said, can stand by itself and does not need any human support; the truth being "a natural fortress whose defences are impregnable;" and "those who think otherwise are making manifest how little faith they have in the truth, and how much they have in measures of their own devising."

This is a serious charge, and if true, convicts every one who contends for the divine authorship of the Holy Scriptures, of fulfilling, in so doing the dictates of the flesh. What an extraordinary conclusion! The Bible is admitted to be from God, to be a revelation of the mind of Him whose "thoughts are not" as man's thoughts (Isa. lv. 8) and to be the only writings "able to make wise unto salvation," and yet, to so describe it, to contend for belief of this as essential to instruction in its contents, and to refuse fellowship to those who believe in the infallible authorship of some parts, is to give way to the promptings of sinful flesh! God's ways are not as man's ways, and yet to uphold his inspired record of them, is one of the "works of the flesh!" Gal. v. 19.

We may, like Paul, occupy ourselves in "the defence of the gospel" (Phil. i. 17), but, we must not defend the book of the Gospel! We say, as admonished by the Spirit, "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3) but to carefully guard the holy writings which contain the gradual unfolding of the "one faith" is to manifest a want of faith! We may exhibit that love which "rejoiceth in the truth" (1 Cor. xiii. 6), we may seek in all things to "follow the truth" (Gal. iii. 1) and to faithfully "walk in the truth" (3 John 4), but we must not practically vindicate the word of truth!" 2 Tim. ii. 15. To do so is to give heed to the commandments of men that turn from the truth" (Tit. i. 14) to indulge in "unnecessary agitation!" to further weaken "the feeble knees!" (Heb. xii 12) to "hinder the progress of the faith!" and to "depart from" its "simplicity!" The Jews suffered torture and death at the hands of enemies in defence of their sacred writings (Josephus against Apion i. 8,) and many claimants to the name of Christian have been martyred rather than reject, or abjure what they believe to teach, but Christadelphians do not by word and action reflect back on its divine origin and consequent infallibility! They who do so are described as "joined to their idols!" They are guilty of idolatry! and are therefore classed with those who exhibit "rebellion, witchcraft and stubbornness" 1 Sam. xv. 23. They are on a par with adulterers, fornicators, murderers, and drunkards; and are no better than the promoters of "hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings"—of all whom it is declared they "shall not inherit the kingdom of God" Gal. v. 19-21. Being guilty of idolatry they are deserving only to have a "part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death" Rev. xxi. 8!

O temporal O Mores! O shades of the benighted past! Will ye not rise up in judgment against the boasted lights of the present? Is this the climax to God's revived witnessing for Gospel truth? Is this the fruit of "God's husbandry" 1 Cor. iii. 9, in the present generation? Is this the top stone of "God's building" in the latter half of the nineteenth century? Is it a part of divine teaching that the "stones" 1 Pet. ii. 5, should find fault with the "hammer" Jer. xxiii. 29, by which they have been "hewn?" Are they authorized to describe defect—even in small things—to the "foundation?" Eph. ii. 20. Is it possible that they who when emerging out of darkness "searched the Scriptures daily" Acts xvii. 11, for infallible truth, now describe some parts to be of fallible authorship? Is this the divinely appointed method of "rightly dividing the word of truth?" 2 Tim. ii. 15.

Read again, ye who claim to be "the most intelligent brethren," and those having "largest and most matured experience in the truth," the account given by Dr. Thomas of the ten day's tribulation under the fifth seal. By a decree of Diocletian all who bore the name of Christian were subjected to a fierce persecution. They were prohibited from meeting for religious worship and were ordered to "deliver all the sacred books into the hands of the magistrates" to be burnt. "The fellow-servants and the brethren who cheerfully submitted to the stripping of their edifices resolved not to interrupt their religious assemblies, nor to deliver their sacred books to the flames. It was not long before this resolution brought upon them the punishment of death. Many were added to the souls underneath the altar; but there were likewise multitudes who saved their worthless lives by discovering and betraying the Holy Scriptures into the enemy's hand. A great number of catholic bishops and presbyters acquired, by this criminal compliance, the opprobrious epithet of Traditors; and their offence was productive of much present scandal, and of much future discord among the professors in the Roman Africa. The copies, as well as the versions, of Scripture, were already so multiplied in the empire that the most severe inquisition could no longer be attended with any fatal consequence; and even the sacrifice of those volumes, which, in every congregation, were preserved for public use, required the consent of some treacherous and unworthy professors.

It was preeminently a war upon the word of the Deity, which he has magnified above all his name. Treachery to this was therefore the high crime against him. If all had been traditors, Jupiter and Hercules would have triumphed, and in these times we should have been groping in the darkness of heathenism and in the shadow of death. But thanks be to the Deity and the faithful brethren, who by their little strength were enabled to circumvent the devil and satan. These preserved the Holy Scriptures of the apostles, transmitting them to us through 'the remnant' which succeeded them. This remnant performed against the papists, who in after ages tried to exclude men from the Word, the same services as the brethren against the pagans; so that we have received the revelation of the mystery not by the favor of Catholics, but in spite of traditors and heathen who were reckless of its fate."—Eureka II, pp. 255-7.

In again referring to this historical incident Dr. Thomas says "The effort made in the Diocletian and Galerian persecution of the fifth seal period to destroy every copy of the Holy Scriptures that could be found, while it failed, served to endear these writings to the faithful, and to stir them up to a more diligent study of their contents. The satan perceived that 'the truth as it is in Jesus' could not be extinguished so long as a single copy of the writings of the apostles and prophets remained in circulation. It has been the satanic policy, therefore, of all the ages and generations either to suppress the Scriptures by destroying them, or forbidding people to read them, or to persuade readers of them that their true meaning is too recondite and obscure to be 'seen' by any but a highly educated and learned few. This has been the policy of pagan, catholic, papist and protestant; a policy that has been circumvented by the Brethren by all means within their reach. They are devoted students of the Scriptures themselves, and earnest in their endeavors to induce all within the sphere of their influence to study them also; and to enable them to understand them that they may believe and obey the truth; for they believe with full assurance of faith, the saying of Paul that 'every Scripture divinely inspired is profitable for teaching, for conviction, for the instruction in righteousness; that the man of the Deity may be perfect, completely fitted for every good work.'" 2 Tim. iii. 16.—Eureka II., pp. 284 5.

In writing about "the efforts of Constans to induce the Donatists to coalesce with the Catholic church" Dr. Thomas further says, "The idea was odious to them of a coalition with those, who in the Diocletian persecution and distress, in order to avoid martyrdom, had delivered up the Holy Scriptures, the best gift of the Deity to man. The zeal for the word was a remarkable characteristic of the woman's seed.

It underlaid the whole controversy between the Catholics and Dissenters of the period. The Catholics very lightly esteemed the Scriptures, and were daily withdrawing the people's attention from them more and more, until at length they came to legislate against the use of them by the laity at all. Not so their opponents, with whom the sacred writings have always been a tower of strength against their enemies. To the fugitive woman was providentially committed the custody of the Divine Oracles, for it is the remnants of her seed which are testified to have held the testimony of the anointed Jesus, which is to be found only in the Holy Scriptures. No wonder, therefore, that these worthy and excellent people turned a deaf ear to every overture of reconciliation with the Word—neglecting adherents of the tyrannical church of Constans," —Eureka III, page 123.

These extracts furnish information from which several useful lessons may be learned. They show us what was the belief of the author of Eureka. The "Holy Scriptures" were to him "divine oracles," "divinely inspired," and therefore "the Deity's word;" they are described as containing "the testimony of the anointed Jesus," a definition applicable to all the writings comprised in the Old and New Testaments. Is it likely that he who styles them "the best gift of God to man" would have admitted that any portion was a gift from man to man? that it consisted partly of God's Word and partly of man's word? that "divine oracles" were partly composed of human oracles, or, worse still, that divine inspiration was fallible, and that its erring product had been magnified by Deity above his name? in other words, that anything coming from the flesh could be the subject of divine glorification!

The day is fast approaching when they who, under the fifth seal, "were slain for the Word of God and for the testimony which they held" (Rev vi 9) will rise from the dead. How shall we who live under the sixth vial meet them? And will they receive us? As fellow companions, though living ages apart, in fidelity to the Word of Jehovah? Suppose they were now to awake from their sleep what would they say to us, and we to them? The following imaginary conversation will be a sufficient indication:—

Fifth Seal Martyrs for God's Word, —"Ye highly blessed ones: ye who have in your homes complete copies of the Holy Scriptures, who possess them in such a portable form that ye can carry them in the hand, who at any time refer to them or read them, without fear of bodily harm, who can hear them expounded in your assemblies without danger of molestation, ye blessed ones, ye should highly value your privileges. When we labored to "keep the commandments of God" (Rev xii 17) we had no such convenience and immunity from fear. Copies of the Holy Scriptures were too rare and expensive to be owned by each of us. They were mostly kept at our places of meeting, whither we resorted to hear the reading of their precious words; to retain them in memory was our earnest aim, and much envied were they who were able to procure but a fragment of God's Word. Even these boons were the object of envy and hatred by our idol worshipping contemporaries. Our refusal to enter their temples was a practical condemnation of their religious superstition; our numbers were on the increase and theirs on the decrease; fears were excited that our religion would supplant theirs; to prevent this, it was thought but needful to deprive us of our sacred writings; hence the decree that all should be burnt; for that purpose we were required to surrender them; we absolutely refused, but some among us acted a treacherous part; they discovered to the enemy the place where our ecclesial copies were hidden. They thereby saved their lives, but we fell victims to the malice of the Pagan Dragon."

Sixth Vial Defenders of Infallible Authorship.—We heartily commend you for so nobly defending the Holy Scriptures. You showed thereby an unalterable conviction that they were from God, and that they were a priceless boon to all to whom they come. You lost your lives for Christ's sake to save them in the day when he who is our life shall appear. Not so with your perfidious brethren; they saved their frail lives for a time, and then passed into the abode of darkness where ye have dwelt, to lose eternal life when called forth by the Judge of quick and dead. Five to fifty years at most in this sinful world preferred to a life of endless bliss! Poor deluded ones! Victims of present fear and feeling! Led by the seen! Blind to the unseen! Afraid of man but without the fear of God! Sowing to the flesh, of the flesh they reap.

We rejoice that ye were faithful, though mid the faithless found. Ye gave an example for all time—an example for all time—an example which has not been lost. Others have followed your steps. To you and them we owe an untold debt. The written Work for All.

A few years ago, in preparation for a great oratorio, a very important rehearsal was in progress. There was a vast array of performers, and in front of the hundreds of musicians and singers stood the able conductor, Sir Michael Costa, wielding his baton. The mighty chorus filled the building, and the thunder of the organ, the roll of the drums, the clear ringing tones of the cornets, the clash of the cymbals, and the beautiful notes of the stringed instruments combined to make splendid harmony.

"Stop!" All waited in wondering silence for Sir Michael's reason for his sudden command. "Where is the piccolo?" he asked. In that immense choir and powerful orchestra one man had been silent, and in all the grand peals of music Sir Michael Costa had missed that tiny note, and the whole was to him imperfect.

The incident has a great lesson for us. In the mighty chorus of the service and adoration of God's people, the Lord Jesus will miss you or me, humble and lone though we may be, if we are silent and idle.

My son, forget not my law, but let thine heart keep my commandments. Trust in the Lord with all thine heart and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.—Solomon.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide The Restitution to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of The Restitution about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

The Bible: its Principles and Texts

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 309 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10823 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

Please don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

Brother B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 866 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1.50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

The Restitution is only $1.50 per year. Try it a year.

A Letter to A Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where hundreds of titles are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will mail them to you post paid for 75c each.

The article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue of Oct. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 75 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark their address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th ave Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. Not by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 8, 1911. NUMBER 10.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Prince of Peace.

He is coming, O ye people,
Coming soon—the Nazarine;
Not with flaunting, noisy tumult,
Though none greater, man hath seen.
Shout, ye heralds, tell the story,
Never let your crying cease,
For He comes, this man of glory,
King of kings and Prince of peace.

Have we "set our house in order"
For this guest, so soon to come?
Shall we entertain Him gladly,
So with us He'll feel at home?
Are we eager for His coming?
Is the banquet table spread?
Is the pillowed bed quite ready
For the tired and weary head?

Do we wait, anticipating,
(As we do for men of earth)
For this Man, among all nations
Lord, and King, and Prince by birth?
Shall we bring of our heart's treasures,
Love and praise and honor meet,
And in loving adoration
Lay them at His blessed feet?

Do we take Him at His promise,
That the appointed day draws near?
Do our hearts forget their aching,
And rejoice with gladsome cheer?
Have we given all our being
His to be, and His alone?
And are we prepared to meet Him
When He comes to claim His own?

Help us, Lord, to love Thy coming,
Thou, who rile eternal art;
Breathe Thy gracious tender spirit
Into every waiting heart.
Thou art pure and meek and lowly,
Come, and bid our longings cease;
Thou art true and wise and holy,
King of kings and Prince of peace.

Communicated.

Things Present and Things to Come.

This year promises to be one of general unrest and unstableness; not only in our own country but all over the world. There is at present every indication that we are entering upon a period of social, religious and political upheavals, a tumultuous clamoring for a change and betterment of present conditions. We may therefore look for a strenuous if not a violent effort to reorganize and readjust things upon a more satisfactory basis. The world socially and politically has gotten itself into a tangle and desperate efforts are already threatening to cut or break the confused net work of discord into which society has fallen and release itself from the competitive ambition of designing men, and antagonistic elements that completely surrounds the whole social and political fabric.

A condition so unsatisfactory as to create discontent and general unrest may not necessarily be devoid of worldly prosperity, even though it be attended with more or less forbodings of coming danger. No threatening disaster will stop men from getting gain and accumulating property and money, and especially when all the necessary machinery of gain getting is at hand. The masses may suffer and groan under oppressive conditions, yea threaten violence and revolution, but at the same time the forces of finance, trade and traffic will go on expanding and accumulating. It is in times of national trouble that the rich become richer for they controll the necessities of the hour, and can dictate terms and conditions such as the famishing multitude can but feebly resist. Society cannot reorganize itself, or reform itself, that is it cannot relieve itself of the burden of which it complains. There is no human remedy for a world that is out of joint, and otherwise distorted with sin and sickness to which it has so long accomodated itself, that the tendancy is to reproduce the very condition of which it complains, and vainly struggles to overcome.

Nothing short of infinite wisdom and almighty power is competent and able to readjust human affairs upon a basis of righteousness and peace. More over this is just what is impending at the present time, even the return of the Lord Jesus from heaven and the establishment of his kingdom. "When the judgments of God are in the earth, the people will learn righteousness," and not before. There can be no satisfactory condition of peace and good will until justice and right prevail. The social and political reformers of the hour delude themselves with the dream that things are "growing better," yet at the same time acknowledging that new forms of vice are constantly coming to the surface on every hand. The "growing better" dream has its origin in the new discoveries of modern times—in the general diffusion of knowledge and the mastery that man has gained over the forces of nature in a material way adding much to the convenience, comfort and pleasure of the world in the way of rapid transportation, and otherwise facilitating the conduct of commercial and industrial affairs. But after all credit has been given to man's enterprise and genius in things material it has not made him morally better but rather has dwarfed and stunted all spiritual growths by virtue of the pride and vanity he exercises over his great achievement in material things. A state of self complacency and gratification resulting from the great and wonderful triumphs that man has gained in the development of natural agencies conducive to his advantage and pleasure in a material way, as compared with the old slow going ways of former times.

The conquering of time and space is certainly wonderful, all tending to hasten the ripening of the world's harvest for the reaper's sickle, creating just the condition the prophetic Word requires for the Lord's coming. The return of Christ does not occur at a time when famine, pestilence and war is so appalling as to cause everybody to say the world is "coming to an end," but rather at a time so promising in many ways as to inspire the thought "My Lord delayeth his coming." The inner thought is since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were." No indeed, "in such an hour as you think not the Son of Man cometh," and hence the warning. Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares, for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Luke xxi. The foregoing language certainly indicates a state of things well calculated to make one insensible to any apprehension of approaching danger.

There will be such a mingling of business activity and apparent prosperity, and pleasure as to make men forget that their aim, ambition and energy is all devoted to the things of time and sense. Though great wickedness abound, and crime and violence fill the earth, it ceases to be regarded as anything more than the ordinary order of things, that has always been the common and daily experience in the world's history.

All that is unfavorable and regretable will as it is at this moment be looked upon as natural and unavoidable, thus fostering a disposition to excuse and condone forbidden deeds of iniquity, if only the mad rush for gold and power is in no way seriously impeded. The heavens are bright, the air serene, crops are bountiful, business prospects promising, the means of pleasure manifold and alluring and the phantoms of gain getting fascinating who can have the courage to predict; that a supernatural crisis is at hand, when all things natural point in an opposite direction? Indeed, what men are pleased to term the natural has in times past proved to be very deceptive. Such was the case in the days of Noah, and in the days of Lot. Eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, building and planting, buying and selling, all this was very natural, but nevertheless it proved to be a very deceptive and unreliable outlook for the generation then living. While not in darkness as to the approaching day of the Lord still we are surrounded with uncertainty as to the exact day and hour, when the righteous Judge will appear upon the scene, hence the words of Jesus, "Watch ye therefore and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

There is a possibility of being unworthy and therefore unable to stand before the Son of Man, if found surfeiting and intoxicated with the spirit of worldly mindedness and the cares of this life. Of all things pertaining to this life time is the most precious. Misspent days are always a source of regret and sorrow of heart. Weeping and wailing will not atone for self inflicted misfortunes, nor restore that which through negligence and indifference has been lost. Esau's tears did not recover the blessing that he had forfeited to satisfy the craving of his stomach. The mess of potage was but a momentary pleasure, betraying his weakness and making manifest his unfitness to become the ancestor of him who when hungry could wait for bread and resist the instinctive desire until the tempter had fled.

The Bible history of things past was written for our instruction that we might profit by the failures of the profane, and the successes of the God-fearing who always kept God in mind.

In these last days therefore how necessary and important that we take no chance, nor hazard our safety by imitating unconsciously through the deceptive appearance of things natural, the career of those who stumbled and fell beyond recovery. While the political and national situation is not yet fully matured and ready for the establishment of the kingdom and reign of Christ, we do not feel justified in saying as much concerning the "thief like" coming of the righteous Judge to gather his saints into his presence. That the time of the dead is imminent, that is at hand, can hardly be doubted by all those who are watching the signs of the times as indicated in the moral, social and political conditions now current. The judgment of the household of the called ones is certainly preliminary to his manifestation in Zion as the King of kings and Lord of lords. We may therefore be on the look out for the day of account giving, and the ordeal of reckoning that will determine who is fit and worthy of eternal life, and the glory of the kingdom.

There was a time when the great apostasy cast a shadow of spiritual death over the Roman world, and the people were denied access to the Scriptures. Civil and religious liberty were exiled, while ignorance and superstition darkened both the heavens and the earth. At the present time, however, our lot is cast in a state quite the reverse of what occurred in medieval times of darkness. There is both civil and religious liberty, a general diffusion of knowledge, an age of learning and ripe scholarship, free access to the Scriptures of truth, with every advantage for storing the mind with an exact knowledge of God's work and purpose in the earth. With all these advantages over former times, the multitude, the learned and unlearned have become so puffed up over man's achievements that they boycott the Scriptures as out of date.

In these last days of Gentile times God has providentially favored mankind by awakening as it were the world from the stupifying slumber of mental and moral death, a fit prelude to the literal awakening of those called ones now sleeping in the dust. O what a stupendous miracle, an army of dead ones of whom the world was not worthy standing as living monuments of God's goodness, and the infallibility of his covenants and promises. Yours waiting and watching.

Ours is a sunny religion, born of divine love, and one of the fruits of the Holy Spirit is joy. A joyless Christian is a libel on his profession. We ought to walk so close to Jesus as to be always in his sunshine, and make so little of earthly ills and vexations and losses as never to let them envelop us in an atmosphere of Arctic midnight. Paul made a dungeon ring with holy melodies. Every follower of Christ should strive to make his daily life a song as well as a gospel sermon —T. L. Cuyler.

Lives That Lift.

"Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Jas. iv. 10.

What kind of a life should one live to be lifted up? One as near perfect as is possible for man to live.

What kind of a life is nearest perfect? The one that is accepted by the Life Giver.

Who is accepted? Those that obey his commands.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark xvi. 16. "Whosoever believeth in the only begotten Son of God shall not perish, but have everlasting life." John i. 16. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 17. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23. "God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt you in due time." 1 Pet. v. 56. "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xviii. 3. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 12. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." 1 Thess. iii, 6, 14. "Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." Matt. xxiii. 12; Luke xviii. 14 "When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, there is lifting up; and he will save the humble person." Job xxii. 29. "The fear of the Lord is the instruction of wisdom; and before honor is humility." Prov. xv. 33. "A man's pride shall bring him low but honor shall uphold the humble in spirit." Prov. xxix. 23.

No one should try to exalt themselves in the sight of God; for there is no promise of such a life being lifted up; but he has promised to lift up the humble, and those that watch for his coming, as he has commanded. Christ said, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads." Why? "For your redemption draweth nigh." Luke xxi. 28. Those that are redeemed are lifted up, to die no more and will ever live on this earth as fellow-heirs with Christ Jesus our Lord. Then look to Jesus and live, and in living an accepted life you will be lifted up to eternal life.

Yours, in hope.

Editor Restitution:

Your issue of February 15 contained a rich feast of good things. This number alone is worth a year's subscription. Brother Huggins' "Not Changed" has the fearless ring of truth. God grant that Elders and Overseers of all our churches everywhere may take this fearless and positive stand for Gospel purity.

Then Sister Sadie Skeels' "Random Thoughts" make wholesome reading. Sadie your thoughts are noble, and you have the rare faculty of expressing them in a clear and convincing manner. Please let us have them often. Of course you do not understand that those who speak and write against, and earnestly denounce false doctrines and dangerous heresies are those referred to "who soweth discord among brethren," and who "are an abomination unto the Lord." But rather those who ride hobbies, and teach perverse things. Doctrines not held or taught by the principal body of the Church. These are they who sow discord among brethren. It is they who are an abomination unto the Lord. It is the solemn duty of our Elders, Church organs, Conferences, and all Shepherds and Overseers of the flock to watch diligently and promptly and earnestly remonstrate with all such, admonishing them with love and sound doctrine, and if they remain incorrigible expel them from the fold. Don't you think so, Sadie?

"Appreciation" by L. F. R. is also a rich feast of noble precept. Surely the author of such noble thoughts is a good man. I would dearly love to have him for a neighbor. I feel that I could spend much time profitably in his company.

"Consideration" by Sister Jennie Salisbury also richly deserves honorable mention. I am glad to see so many able and interesting writers among the Sisters. There are also many other choice features from dear ones whose faces we have never seen, but whose manners are familiar as household words.

May God's blessing rest richly upon all, and keep us all spotted from the world and its seductive errors and isms.

The Bereans Column.

[Copy supplied by Indiana Bereans.]

Dear Bereans:

We must be zealous in doing God's will. When Jesus was only twelve years old, he began doing his Father's will. He remained at the temple and talked with the learned men. After his folks had gone a day's journey, and having missed him, they sought him among his relatives but failed to find him. After searching three days they found him in the temple.

On being asked why he had remained behind, he answered "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Luke ii. 49.

On another occasion when his disciples prayed him to eat he told them he had meat to eat that they knew nothing of. The disciples marvelled among themselves, and said Who hath given him to eat? Jesus then told them his "meat was to do the will of him that sent him, and to finish his work," John iv. 34. Jesus tells us if we keep his commandments we shall abide in his love, as he has kept his Father's commandments and is now abiding in his love. See John xv. 10.

Therefore we should study the Bible daily, and know what we are to do, then put in practice what we have learned. Happy and blessed indeed will we be if we follow his steps, and then we can say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 7-8.

With love toward all,

Dear Bereans:

Let us reflect for a while upon the little word "Glory." It has many shades of meaning, though the primary meaning is: Clear, brightness, splendor. It also means praise, honor. We use the word glory and its derivatives to describe certain qualities of a thing or person, ranging all the way from things pertaining to this mortal temporal condition of affairs, to the future eternal and heavenly joys that await God's faithful ones, even to the very splendor and magnificence of the divine presence itself, which is too bright for mortal eye to look upon and live.

There is the glory of terrestrial bodies, such as the fishes, fowls, all animal creation; there is glory in the wonderful works of nature—the mountains, canyons, geysers, waterfalls, the peaceful valleys. All these seem sufficient to feast our eyes upon forever.

There is the glory of bodies celestial—the sun, moon and stars. How intensely bright seems the sun at midday, how glorious the gorgeous sunset, how beautiful the silvery moonlight! All these are glorious, yet there is sin, sorrow and suffering amid it all. We are mortal. We are prone to do things to receive the glory and praise of men, but the Word says to do all things to the glory of God. For "all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; the grass withereth and the flower fadeth away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever." Further: The sufferings of this world are not to be compared with the glory to be revealed in man and the earth.

As Bereans let us search the Scriptures to discern the purpose of God concerning us, through Christ Jesus; the promises made to man and the means whereby he may enjoy the fulfillment of them. In making this search we will be surprised to find the word glory and glorious used so often. A depth of meaning in that little word! I will cite to only a few.

We are called to "eternal glory," 1 Peter v. 10. Called through the gospel. In 2 Cor. iv. 3-4 we find it is a "glorious gospel." The Church is to be glorious. "Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it, and present it unto himself a glorious Church without spot or wrinkle."

Christ's coming to receive his church or bride will be glorious. Titus ii. 13, "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory," Luke xxi. 27. Coincident with this event is the resurrection and change. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body.

Numbers xiv. 21, "But as surely as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." The New Jerusalem will be filled with the glory of God clear as crystal; it will not need the sun, moon or stars to lighten it, "for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."

FLORA HARRIS.

Dear Bereans:

If God be for us, who can be against us. The way of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness. Surely the way of righteousness is the way for us to choose. All things work together for good to them that love God. What greater friend could we want than God? He says, he will not fail us nor forsake us. The Psalmist said when my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up. If we forsake God he will forsake us, then we have no friend to go to for help. Some may seem to be friends, but when famines, distress, and tribulation, etc., come there is none but God to help us. Let us pray to God that he may always be with us, for he loves us with an everlasting love. He spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for all.

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Your Sister in Christ,

ROSA ROOSE.

No person will say he is sorry he has been a total abstainer, but there are thousands upon thousands who are sorry they have not been total abstainers; for the use of strong drink has ruined their brightest prospects, and has led to poverty, ill health, and disgrace. The only safe rule to apply to alcoholic liquor is the rule of total abstinence. Shun the first dram, never become the moderate drinker. See what a dangerous man he is to society and himself! Look upon some young boy as he turns into a saloon on his way home, just for one drink. See him as he turns out at midnight, dazed, maddened, and no doubt ready for any crime. Let not this cry of anguish be that of your parents, "My son, my soul would to God I had died for you!"

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 8, 1911.

CHINESE statesmen are noting the fact that Russian papers are urging their government to occupy with the military certain Chinese territory, on the pretext that China cannot cope with the plague and famine condition, and it is asserted that much news of the ravages of the plague is being aggravated by Russia, in order to lend color to this movement.

ON February 23 the German reichstag voted to increase the army. One reason for the movement was the increased armaments and military activity in France and England. Also this was necessary because the United States is "developing in an imperialist direction," and presumably will need to be watched by Germany. Our people keep crying to our statesmen to prevent entanglements with Europe, but there seems to be a power higher even than the "will of the people" and we cannot keep out.

AT a meeting held in Paris, March 4, M. Pichon who was foreign minister in the cabinet just dissolved said in a speech regarding present conditions: "During long and difficult years as foreign minister, I have labored constantly to solidify the friendship between France and the United States. I am not entitled to any great merit in doing this, because how could I have been blind enough to act otherwise? There exists between England, the United States and France so marked an identity of aspirations and solidarity of interests that it would be chimerical to seek to separate these grand peoples, who aim ever at common ends—liberty, social progress, democracy, and the maintenance of peace throughout the world. In concluding the speaker affirmed "his successor would continue to thus strengthen the co-operative friendship of these three nations." Brethren, note the direction of the wind by the course of straws tossed in the air. According to "our selfish interests" are men or nations allied. Watch and see where mutual interest leads.

THE plague is still marching on in China. From Harbin comes word of an entire village where every person is dead, many bodies lying unburied in the open air. The American Red Cross society operating in China send word that in the infected districts including the provinces of Kiang Su and Anhui, there are 2,500,000 people facing starvation. The "pneumonic plague" is working southward toward this famine region. It has ravaged Manchuria, and thousands of refugees have fled toward Chefoo, in Chantung provines. Hundreds die daily, and the frozen ground prevents burial, and rows of coffins line the roadsides. American Consul Wilder at Shanghai says that people stricken with this form of plague die in a few hours, none ever recover, and no remedy has been discovered. Thousands of bodies are being cremated. The plague is only 150 miles from the more populous districts, and if it but reaches there the result will indeed be appalling.

INCREASING apprehension and uneasiness is the description of Europe today. Austria and Italy are near a break, and each is massing troops toward their frontiers, both animated by the feeling that bespeaks trouble. Italy has a scheme to recover from Austria Trieste on the coast, and also Trent in the Tyrol. Whether the triple alliance can still stand under such a measure is the question. This year is to witness the jubilee celebration of the unification of Italy, and invitation is given to monarchs of other nations to be present, and of course it is natural to suppose that those nations with whom Italy is in alliance would respond to the invitation. But this celebration is distasteful to the pope, and he advises that all Catholic monarchs not attend. Consequently Germany and Austria will be represented by lower officials, and Italy regards this as an insult. Spain and the Vatican are again sparing, and it seems there is but little hope of healing the breech. Cardinal Merry del Val the papal secretary, says the Vatican will not recognize Spain's late legislation regarding the religious orders, and the Spanish premier, Sig. Canalejas, rejects this interferance. France is having trouble, and a new cabinet is being formed, and its members must be pledged to a Socialist policy that will include a general war on the religious orders. The ministry that has been overthrown saw that this continued internal turmoil would weaken the nation in its foreign relations, and sought to pacify the various church societies, but this new ministry means war to the knife. Russia and France are getting further apart, and the press of France scorns England as an ally because she is at present seeking favor with Germany. We will soon see France in that position described as "splendid isolation." Be watchful, brethren, for the movement of nations means much at this momentous time.

Sunday School Lesson.

MARCH 19, 1911.

Defeat Through Drunkenness. 1 Kings xx. 12 21.

Golden Text—"It is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink."—Proverbs xxxi. 4.

In its natural course this lesson would belong between lessons 8 and 9 of the quarter, in the latter part of Elijah's life. The king of Syria had called around him thirty-two kings of the smaller tribes allied with him and had gone into the territory of Israel, and was camped near Samaria, the capital. Ahab was so impressed by what this army had done in the way of devastating his land, burning and killing as they swept on, that in his cowed heart he was ready to give up whatever they asked. So when the Syrian king sent word that he demanded the gold and silver and precious things of Ahab's house, even to the wives that composed his household, he returned word that he would give these up. The Syrian king saw it was coming his way easy, so sent word that on the day following he would send men into the city, and whatever they saw and wanted, would be taken, thus demanding not only what was the king's but also any thing they chanced to desire belonging to the people.

At this Ahab called the elders together and asked what should be done, and they counseled that he refuse to accede to this demand. So word was sent back that what had been promised Ahab would do, but this demand would not be complied with. The Syrian king returned word that his soldiers were numerous, so that the dust of Samaria would not make a handful for each man, and that he would surely take what he had demanded. Ahab sent him back word the substance of which is found in Proverbs xxvii. 1: "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

The lesson text tells of how the Syrian kings while drinking and at their ease, and the troops were at rest, at noonday word was brought that a company of men had come out of the city. The report was made little of, the number being small compared to what they could boast, so the king directed they be taken alive. Instead of being taken alive, each man of the princes of Israel slew his man—panic ensued, the disorganized bands who had relied on numbers for strength, now thought as they were attacked that there was treachery, their officers were drunk, so they fled, and the few thousands that Ahab could muster of fighting men rushed after them and slew them in great numbers. Benhadad the king managed to escape with the soldiers on a horse, but the rout of the army was complete, and the slaughter vast.

This lesson is the usual Temperance Lesson of the quarter. The Syrian king and his followers were drinking and having a revel when they were attacked, and being drunk and unprepared they were overthrown. If we take the list of things that were demanded by this king of Ahab, we see just what the liquor dealer demands today. Benhadad sent word to Ahab saying "Thy silver and thy gold is mine, thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine." Then he went further and said "My servants shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants, and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant in thine eyes, they shall take it away." This invading host had taken all the wealth of the land, with its harvests, all sorts of valuables, the living of the people, and gave them nothing in return, not regarding the welfare of the people at all.

This is just what intemperence does now, takes the wealth and prosperity of the people, leaves them naked and penniless, destitute; giving nothing in return, and caring nothing for the welfare of the people. Besides taking a man's wealth it drives out his reason, his memory is effaced, his body is diseased, his strength is gone, he is full of sores and wounds, his wife is filled with woe and his children are beggars. He is made into a beast, a thief and murderer.

To show by actual figures just what the liquor business gets out of the people it is stated that we have in our land 240,000 saloons, and the drink bill of the nation is $1,400,000,000. This will give to each saloon about $5,900, and each saloon pays a license of an average not to exceed $500. So it is easy to see what this king alcohol takes, and we know he gives only misery in return for it all. He demands our husbands, wives, children, homes—our gold and silver, and we give it to him, and get nothing back of value—he cares nothing for the welfare of the people, no more than did Benhadad when he invaded Israel.

A great wave of temperance swept over the country a short time ago, and many places voted "dry" and the saloons were closed. But the enemy is alert and seeking to recover his lost ground, as did the Syrians when they returned to the strife later. So while much has been done much more remains to be done before intemperence is abolished.

Ahab could never have accomplished what he did with this small number against so large an army if he had to rely on human strength. A prophet of the Lord told him that the host of the Syrians would be delivered into his hand. It was explained that a human instrumentality in the shape of the small body of princes who should make the attack would be used, but it was to be done in order that "thou (Ahab) shalt know that I am the Lord."

While it is our duty to in all proper ways combat the evil of intemperance it is doubtful if the small number that can be mustered in the fight, can effectively combat this giant with the hold he has on the appetite of man. It will only be eradicated when God again steps in and shows to the world that "I am the Lord." While waiting for that happy day, we are in the conflict to do what we can to help save some few from the power of the demon, and so help a little in making the world better because of having lived.

It becomes to every boy and girl a question of defeat or victory. In the struggle this week that is past were you defeated or victorious? What of the week to come?

Editor Restitution:

The one great kingdom that has dominated over the territory of God's chosen people for so long, will soon have finished its allotted time. The fourth universal division of this mighty empire will soon, yea, is now about to enter its final end. The toes of the image are forming, the horns upon the dreadful and terrible beast are making their appearance, and the little, or eleventh horn may at any time now assert his authority. Then "the time of the end" has arrived, and the hand on God's great clock of time will tick off the remaining time, till the sixth trumpet has finished the work under the prince of this world, and time will be no longer.

In the midst of these "last days" God is still calling, yea, is choosing those who will become heir to the great eternal inheritance, a few are making their election sure, by obeying that form of doctrine divinely delivered.

It was with much pleasure that I was enabled to assist our dear Sister, Grace Stella, the youngest daughter of Sister and our late Brother Stella, of Pomona, to put on Christ by baptism Sunday Feb'y 7. "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven." Matt. x. 32. "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand," John iv. 35.

God's judgments are in the world—a preparation for the last great conflict, that has been the burden of prophecy since the day sin entered the world—is now rapidly drawing to a close. Only a few more years and victory will be proclaimed for the suffering little flock, and "so an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Your Brother abiding.

The Throne of David.

From the time that God took David from the sheep-cotes and set him on a throne, and promised to give to his seed that throne for an everlasting possession, fully a period of four hundred years elapsed till the last of his descendants had the message sent to him by God, Ezekiel xxi. 25-27, "And thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end; thus saith the Lord God Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him."

This prediction was carried out to the letter, see Jeremiah xxxix.

Then another period of nearly six hundred years elapsed till the Seed of David came who was to get his throne for an everlasting possession. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there will be no end." Luke i. 32-33. Jacob's blessing to Judah is frequently quoted by orthodox writers to prove Christ must have come when he did because David's throne and kingdom existed until then. Never a more absurd historical statement was made than this in order to bolster up a false theological theory.

The prophecy reads in the common version, Genesis xlix. 10. "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." From the day that God by the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, overthrew the throne and kingdom of David, not a single descendant of his from that day to this has ever been able to raise up that throne again, or sit on it; and for any one to claim that it existed in some form till Christ came, and say that it then passed to the Romans, is absurd. The Jews as a people were under the government and control of other nations from the time they were carried away to Babylon until the present time, unless a short period commencing a little over a hundred years before the birth of Christ, when the Maccabeans so-called, managed for a short time to throw off the foreign yoke and set up a throne of their own, but the Maccabeans were not descendants of David, or belonging to that tribe, but were of the tribe of Levi, and consequently were usurpers as far as David's throne was concerned.

The first one to place the diadem on his own head (he was high priest) Aristobulus, about B. C. 107. He only reigned one year. His descendants continued to reign until the Romans were called in about the year 65 B.C., and they practically controlled the Jewish people after that.

Jacob's prophecy concerning the sceptre not departing from Judah was uttered probably six hundred years before the birth of David, consequently there were great periods of time elapsed when there could be no throne or sceptre in Judah. The thought evidently in the prophecy is that when Shiloh does come he will be of the tribe of Judah, and when he takes the sceptre it will not depart from him, and to him shall the gathering of the people be. To this agree all the prophets and all the promises concerning Christ.

God says concerning him, Psalms ii. 6-12, Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion," etc. Isaiah says chapter ii. 1-5, The word that Isaiah the son of Amos saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow into it, etc.

So Christ must yet come again to Mount Zion and take possession of David's throne that has been thrown down and lain in the dust for so many ages. It is only those who believe God's promises that he has made concerning that throne and government which will receive the blessing of eternal life when he comes again to raise up the sleeping dead, and establish righteousness in this earth, as God has promised he will do.

The Jews did not look for their Messiah to come in humility and suffering, consequently they rejected him. The so-called orthodox Christian does not look for Jesus to come again to the earth to set up the throne of David which has been overthrown all these ages, because they have no use for such a kingdom, when according to their theory they all go to heaven when they die, a promise never found in the Scriptures.

It was not till well on in the second century when some philosophers, so-called began to get a foothold in the Christian church, and to teach the inherent immortality, and that they went to heaven at death. But this idea was long resisted by those who were looking for Christ to come and take his throne and government, according to God's promise, and it was not till much later till the idea of the Christ coming to this earth to reign was entirely dropped by the early churches, and those who still were looking for his coming were persecuted as heretics by those who had gained the ascendency, and now called themselves orthodox Christians.

Man's creeds or power will never alter God's promises or delay Christ's coming to set up his throne and sweep the wicked rulers and perverters from the earth.

Blessed are all they that do God's will, believe his word, and look for Christ's coming.

Neglect.

Hebrews ii. 3: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?"

This is an important question asked, and necessary to be answered correctly. The dictionary says "Salvation is preserving from death." Death is the penalty of sin, which Adam entailed on his posterity. Jesus came to bring "life and immortality to light through the gospel." He gave his life a ransom for the world, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have eternal life. 1 Cor. xv. 22 23. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. This chapter gives a full description of the resurrection.

Then there is something for man to do. Acts ii. 38, Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.

We are also told that it is necessary to seek for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, by patient continuance in well doing. First it is necessary to get into the well doing, then to continue patiently in it, finally to receive the reward of eternal life, or immortality.

Now to neglect so great salvation, is just to let it alone, do nothing about it, not think of it at all, put it off for some future time. It also can be neglected by getting wrong views, the immortal soul theory, as believed by the orthodox churches. This robs Jesus of what he has to give, makes the resurrection unnecessary, as they claim to go to their reward at death. Consequently the resurrection is not necessary, and Jesus has nothing to give them, as they claim to have eternal life without him.

We are warned to not neglect so great salvation.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Within find draft for ten new yearly subscribers to THE RESTITUTION. I think about all a great many people need is to have their attention called to the fact that they need to take the paper. If each one would take a little pains in this direction we could soon double the subscription list.

I have been at Moorefield since Feb. 10. Five additions so far.

Yours in the work,

ALMUS ADAMS.

Editor Restitution:

Again we renew our faith in the things advocated by THE RESTITUTION which has so long stood for the truths put forth as the cause of our hope, by sending you another subscription to the dear old paper.

We are a little late but trust you will pardon the delay.

Very truly your Brother,

FRANK E. UTTER.

Editor Restitution:

Please change Mrs. Richard Corbaley's address to San Jacinto, Cal., as we have lately moved out here, and grandma thinks she cannot do without THE RESTITUTION. She reads the papers over many times. Her health is good for one of her age, as she is past 88. Her faith is still strong in the soon coming of the Lord.

Yours in the Hope,

MRS. HATTIE L. CAREY.

Obituary.

Died at Moorefield, Neb., Eloised Esther, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Greenlee. Born October 27 1907, died February 26, 1911, aged three years, three months, twenty-nine days.

Eloise was a very bright child, and sunshiny in disposition. She died very suddenly. May God comfort the bereaved parents. We talked to the people from 1st Peter i. 24. The but bloomed, and the enemy blighted it, and the flower faded. But with the returning spring the flowers will bloom again. Let us not sorrow, but wait for the blossoming bud in the kingdom of God where the flower never will fade.

ALMUS ADAMS.

"Nancy Amelia Williams was born in Pennsylvania near Connellsville, Feb. 1. 1843, passed away Feb. 17, 1911, aged 68 years and 16 days.

Married to John Harrin April 14, 1867, at Carlin, Illinois. She was the mother of eight children, F. H. Harrin new York City, A. S. Harrin Corona, California, Mrs. M. D. Hendrix and Charles Harrin Prescott, Kansas, Kittie, Gideon, Fanny and Frances at home. She also leaves three brothers Charles, Nelson and Truman Williams, and a sister Mrs. John Gones, and many relatives and friends to whom her death was a great shock.

In early life she gave her heart to God, and after coming to Kansas she united with the Church of God, in which faith she lived until her death. God in his kindness allowed her the strength to choose the chapter she wanted read, 1 Thessalonians iv. A few days before her death, after assuring her children she was ready to go, she repeated these lines "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Such is the notice sent me for publication, of the loss of a dear sister, which I feel deeply, coming from our old home at Prescott, Kansas, where childhood was spent and made more pleasant by the cheering acquaintance of this good sister. We often spent happy times at their home, and were special friends of their children they being teacher and schoolmates to us. But we are glad she fell asleep in the blessed hope, of which she was a zealous advocate. No funeral sermon was given, as we have no preacher near. The balm of assuring promises alone can sustain the sorrowers. May they find solace in these.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

Editor Restitution:

Find enclosed order for my renewal to THE RESTITUTION. I like the dear old paper. It and the Bible are all the preacher that I have here, being isolated from all of like faith, having not the privilege of meeting with any of you.

I love to read the good letters of exhortation from brothers and sisters throughout the land. It cheers and encourages me, and makes me feel more and more like striving for that dear home where sorrow and trouble can never enter.

Yours looking for the Master,

NINA J. VENABLE.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Please find herewith $2.60 for me another year and the rest for the worthy poor. I hope the good RESTITUTION will prosper more than ever this coming year, and that we may all live nearer to God. Jesus has said strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it.

What a grand promise to man—eternal life with God in his kingdom, to reign for ever and ever. How can we say that we already have eternal life, when life is the promise of God for faith and obedience? A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, and love God with all your heart and soul. This is what we are commanded to do, and what we must do if we ever expect to gain the promise of life, and be worthy of an entrance into the kingdom of God, which he has said he would set up on this earth, and reign forever.

I pray that I may have more of the spirit of Christ, more love, for love is the fulfilling of the law. Love each other, forgiving one another as we expect to be forgiven. Do good to all mankind.

Yours striving for eternal life,

SARAH J. HICKLIN.

BROTHER B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

THE RESTITUTION is only $1.50 per year. Try it a year.

Ebenezer. 1. Sam 7, 12

The copy for this department of THE RESTITUTION is supplied by Brother Robert G. Huggins, of 10028 Lee Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Please send all letters and communications intended for this section direct to him, and save delay.

Our members have been augmented by the addition of Sister Bessie McMurray.

Sister Zoe Adams, of Holbrook, Neb., Secretary of the Nebraska Bereans, writes: "If there are any new names, a change of address, or any thing that will affect my mailing list, I would like to have it sent early in the month. A little forethought on the part of the members will save me considerable work. Will members concerned please take notice of this.

Writing from Wenatchee, Wash., Feb. 13, Bro. Titchenal says: "Have just returned from Deer Park, Wash., where wife and I have held a two weeks meeting. Had good attention, but no immediate results. The seed has been sown in new ground, and we will trust the Father for the increase. We start tomorrow for Felida, Wash., to evangelize for the Northwest Conference. Expect to be gone six weeks from home. In the meantime I expect to hold a public discussion with a Mormon." With this note he sends us an article on "Conditional Fellowship," for which thanks. Bro. Titchenal is not hiding his light or wrapping up his talent in a napkin. The Lord bless him and his work.

A word to the Nebraska Bereans: Next lesson will be rather hard. Where two or more members can get together it will be well for them to study the lesson together, before writing replies. We have not made the lesson hard to perplex any one; but for the purpose of getting the scholars out of the rut of merely compiling Scripture texts to answer a question. Texts are all right to use, to reason, illustrate and prove a statement, but compiled they are useless. You can compile them whether you understand the subject or not. Remember this when you receive next lesson; and study and think deeply over it; and when you reply give your thoughts, reasons, as well as the texts you base them on.

The following commendatory letter free from adulation is strengthening to the Editor, and will be helpful to all loyal supporters of the one faith:

Brother Huggins:

Please accept my thanks for your editorial in last number of Ebenezer—"Not changed." I have long wished that some David might arise and attack the giants of error that are creeping into the church, creating confusion and discord in every congregation, even our conferences not being exempt. Josephites, Sabbath keepers, immortal devilite, pre-existence-ite, feet washers, and others too numerous to mention; all claiming to be of the Church of God, and each persistently riding his pet hobby in the name of the Church.

It seems to me to be the solemn duty of all who hold the pure and unadulterated truth to stand shoulder to shoulder, and lose no opportunity to attack error vigorously, and without gloves, regardless of who it may hit. Refuse to recognize as a brother any man who holds error involving first principles, and earnestly but kindly and lovingly admonishing all brethren who are astray on minor points. I am with you heart and hand in your effort to hold up the standard of purity in regard to matters of faith.

Day before yesterday I was prompted to write an article for publication on this subject. It was mailed to THE RESTITUTION office yesterday, and today I saw your article and read it with joy. Surely it is a trumpet blast with no uncertain sound.

God grant every true son of God may take the same positive stand.

Your Brother in the one hope,
S. H. THOMAS.

Nebraska Berean Report.

Brother Huggins:

I have no report that I think would be of interest to the public, but will give you a brief outline of what we are doing.

I have poor chances of knowing what is being done outside of dues and the membership. Several have paid their dues in full, some pay a few months at a time, while a few have never paid any thing except the initiation fee. So far I have had all the money needed for expenses, and as I have almost enough stationery for the rest of the year, about all the expense I will have will be for postage. I have paid out $9.36 and have on hand $3 85.

We now have 33 members, and have never received but one fine, which speaks well for the society.

We have two local societies, one at Moorefield and one at Blair. Here at Holbrook we have three members, but two of them are away to school, and most of the young people who are interested are busy with school work. I hope to get some more members when school is out, also to use the Berean questions in connection with the Sunday School the coming summer.

Hoping our society may continue to flourish,

ZOE ADAMS, Sec-Treas.

Nebraska Berean Lesson, No. 5.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. Compare man's formation (Gen. ii. 7) with his re-formation (Ezek. xxxvii. 1-10.) Note particularly all similarities.

II. How did the "abundant mercy" of God in raising Christ from the dead give us a "lively hope," that is, the hope of living again? 1 Pet. i. 3, 21; 1 Thess. iv. 14; John xiv. 19; 1 Cor. xv. 20.

III. State seven consequences that logically follow if the dead are not raised. 1 Cor. xv. 13 19.

IV. The destruction of the significance of baptism is an eight consequence. 1 Cor. xv. 29. Show that if the dead are not raised baptism ought not to be practiced. 1 Cor. xv. 29; Rom. vi.

V. Show by a statement in John 5th chapter that if the dead are not raised they are "lost."

VI. By another declaration in the same chapter prove that if they are not raised they cannot "have everlasting life."

VII. Prove by remarks upon texts here subjoined that the righteous dead are rewarded at the resurrection. Rev. xi. 18; Luke xiv. 14; Dan. xii. 2; John v. 29.

VIII. And by the following passages show that the wicked dead are punished at the same time. Rev. xi. 18; Dan. xii. 2; John v. 29.

IX. With what other event is the resurrection joined in 1 Thess. iv. 16?

X. With what other event is the appearing of Christ joined in 2 Tim. iv. 1?

XI. Compare 2 Tim. iv. 1, with verse 8. When will Paul and "all them that love his appearing;" get their crowns?

ROBT. G. HUGGINS, President.

ANSWERS.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. Gen. ii. 7, compared with Ezek. xxxvii. shows that the organisms in both cases are the same and are made to live by the breath of life.

II. 1 Pet. i. 3, 21, shows our hope to be in the resurrection of Christ. As we believe Christ was raised, so we believe God will raise us. 1 Thess. iv. 14. This hope is further shown by John xiv. 19. "Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 20.

III. These seven consequences follow if the dead rise not:

1. Christ is not risen.
2. Our preaching is vain.
3. Our faith is also vain.
4. We are found false witnesses.
5. We are yet in our sins.
6. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.
7. We are of all men most miserable.

IV. Baptism is a symbol of death, burial, and resurrection. If the dead rise not the symbol is destroyed. 1 Cor. xv. 29; Rom. vi. 3.

V. John vi. 39, shows that if the dead are not raised they are lost.

VI. The dead have no hope of everlasting life if not raised. John vi. 40.

VII. Rev. xi. 18, show the time of reward to be at the resurrection, Luke xiv. 14. Shows we are recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Dan. xii. 2, shows that the saints awake to everlasting life. John v. 29, shows that the righteous will be raised to life.

VIII. Rev. xi. 18; Dan. xii. 2; John v. 29, all show that the wicked are rewarded at the same time the righteous are rewarded.

IX. 1 Thess. iv. 16. The coming of the Lord is joined with the resurrection.

X. 2 Tim. iv. 1. The appearing of Christ is joined with the judgment of quick and dead and the setting up of the kingdom.

XI 2 Tim. iv. 1, compared with verse 8, shows that we with Paul get our reward at the appearing of Christ.

ROY WORLEY.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. Gen. ii. 7, compared with Ezek. xxxvii. 1-10, is like in that God gave man first the breath which caused him to live. In his reformation God causes the breath to be put in him. The cause and the effect are alike.

II. Because we believe that Christ was raised from the dead, our hope in Christ is that we shall live again, John xiv. 19. Christ is the fruits and we are the harvest to follow.

III. 1 Cor. xv. 13-19.

1. Christ is not risen.
2. Our preaching is vain.
3. Our faith is also vain.
4. False witnesses.
5. Christ was not raised.
6. Yet in sin.
7. Dead have perished.

IV. Baptism signifies death, burial and resurrection. If there is no resurrection the sign is lost and ought not to be practiced. Rom. vi. 4.

V. John vi. 39, shows that if the dead are not raised they are lost.

VI. Verse 40 proves that everlasting life depends on being raised at the last day.

VII. Rev. xii. 18, shows that the righteous get their reward at the resurrection.

Luke xiv. 14, shows that the righteous are recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

Dan. xii. 12, proves that the righteous are raised to everlasting life.

John v. 29 again shows that the righteous are rewarded with everlasting life when they are raised.

VIII. Rev. viii. 18, shows that at the resurrection destruction awaits those that have destroyed ("Corrupted," see mar.—ED.) the earth.

Dan. xii. 2, shows that the wicked come forth to shame and contempt. John v. 29, proves the same.

IX. Did not get this. [See answer of others.—ED.]

X. 2 Tim. iv. 1. The establishment of the kingdom.

XI. 2 Tim. iv. 1, compared with verse 8 shows that Paul with all who love his appearing will get their reward at that time. That is the appearing of Jesus. The events are simultaneous as we find them in the lesson. The resurrection, the appearing of Jesus and the establishment of the kingdom and rewarding of crowns.

MAY STEPHENSON.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. Gen. ii. 7, compared to Ezek. xxxvii. 1-10 is similar in the respect that God put breath into the clay out of the dust of the earth and it became a living soul or man. In like manner in his reformation he causes breath to be put into him after he has gone back to clay and he becomes alive again, showing like cause and the like effect. We also learn that the organisms are similar as to shape and formation.

II. Our hope of living again depends on the resurrection of Christ as taught by 1 Peter i. 3-21, inclusive. It also depends on our belief in Christ being raised from the dead, 1 Thess. iv. 14. This hope is that we shall live again. John xiv. 19, and 1 Cor. xv. 2, teaches us that Christ is the first fruits and we that are his are the fruits that are to follow.

III. The seven consequences are as follows:

1. In 1 Cor. xv. 13-19, it tells us that if the dead are not risen then Christ is not risen.
2. Our preaching is vain.
3. We are false witnesses of God.
4. We are yet in our sins.
5. And all of those that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished.
6. Our faith is also vain.
7. We are of all men most miserable.

IV. We know that baptism signifies the death, burial and resurrection. If there be no resurrection it ought not to be practiced, because its significance would be lost; therefore it would be useless if not wrong to put anything into practice which does not have any meaning. Rom. vi. 5.

V. In John vi. 39, the writer tells us that if the dead are not raised they are lost or in other words would be left in the death state, or in an unconscious condition forever.

VI. Verse 40, proves that everlasting life depends on being raised up at the last day, showing when we get our reward, not at death, but at "the last day."

VII. Rev. xi. 18, proves that the righteous get their reward at the resurrection of the just. Dan. xi. 2 shows that the righteous are raised to everlasting life which would have to take place at the resurrection. John v. 29, again proves that the righteous are rewarded with everlasting life at the resurrection.

VIII. Rev. xi. 18, also shows that destruction awaits those that have destroyed the earth, (meaning the wicked.) Dan. xii. 2, tells us that the wicked come forth (at the resurrection) to everlasting shame and contempt. John v. 29, shows that the wicked come forth to damnation.

IX. Christ's coming is joined to the resurrection in that they both take place at the same time as has been shown heretofore.

X. The appearing of Jesus is joined with the establishment of his kingdom inasmuch as we know the latter has not, nor will not take place until he comes.

XI. 2 Tim. iv. 1, compared to verse 8 of the same chapter shows that all that love Christ and his appearing will get their reward at that time, i. e. at the appearing of Jesus. These events are simultaneous as we find them in the lesson namely:—The resurrection, the appearing of Jesus, the establishment of the kingdom and the awarding of the crowns.

MAURICE STEPHENSON.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. In Gen. ii. 7, God formed man of the dust, while in Ezek xxxvii. he put flesh upon the dry bones and covered them with skin. In either case, before the object formed had life. God put breath into it.

II. Christ is the first fruits of those that slept, 1 Cor xv 20. Jesus says, in John xiv. 19, "Because I live, ye shall live also," and if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, 1 Thess. iv. 14-17, if dead we shall be raised and if living we shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

III. If the dead are not raised those who are asleep in Christ have perished; there is no hope of eternal life; we are still in our sins; Christ is not raised; our faith is vain; preaching of the gospel is of no use; we are all found false witnesses of God.

IV. If the dead are not raised, baptism into Christ would avail us nothing. It would not have any saving power, hence useless to practice it; for if we are buried with Christ (by baptism) we shall also live with him.

V. John vi. 40, 44, "Every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." They are lost unless they are resurrected. John iii 16.

VI. John vi. 63, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." Except we believe in him and his resurrection we cannot obtain everlasting life; for it is only by a resurrection that we have any hope of living.

[While answers to questions No. 5 and 6 are good, they would have been better if John vi. 39, 40, had been used.—ED.]

VII. Dan. xi 2. "Many who sleep shall awake, some to everlasting life." Luke xiv. 14, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection." Rev. xi. 18, "And shall come forth, they that have done good unto a resurrection of life. And the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets and to the saints," etc.

VIII. Dan. xii. 2. "Some to shame and everlasting contempt." John v. 29. "They that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." But these do not come up in the first resurrection, for, "Blessed and holy are they that have part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." Rev. xx. 6.—[Bright remark, Sister Ada, but John does not say the wicked do "not come up in the first resurrection;" no, only that they do not "have part" in it.—ED.] 1 Thess. iv. 16 The resurrection is joined with Christ's coming. "The Lord himself shall descend," etc

X. 2 Tim. iv. 1. Christ's coming is joined with the judgment, "Who shall judge the quick and the dead."

XI. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Paul and all who love his appearing will get their crowns at that day; the time of the resurrection, when Christ shall judge the quick and the dead.

ADA STADDEN.

THE RESURRECTION.

I. Man's formation is described in Gen. ii. 7, "And Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." The steps in the process are 1st, the bringing together of the elements in the form of man. 2nd, making this form live by God breathing into its nostrils the breath of life. Man's reformation as described in Ezek. xxxvii. 1-10, shows the same steps, 1st the elements, bones, sinews and skin, are brought together in the form of man, and God called upon the breath from the four winds to enter these forms and the forms became alive. The matter making the form of man was just as dead before God breathed on it at formation as it was before he breathed on it at reformation. If he was able to make it alive in the first instance he is just as able in the second instance.

II. The raising of Christ from the dead generates this lively hope within us in several ways:

1st. The resurrection of Christ gives us a specific actual example of what God has promised to do. God gave his plan of salvation to man and in Christ's life and resurrection we have the plan actually worked out. When we are seeking for something and see another person obtain it by a certain process it gives us hope that we may also get it. If God had simply made his promises but had never given an actual fulfillment of them, then it seems to me that all religions Mohammedism, Buddhism, Indian beliefs would have a standing equal to ours. What proof would we have that there promises were made by the true God any more than the promises contained in heathen religions?

2nd. By belief in the resurrection and Christ's teachings we are adopted into God's family, Rom. viii. 13. He becomes our Father ready to help us to obtain what we are seeking for, by forgiving our sins and guiding and directing us, 1 Pet. i. 16. This guidance and direction is made possible because we have Christ, an everlasting priest to intercede for us, Heb. vii. 24 25. We of ourselves can do nothing, but by having God and Christ to help we can do all things which are right. Thus we have hope.

III. Seven consequences that logically follow if the dead are not raised are:

1st, Christ has not been raised and we have no actual proof that God's plan of salvation will work.

2nd. If Christ has not been raised our preaching is vain.

3rd, Our faith is vain.

4th, The apostles would be false witnesses of God because they had testified for God that Christ had been raised.

5th, Those who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished that is, they are dead with no hope for future life. To perish means to become nothing.

6th, We are yet in our sins—they have been unforgiven.

7th, We would be of all men most pitiable, because we would have hope for only this life.

IV. If there is no resurrection of the dead baptism ought not to be practiced. According to Rom. vi. 3, 4, baptism is typical of Christ's death and resurrection. When we go down into the water we are buried with him through baptism into death. We die to our old life of sin and rise to walk in newness of life, like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father. If there is no resurrection then baptism, one of Christ's commands is a false type and is useless. When we are baptized, if baptism is truly understood, we go through, by faith, the actual process of obtaining eternal life.

V. John vi. 39, shows that if the dead are not raised they are lost. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all that which he hath given me, I should lose nothing but (contrary to loss) shall raise them up at the last day."

VI. In verse 68, (Jno. 6,) Peter says, "Thou hast the words of eternal life." In verse 40 we find what these words are, "For this is the will of my Father, that every one that beholdeth the Son and believeth on him shall have eternal life; and I will raise him at the last day." The latter part of God's will, that Christ should raise the believer is just as necessary to eternal life as the believing, for God would not will anything unnecessary. Since raising the dead is necessary to eternal life if we claim there is no resurrection we must give up hopes of eternal life.

VII. That the righteous will be rewarded at the resurrection is shown by Rev. xi. 18, "And the nations were wroth, and thy wrath came and the time of the dead to be judged and the time to give their reward to thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, etc. The dead could not receive rewards unless they were resurrected.

2 Luke xiv. 14, "And thou shalt be blessed; because they have not wherewith to recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed in the resurrection of the just." Here Christ is talking to the maker of the feast and advising as to whom he should invite. It he should do as Christ directed then he would be recompensed in the resurrection of the just.

3. Dan. xii. 2, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt." The reward of the righteous is eternal life. Here we are told they receive it when they awake from the dust.

4. John v. 29, "And shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life." The resurrection of those who have done good will be a resurrection to life. Eternal life is the reward of the righteous.

VIII. That the wicked dead are punished at the resurrection, is shown first by Rev. xi. 18, "And the time came to destroy them that destroy the earth." These could not be destroyed unless they were first resurrected.

2 Dan. xii. 2, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of earth shall awake".....and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

3. John v. 29, "and shall come forth.....they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment." Since they are evil doers and are brought to judgment at the resurrection a sentence of punishment surely follows.

IX. The resurrection is joined with Christ's coming. 1 Thes. iv. 16, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven. ....and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

X. The appearance of Christ is joined with resurrection in 2 Tim. iv. 1.

XI. Paul and those who love the appearing Christ will get their crowns "at that day"—the judgment day.

ALTA KING.

Gold Dust.

"If we would reap life everlasting in the age to come, we must now sow to the spirit, and manifest its fruit."

"We seldom find persons whom we acknowledge to be possessed of good sense except those who agree with us in opinion."

"Professions and phrases will do you little good; it is a change of life and thorough curbing of the passions which constitute true piety."

"At least be fair. If you find your self about to criticise another rather severely, remember that if he has failings, he also has virtues, and be ready to square matters by speaking of a virtue at the same time. If one had to match every word of censure with one of praise, there would be some surprising results."

"Cultivate forbearance till your heart yields a fine crop of it. Pray for a short memory as to all unkindness".

ANNA DREW.

Confidence in Prayer.

There is no subject more important to the Christian than that of prayer, as prayer is the channel of communication between man and God. We must pray with confidence and without wavering. James i. 6, says: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed."

In 1 John v. 14, we read, "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us." By his hearing us is meant his granting the thing for which we ask. We must put confidence in our prayers; but there is a limitation to our confidence. The things for which we ask must be according to the will of God. Have we this confidence that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us? This is a test of Christian character. If we have not this confidence in him, we are defective in Christian experience, and cannot pray as every Christian ought to be able to pray; and we are not prepared to work for God, and we are not safe in regard to our own salvation. We must be able to look up in the sight of God and have confidence to talk to him with the expectation that he will hear us. If we have not this confidence it is one of the first things to seek.

VIOLA GAZELEY.

"In all the ages of the ages there never has been, and never will be a man or woman just like me. I am unique. I have no double." That is true. No two leaves, no two jewels, no two stars, no two lives—alike. Every life is a fresh thought from God to the world. There is no man in all the world who can do your work as well as you. And if you do not find, and enter into God's purpose for your life, there will be something missing from the glory that would otherwise have been there. Every jewel gleams with its own radiance. Every flower distils its own fragrance. Every Christian has his own particular bit of Christ's fragrance which God would pass through him to others.

He that cannot forgive others, breaks down the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man hath need to be forgiven.—Lord Herbert.

The Church of God at Pleasant View Indiana, has again had the pleasure of enjoying a series of meetings. Bro. Joseph Williams began meetings Feb. 4, and continued over the 17th. In all gave sixteen instructive and interesting talks to an attentive audience. The following were the subjects of his sermons: Hell, Hope, the Third Heaven, the Devil, the Forgiveness of sins, the Blood of Christ. To Make Eden Bloom Again.

Sir John Jackson has obtained the contract for the construction of the first section in the irrigation works designed by Sir William Wilcox for the Turkish government, with the object of again making an Eden of Mesopotamia.

Sir William Wilcox, who has been engaged in surveying the land between the Tigris and Euphrates, in 1908 predicted that this vast territory, now an arid waste infested by swamps, but showing traces of ancient irrigation canals, would again blossom as the rose, provided that works, of which this dam is the first, be carried out.

Four New Subscribers.

WE trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1 50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

God's Purpose In Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robinson, 866 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 8 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1 50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible:" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 300 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1 00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10623 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1850. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, neglected to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 15, 1911. NUMBER XI.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

[Selected by E. W. Knapp.]

Your Mission.

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet;
You can stand among the millions,
Anchored with the host
You can lead a band to hold them
As they march to Zion's coast.

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountain, steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
While the multitudes go by;
You can chant in happy measure
As they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready at command
If you cannot toward the needy
Reach an ever helping hand,
You can speak the word of cheer,
Over the coming you can weep
With the Savior's true disciples
You a tireless watch may keep.

If you cannot in the harvest
Garner up the ripened sheaves,
Many a grain, both ripe and golden,
Oft the careless reaper leaves;
Go and glean among the briers
Growing rank against the wall,
For it may be that their shadow
Hides the heaviest wheat of all.

If you cannot in the conflict
Prove yourself a soldier true,
If where fire and smoke are thickest
There's no work for you to do,
When the battle-field is silent,
You can go with careful tread—
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do;
Fortune is a lazy goddess—
She will never come to you.
Go and toil in any vineyard;
Do not fear to do or dare—
If you want a field of labor
You can find it anywhere.

—Mrs. Ellen M. H. Gates.

Peace and Safety.

War, pestilence and famine are doubtless the three greatest calamities that can befall mankind. War is possibly the most direful and destruction of the three. Pestilence and famine are supposed to be the infliction of an inscrutable providence, but war however is hardly less so.

War has in modern times become so destructive of life and property. So cruel and horrible that there is just now an effort being made to induce the great powers to settle their differences and disputes by arbitration. It is barely possible, and not altogether improbable that the great military nations may enter into an agreement to maintain peace by accepting the proposition of submitting questions of disagreement to a court of arbitration, possibly the international court of the Hague already established and provided for. Public sentiment in this country and in parts of Europe is apparently running in that direction.

If such an agreement should obtain among the stronger military and naval powers of the world it would certainly inaugurate a period in which the fear and dread of war for the time would cease, at any rate be so greatly diminished as to cause the outlook for business enterprise and prosperity to be very promising. The optimistic view of the situation would become contagious, creating a general sentiment of confidence and security. Every one especially the vested interests would be in high feather congratulating each other with word, "Now we have peace assured for a long time; surely that which the clergy and the social reformers have been pleading and praying has at last come to be a fact."

It will however prove to be a very delusive dream, both disappointing and disastrous, for says the apostle, "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape." 1 Thes v 3.

It is necessary to notice that the apostle is speaking of a condition of things that obtains immediately preceding the return of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. It is in fact a timely warning to all his saints to not permit themselves to be deceived by an optimistic dream of universal peace that can have no other foundation than that of diplomatic hypocrisy and deception. Suddenly without warning, unexpectedly destruction follows, and only those who are wise in discerning the signs of the times will escape.

It must not be supposed for a moment that the nations entering into such a treaty as I have indicated to conserve safety and peace, will commit themselves to a hard and fast agreement with no loop hole for an excuse to break the peace whenever self interest, or what diplomatically may be termed self protection shall dictate. The peace advocates who are just now actively engaged in an effort to inaugurate international arbitration as a more humane, just and economical policy than that of war, may possibly bring about such a condition as will fulfill the words of the apostle; if so the truly wise and understanding heart will be as quick to recognize the necessities of the hour, as was Rahab the harlot in the day when Joshua and the armies of Israel overthrew the city of Jericho, she believed what she had not seen, and trusted in the scarlet line of faith and promise, and was saved. The signs of our time indicate the near coming of a greater than Joshua, from "before whose face the heavens and earth will flee away."

At the present time the air is full of anti-war talk, while Mr. Carnegie's contribution of ten million dollars as a foundation to advance the cause of peace has given the sentiment fresh and increased momentum in both low and high places. Just now the movement is in the incubating stage, and it remains to be seen what will come out of it.

I feel inclined to the opinion that it will result in some arrangement by which the world will be deluded with the prospect of "peace and safety" for a brief interval preceding the Lord's coming. In the prophetic field of the last days there is a variety of events though separate and distinct, all converging upon one common and focal center, even the end of the present age, and the overthrow of Gentile supremacy. The present restless and inconstant state of things is not a finality. No reflecting mind can persuade himself to believe that a condition of things so unsatisfactory, can be the ultimate end contemplated by the infinite mind of him who has created all things. The various agencies and forces that we see operating in the history of times past, and still active in our day show conclusively that there is an ultimate, higher and better state to be attained in the end. The supreme intelligence the source of all creative wisdom and power, in itself a guarantee to all who recognize the existence thereof, that there is a purpose, a design all wise and all good and glorious that in the end will become visibly manifest as a substantial reality.

This inevitable purpose has been revealed in the Scriptures or writings of the prophets of Israel, through whom the Creator has been pleased to reveal himself as a being of wisdom goodness, justice and mercy. That he was pleased to choose a certain channel or medium to communicate his thoughts to man need not excite jealousy or envy on the part of those not thus favored. Envy is the child of ignorance and vanity, and there is no excuse for denouncing the instrument or medium of good things, so long as all, and Jew and Gentile, are priviledged alike to avail themselves if they will of his goodness and blessing. He is not says Paul "the God of the Jew only, but also of the Gentile," but both are partakers of the fruit of his good pleasure.

In conclusion it may be affirmed Scripturally that it is the divine purpose to establish on this earth a kingdom and empire of nations, under the supervision of his Anointed Son the promised seed of the covenant made with the ancestors of the Hebrew nation. This is why we are intently interested in observing and waiting the full development of that purpose. That its consummation will bring to earth's inhabitants great good, there can be no doubt; I say this because it has its origin in the fountain head of truth and righteousness. The Creator has revealed himself as absolutely perfect in all those attributes of character, that make for the highest well being of all his creatures.

He has been pleased to make known through his servants, the prophets, the history of the world in advance, and invites his servants to watch the gradual unfolding of his work as it may be seen in the revolution of events. This privilege of seeing the guiding hand of the invisible God is a source of great pleasure and profit to all his saints. It inspires confidence, and supplies the comfort of faith and hope. It lightens the burdens incidental to this life, and supplies the necessary patience to endure suffering and sorrow, until the day of release. It excludes from the mind the fear that blind chance and accident controlls the universe, and that wreck and ruin are the end of all things. It begets a disposition to honor God, and to glorify him in our daily walk and conversation.

The Promises.

The foundation of the Christian's hope lies in the promises made of God to the fathers of the Israelitish race. Leave out the promises, we find no foundation to build upon. Christ is the chief corner of the whole superstructure. Shall we go no further back than the crucifixion of this cornerstone? This was truly a means to the end for the accomplishment of what God purposed to do. This was the confirming of the promises made to the fathers. This was the real ratification of the covenant made with Abraham. The Abramic covenant did not come into force, until the death of the mediatorial testator. The seed to whom the promise was made, was Abraham and the Christ. From the date of these promises the building gradually rises. First in the order of development comes the fleshly descendants of Abraham. God by the hand of his servant Moses delivers them from the Egyptian yoke. Brings them to Mount Sinai. Gives them lawful institutions to govern them. Just before giving them the law we have a wonderful statement made by the Lord in these words: Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians. Now therefore if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation. Exod xix 4. What do we learn from this? Certainly no less than that, this people of Israel who derived the name from the angel who wrestled with Jacob their father, was hereafter to be known as a nation by whom and through whom God was to manifest himself in the earth. From that time and onward only, do we or can we learn or know anything of Jehovah. To them alone were committed oracles of God. To them alone the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises. Rom ix 4. Out of this people, God formed a commonwealth, a nation by whom he designed to fill the earth with his glory. No matter, whether as a nation they rebelled; a holy nation God destined to have, and all the rebellion in the world cannot hinder it. It is true Israel as a nation did not live up to their privileges, was that to prevent the carrying out of Jehovah's purpose? Surely not. What did John the Baptist say, God was able of stones to raise up children to Abraham. God is not limited is not limited in forming the materials of the holy nation. Gentiles can be brought in upon the principle of adoption. Jesus said salvation is of the Jews. But what about the adoption. Ah! Now we come to the wonderful depth and riches of the wisdom of God. Behold Jesus, the Son of God, the son of Abraham, the son of David. The one the two covenants embrace. A Jew born of a woman, he in his own body is to unite both Jew and Gentile, and form them into a holy nation, that peculiar people, a kingdom of kings and priests, and thus consummate the purpose of God. But mark, after all it is a Jewish community. Neither more nor less than the commonwealth of Israel. Eph ii 12. This statement is fully sustained by the New Testament writers, see Eph ii 11. To the Gentile believers. Paul said to them before they had put on Christ, that at that time they were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise. From this we learn, it is essential to belong to this commonwealth and to believe the covenanted promises. Otherwise Paul said they were without God and without hope. Eph ii 12. How wise on the part of our heavenly Father, that he has arranged these conditions as a nucleus, where Jew and Gentile may meet together united under the headship of Christ. Again Paul tells us what constitutes a true Jew. Rom ii 28. He is a Jew, which is one outwardly, etc. The Jewish hope and faith, that will yield any reward. Anything else is spurious. See Acts xxviii 2. For the only hope of Israel I am bound with this claim. Again, in the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers Acts xxvi 6. What other hope will prove fruitful? This is the one hope of the gospel. That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel, Eph iii 6. The apostle Peter is very clear upon this same line of truth. Referring to the Gentiles he says: Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God. 1 Peter ii 10. This whole chapter is very instructive upon this point. It is evident there must be some underlying system foreshadowing Christ before he was manifested in the world. Just preceding his manifestation to Israel, John came preparing his way. Surely then, a sure foundation had been laid in the Scriptures as evidence preceding Christ, otherwise he would not be known when he came. Search the Scriptures said Jesus, for they testify of me. And after he rose from the dead, beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. We can know nothing of Christ only as testified of in the Scriptures. Did not Moses esteem the reproach for Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt? What evidences had he for Christ? The same that Abraham had who rejoiced to see Christ's day. The promise made to Abraham constitutes the groundwork of the Christian system. The hope of Israel, hope of the promise made of God unto the the fathers of Israel, is the real foundation of the gospel. Do we desire to be made wise unto salvation? Search the Scriptures. Do we desire a joint heirship with Christ? Learn what Paul says in Galatians. Not unto seeds as of many, but unto thy seed which is Christ. How does this avail us? Hear what Paul says again: For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. By this means Jew and Gentile are embraced under one head. When the number of God's elect is complete, God's Holy nation, the kingdom of priests is secured. All embraced under the title of Israel a prince, named after God. All, the sons of God, thus become attached to divine power. They have their Father's name upon them, written in their forehead. O, beautiful unit. Sacred tie. Eternally united. Divine unity. Let us have God's Divine system engraved upon our heart.

JOHN GOOLIFFE.

[Reprinted from THE RESTITUTION of February 10, 1892, by request of Sister S. Roxana Wince.—ED.]

Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin [offering] unto salvation.

Before He Comes.

What are the events yet to happen before the return of the Noblemen from the far country?

The return of the Jews has progressed so far that we cannot say that the picture given by the prophet is not complete; but Russia is not financially ready, nor is her work complete as yet in Persia, so as to lead her as an ally; but events are moving in the direction to complete the prophetic picture.

The Peace and Safety Movement is fairly under way; but the work is not yet complete; they are not ready to say "Peace and Safety."

The "image" makers are busy at work; it must be completed before the advent.

Now last but not least is the question. Is Elijah to appear on earth before the Lord comes? If so that is enough, and we need not look for our Lord's return until we behold the prophet,—the restorer. If we are to see the prophet before the advent, why did not the Master or some of his servants mention this fact?

Our Lord in Matt. xxiv. gives us the signs of his coming. "If they shall say.....he is in the desert, (Mormonism) go not forth" (to Utah) "Behold he is in the secret chambers; believe it not" (Spiritism and Russellism.) The true signs to his saints are in the sun, moon, and stars (of the political and ecclesiastical heavens.) verse 29. This is proved beyond a reasonable doubt by Rev. vi. 12, 13 when all the other seals are admitted to be symbolic—this one cannot be literal.

This remarkable discourse of our Lord and all the prophetic utterances of the New Testament are as silent as is the grave concerning the coming of Elijah before the second appearing of our Lord. Question, Who is the prophet talking to in Malachi iv 4 6? "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for Israel, with the statutes and judgments. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

Israel under the law is the party addressed, and not those of this gospel dispensation. Elijah was to come "before the great and dreadful day of the Lord." This "dreadful" day came upon the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem and they are not out of it yet.

Listen, to what the Master says, (Matt. xxiv. 21,) "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no nor ever shall be." The last verse in the Old Testament, speaking of Elijah says, "And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children," etc. Now upon what principle is John the Baptist called Elijah?

To illustrate, I will say that I once knew a man that was always quoting Robert Burns, and he was known by the name of Robert Burns. "In 1523 after the reformation had broken out, we find Pope Hadrian saying in a public address to the Diet at Nuremberg, The Heretics Huss and Jerome are now alive again in the person of Martin Luther." On the same principle Elijah was alive again in John the Baptist; and Christ is called Michael in Dan. xii. 1, and Constantine is called Michael in Rev. xii. 7. A late writer says, "John did not do what Elijah was to do, and that the Scriptures cannot be broken." Let us see. Mal. iv. 6, reads, "And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children." In Luke i. 17, speaking of John the Baptist we read, "And he shall go before him in the Spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

The work of John was of the same nature as that of Elijah, therefore the application of the name Elijah to John. The Master himself surely did know the truth and he said, "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not but have done unto him whatsoever they listed.....Then the disciples understood that he spake to them of John the Baptist." Matt. xvii. 12, 13.

When She is Tried.

In the beginning of what is known as the natural creation, God made man of the dust of the ground, and the woman of the first Adam was formed from the wounded side of the man. There was a trial of their faith and obedience toward God placed before them in the garden. They were perfectly thoroughly furnished with and had free access to every fruit necessary to their comfort, well being and perpetuation of life.

Only one tree was forbidden. God did not choose to reveal why the tree was forbidden, but did reveal to them that disobedience or contempt for the command would bring death to them. There was also a third party lurking in that peaceful garden. That deceitful and treacherous old serpent which is the devil. What was his part in the tragedy of Eden? With flattery and deceit he beguiled the woman into thinking that God had made false statements when he commanded her to avoid the death bearing tree, he convinced her to take of the tree would make her wise, knowing good and evil. O, yes that was the winning point. To make one wise? To disbelieve God's Word, to prove it unharmonious and false will make one wise, was the foundation of the beguiling art of the poison tongued serpent. And the first woman desired to be wise? And reached for that which God had forbidden.

We see the result. Beware! The second Adam, the beginning of the spiritual age. Was "made of woman." And "The bride," the "Lamb's wife," or "the church" are terms applied to denote the help-meet of the second Adam, which was formed from the wounded side of her Lord and Master. The Father has also supplied her with all necessary means of attaining unto the spiritual life. All that is necessary is freely given. She is perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. And yet there are some things forbidden, things she is told to avoid in the environments of the second woman. 1 Tim i 4. Neither give heed to fables or endless genealogies which minister questions (doubts) rather than godly edifying, which is in faith. Titus iii 9, she is told to, "Avoid foolish questions, genealogies and contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain. And the present truth is, that the old serpentine, Satanic power is confronting the bride elect of the second Adam. Tempting her to put forth her hand to that which she has been commanded to avoid. And make herself wise by studying genealogies trying to prove discrepancies and setting aside chapters and even books of God's Word, as unreliable and false, because their finite mind and weak faith cannot take in this very thing, that they were warned in the beginning to avoid. Will she yield to the wiles of the devil who walks by her side and reach for the forbidden in order to make herself wise? Or will she say to the poison tongued deceiver, "Get thee behind me Satan." And make her Lord and Master her wisdom and her hope. If it were possible they would deceive the very elect. Titus iii 10, 11. A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject, knowing that he that is such is subverted and sinneth, being condemned of himself. Why condemned of himself? Because he has played with forbidden things and has caused himself to doubt God's Word, "And he that believeth not is condemned already."

In love and hope to the little flock.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 15, 1911.

Our government has taken an active step in the troubles of Mexico, and troops are being rushed to the frontier in sufficient strength to indicate invasion. The insurrection in Mexico is growing, and the seven hundred millions of American investment in Mexico must be looked after. Besides some European nations have large investments in Mexico, notably Germany, and if the United States does not interfere and save them from menace, we must allow these other nations to come. This our government wishes to prevent, hence this show of activity. There is talk that Japan has a secret understanding with the Mexican government, but this is denied. It will not suit the United States to have such a condition existing any more than to have Germany enter. On the face of the affair it looks like more complications and entanglement in the world's affairs for our country.

While Mr. Andrew Carnegie puts in ten millions of dollars to create a "peace" fund, thinking that money can buy peace for the world, we may look at the situation from another view point. The British naval estimates for the year call for seventy-five millions of dollars for new construction. No matter what party is in power in England the supremacy of her navy must be maintained. A British fleet might blockade every German port, and yet Germany would not be affected as to her living. Were Britain's ports blockaded for a few weeks, or a great naval battle be disastrous to her fleets, starvation and want would stare her in the face. The food supply therefore must be protected and ensured, hence England's navy must keep equal to that of any two other nations. Austro-Hungary —the ally of Germany—proposes to spend seventy-five millions in the next few years in naval construction. So it is imperative that England increase her force. A comparison shows England's tonnage now under construction to be 486,000 tons, Germany's is 297,000 tons, France is next with 173,000 tons, and the United States has 136,000 tons. Should Germany check up after completing what is now under construction, then England might do so, but England has the longer purse, and will likely stay by her old plan of keeping in advance.

We told last week of the uneasiness caused by Austria and Italy sending large forces to their frontiers. A little farther explanation may be given to let our readers know the significance of the move. Some time ago, during the formation of Germany, Austro-Hungary, and Italy, the Tyrol was given to Austria, but the southern part in which the city of Trient is situated naturally belonged to Italy, as the people were Italian and spoke that language, and do to this day, and want to be under Italian government. Any invasion of Italy by land would come through this door, and a show of force would be naturally favorable to Austria. Then the same arrangement gave to Austria the port of Trieste, with the gulf of the same name, an arm of the larger gulf of Venice, that an arm of the Adriatic. This is the only port worthy of the name that is possessed by Austro-Hungary. As the present naval outlay of Austria calls for an expenditure of seventy-five millions of dollars, it is evident that a large part of this must of necessity be based on the port of Trieste. As the same condition with regard to the people applies to Trieste that does to Trient, and as these sections were forced from Italy by virtue of the superior strength of Germany and Austria, it is easy to see the basis of Italy's claim to these cities. Also with Austria spending so large a sum on naval work, which will be right at Italy's door, the menace this will be is clear to all. The strained relation between England and Germany is well known, and of course Austro-Hungary is so nearly a part of the German empire that it only waits for the death of Emperor Francis Joseph, to make the unity more complete. This would really give Germany this strong naval port on the Adriatic, which would be detrimental to the interests of England. As has been stated before, the one prime factor that draws nations or individuals together is mutual interest. The Hand that is directing the movement of nations will bring together that great force that will constitute the Gog-power, and this of very necessity forces other nations to unite for self-protection. Some students are beginning to see that England and France must be drawn together, and almost of necessity Italy must side with them. With this in mind, it is readily seen that every plan to block Austria in her naval designs where they touch Trieste, is most important, and should there be nothing more than this claim made by Italy, and should she not win back the territory, yet even her claim will tend to retard any work Austria may do there. In keeping track of these great national movements of our time, all these seemingly insignificant events are worth making note of. This is written at the request of a brother who failed to understand the point at issue between Italy and Austria, and is given that others may see it also. No claim is made by the writer that any such union as England, France and Italy will be made, but only to show that "it points that way." Let us watch and see.

Sunday School Lesson.

March 26, 1911.

Quarterly Review.

Golden Text—"Happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Psalms cxliv. 15.

The first lesson of the quarter starts out with the kingdom as found by Rehoboam after his father Solomon had died. A portion of the people had become dissatisfied with the treatment that had been accorded them, and demanded that their wrongs be looked into and made right. In reply, after consulting both the old men and the young men, the king decided to take the advice of the young men, and replied that the burdens instead of being lessened would be increased. This resulted in a division, two tribes staying with the king with the capital at Jerusalem, and the ten tribes went to the north and established a capital at Shechem, with Jeroboam as king. This northern part was called the kingdom of Israel, and the southern the kingdom of Judah. This result was brought about by taking bad advice from evil companions. By it the golden age of the Israelitish nation ceased, and the glory of Solomon's reign was effaced. A wise choice of friends is important now as then, and the best advice to follow is that given by God. His Word should be supreme, and the guide for all our acts and words.

With lesson 2d we find that Jeroboam was afraid that if the religious center was still kept at Jerusalem, gradually the people would be drawn together and his hold weakened, for this people must be a religious people. Hence he sought to establish new rules. He would not advocate worship of idols, but he built other places for the worship of God, set other times than those fixed by God, and selected those who should serve as priests out from the common people, instead of from the line that God had chosen. Thus he would substitute something else for what God said should constitute acceptable service to him. It is really just what many do today. They argue that it is difficult to find out just what God wants, so they will not try to find out his special wishes and requirements, but will believe as they want to, and do as they want to do, only living fair moral lives, and trust God to "do the right thing" by them in the end. This lesson should be made by all teachers a strong one. It is plain to any Bible student that God has promised a definite reward to his people. Those who do his will will be given just what is promised. It is just as certain then that to be worthy of that reward we must do specifically what God demands. Belief, obedience, and right living, are all equally necessary, and to say that we can cut out the first two, and that the last is all that we need pay attention to, is to jeopardize all claims to God's consideration. Don't do it. It does make all difference that we believe and do.

In the 3d lesson concerning Asa's good reign, it simply declares this truth "The Lord is with you, while ye be with him; and if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you." A most important lesson to get well by heart.

In lesson 4 we have two kings in the north kingdom. Omri and Ahab, each of whom was the worst ever had been, leading the people further away from God, and into sins of the vilest kind. Men are either stumbling-blocks, or they are stepping-stones. Which are you?

In lesson 5th we have the work of Jehoshaphat in bringing the kingdom of Judah to a high prosperity and a reign of peace and respect of the nations about them. He set the people at work fortifying against attack, and by systematic effort succeeded in making his position strong. Then he saw the importance of education, and set to work in that direction, not only when the people could come up to Jerusalem, but he sent his priests with the books of the law, out among the people, and had them read and expound to them, so that he thoroughly organized and educated the nation. God blessed the efforts. Jehoshaphat overcome his foes by organized efforts bettering his surroundings, and making the people partners in the work by education and the prosperity that came as a result.

As we come to lesson 6th we find under Ahab the kingdom of Israel has become extremely bad. Idols are to be found on every hand, and the people have been led into such worship by their king and the false priests who have been placed over them. Ahab had married Jezebel, a heathen princess, and she had taken possession of his mind and had him in her power. In this condition God sends Elijah the prophet, and he warns Ahab that rain and dew shall cease for years, and that in consequence famine will come to his people. He then disappears, and for three and a half years there is no rain, and people and flocks and herds are in danger of starvation. The king knew it was a visitation on his kingdom on account of their wickedness, yet there was no effort at reform, but they sought everywhere to find Elijah, that he might be killed as the other prophets of God had been, thinking that in this manner the evil could be put away.

With lesson 7th we have Elijah appearing to Ahab again, and a test is proposed between the prophet of God and the prophets of Baal. A test is—What do you know—what can you do? In this case the prophets of Baal could do nothing, but the prophet by the power of God was able to show results, so that the people said that the Lord was the real true God. It was a great triumph for Elijah, and the priests of Baal were overthrown and slain, the rain came, and people and cattle were saved. Here was an opening for great reforms, but Ahab was weak, and when he told his wife of the outcome of the test, she was angry at the defeat of her false prophets and sent word to Elijah that on the morrow he should be killed as they had been.

In the 8th lesson we have Elijah hastening away from this threatened danger. Why did he not stay and trust in God to deliver him from the hands of this wicked woman? Did Elijah doubt God's ability after the victory over the false prophets? We may speculate over this as much as we wish, but after all it is just as well to follow the course, and think that all was ruled according to God's plan. It was necessary that Elijah be prepared each step for the work he was to do. So Elijah is found by God in the wilderness, and given a lesson of God's power as shown in the "still small voice." When God tells Elijah what he wishes done, he goes at the task without wavering.

So in lesson 9th we find Elijah meeting Ahab in Naboth's vineyard. Jezebel had by falsehood and murder gotten rid of Naboth and his posterity, so that Ahab could possess the coveted vineyard, and as he is there surveying this new possession the prophet meets him, and he is told what shall be the outcome of his covetousness which has virtually made him a thief and murderer. His death shall be violent, and dogs shall lick his blood, as for Jezebel the dogs will eat her after she is slain by treachery. The lesson is "take heed," "beware," and covetousness is held up as the motive that prompts to all these crimes. Thou shalt not covet, is the command, and God's people must obey.

In lesson 10th we have the life work of Elijah ended. He has filled out the measure of God's demands, and now his course is finished—he has fought the fight, and his work is done. Other hands must take up the unfinished labor and carry it on. The manner of Elijah's going, and where he was taken is not the only lesson to be had from this history. Rather would we see that God takes and cares for his servant who ever faithfully does his will. He is safe in God's hand, and his future is sure. Then a reward is given to that one who has been faithful in learning the lessons that will fit him for continuing the work, and we see Elisha given a double portion of blessing that he may do what is to be his work in the reform movement that is to come to Israel. He was steadfast and persevered in his undertaking to stay with Elijah to the last, and not falter in any of the hardships that were to be passed through. Such a life will be rewarded. He that overcomes shall inherit.

We have lesson 11 here thrown in more to fill up than any thing else. It is a story of the value of a life, and shows the mother's faith and confidence in the man of God, and through him in God; that he can help her in her distress even to giving back the life of her son. Her persistence wins, and then the perseverance of the prophet in his solicitation to God that her request be granted all makes a story from which a profitable lesson can be drawn.

Passing to the 12th lesson we have the Quarterly Temperance lesson, in which it is shown that drunkenness brings ruin and defeat.

In the study of this review we might take up a little character study work, and look at Rehoboam, Jeroboam Asa, Jehoshaphat, Omri, Ahab, Jezebel, Elijah, Elisha. These characters are to be met with today. Do any of us resemble any of the prominent traits brought out in the past quarter as exemplified in any of these lives? If so, which ones do you appear most like? Boys and girls, remember you are now building your life structure, and some day—yes, even now—it is to meet the all-seeing eye of a just God. How do you want to stand before him?

The Bereans Column.

The Good Foundation.

Dear Bereans:

When we plan to erect a building what is the first thing we do? Is it not to build a good foundation? As it is along the natural plane, so it is with the spiritual. Our foundation must be sure, or our work is wasted. In Matthew vii. 24-27 Jesus gives two examples of building. One built upon the sand, and when the winds and the floods came the house fell, because the foundation was insecure. But the wise man built his house upon a rock, and the storms had no effect upon it, because it had a good foundation.

In the Psalms we often see the word Selah. Authorities disagree as to the meaning of the word, but in 2 Kings xiv. 7 we find the word, and in the margin it says the Rock. "The Lord is our rock, on him we build," the "Rock of ages, cleft for me."

"There stands a rock on the shores of time,
That lifts to heaven its head sublime:
That rock is cleft, and they are blest,
Who find within its cleft a rest."

1 Cor. iii. 11, For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus.

Eph. ii. 18 22, For through him we both have access by one spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the Chief Corner Stone; in whom all the building, fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God by the Spirit.

Eph. ii. 7, That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

The lesson we learn from these verses is—Be careful how and on what you build.

"Be true to yourself at the start, my friend,
Be true to yourself, and God,
Ere you build your house mark well the spot,
Test well the ground, and build you not
On the sand or shaking sod.
Build slow and sure; 'tis for life, my friend,
A life that is sure and blest;
Build deep, and high, and broad, my friend,
As the needful case demands;
Let your title-deeds be clear and bright,
Till you enter your claim to the Lord of light,
For the house not made with hands."

Life is a battle, fight it bravely; life is a course, run it eagerly; life is a faith-keeping, hold it firmly. Do not think to win the righteousness by your battle, by your race, or by your faith-keeping. God will give it to you; it is his free gift, if you simply love him and wish to see him.—Lyman Abbott.

During the month of February we have worked nearly all the time at Moorefield, with splendid interest. Five have taken a stand for the truth up to date, and the meeting is still in progress. Part of the time the weather was pretty cold but still the people came, and we haven't missed a night since February 11. We have conducted two funerals. Everybody is having the grippe, but as soon as they are over it a little they are back to meeting.

LOOK, LOOK.

We want a lot of New Subscribers, and with a little effort you can get us one or more. We do not ask you to work for us for nothing, but will pay you for what you do. Here is our offer to you:

For a New Subscriber at the regular rate of $1.50 per year, we will send to any address you name

10 copies of "A Letter to a Friend"
or
One Pound of other Tracts,
or
One-half Pound of Tracts and 5 copies of A Letter to a Friend.

This will enable you to earn a supply of tracts to distribute among your friends, and perhaps start some one on the way to the Kingdom.

LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have a number of copies of "The Word of the Kingdom" which originally sold at $1 50. This is a work gotten out by Brother John O. Woodruff before he died. Only a few copies remain, and they will make excellent presents While they last we will mail you one Free, if you will send us

Two New Subscribers.

JUST LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have on hand some copies of the Emphatic Diaglott. All of our readers known what it is—a word for word translation of the New Testament, by Brother Benjamin Wilson. There is a column with a line of Greek and beneath it the equivalent English words so the reader may know just the word that is used. A very valuable help in Bible study. We will give you one of these books Free if you will send us

Four New Subscribers.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1 50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

God's Purpose in Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robison, 806 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 8 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1 50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

BROTHER B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

THE RESTITUTION is only $1.50 per year. Try it a year.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

E. P. WOODWARD.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 308 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10623 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

PLEASE don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D.C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

To the Churches Abroad:

In accordance with a resolution passed at the General Conference, I have sent to the delegates of the different States represented "Declarations of the Principles of our Faith." These are to be presented to you for action as to whether you want them to bind the Church as a creed, or merely hand to inquirers for enlightenment as to some of the things believed among us. It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 00 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. The Failure.

In the long, low Eastern workroom
The Weavers wove apace,
Each on his separate pattern,
Each in his own set place—
Threads of the sunset's splendor
In their sinewy fingers whirled,
Under their hands, triumphant,
Grew the Work of the World.

Only one web fell in error,
Only one head bent low—
The best and blithest worker on
Who had welcomed the morning's glow;
But the threads in his hands had failed,
Tarnished the gold and green,
And the work that should have crowned him
Foredoomed, grew poor as I mean.

Wondering, the others watched him:
"Put by, put by," quoth they:
"You shame your skill by such labor.
Rest from the loom today."
But he bent to his work in silence,
Rave when the whisper rose,
"Surely the Master set the task
And surely the Master knows."

In bitter pain and heartbreak
He wove till his work was done,
And the Master of all the Weavers
Came at the set of Sun:
Then, as the others thronged him,
Showing their patterns rare,
The Master turned to him who failed'ed
And laid a hand on his hair.

"Well done, well done, my Weaver,
And rich shall your guerdon be!
But of all your beauteous patterns
This one best pleaseth me;
For the Red of Courage, the Gold of Faith,
Are woven where'er a man
Looks in the face of Failure
And does the best that he can."

Notes by the Way.

The purpose of my present trip in the south is twofold, namely to proclaim the Glad Tidings to the perishing, and also to strengthen, build up, and encourage believers in the Blessed Hope.

The first stop was at St. Louis, Sister Kathryn Townsend met me at the Union Station; we then journeyed together to Lebanon, Illinois, the home of her mother, and her Sister Jennie. I remained there some two days, taking sweet counsel together with these dear children of God. They live day by day in joyful anticipation of the coming of the King in his glory to bring to pass the glorious things so graphically foretold by prophets and apostles. Their daily aim and thought of their lives is to so live and conduct their lives that they may find divine approval, and become participants in the coming blessings. I feel that our coming together resulted in our mutual benefit, and was profitable to all.

I am strongly impressed that our Evangelists should pay special attention in their trips to isolated ones who are of the faith, who are deprived of the support and strength that is derived from the mutual association of believers. I know that some may say that to do so is a financial loss to such evangelists, as isolated ones cannot contribute to the extent that a community of believers can. That is true, but we must remember, that our reward in the future will be greater, if we sacrifice and suffer some deprivation for Christ's sake now. I am doing this, and the more I do it, I find that God moves the heart of some of his dear children elsewhere, who want an interest in this work to contribute towards its support. Our heavenly Father knows our temporal needs.

My next stop was at Murphysboro, Illinois, the home of Bro. Peter Jeffray and granddaughters. He met me at the station, and took me to his home, and hospitably entertained me for a few days. We truly had a profitable time together, our future interests were centered upon the same thing, and occupied almost all our time and thoughts. We conversed upon many Bible topics, exchanging thoughts, and giving and receiving expositions of Scripture passages, and doctrines. I found his mind intensely alive to Bible study. And surely, what can be more profitable? It can be but a very short time, when every worldly interest will be swept away in the coming judgments that will roll over the earth like a mighty tidal wave. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to thy saints and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them that destroy the earth."

Those who fail to make preparation, will "hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and say to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

The last question is the most important one to answer, "Who shall be able to stand?" Why they who prepare for it now, and sacrifice for Christ's work.

The time came when we should part, and Bro. Jeffray accompanied me to the train, which I was to take for Hammond, Louisiana. It was with feelings of joyful anticipation that I undertook this trip. At the conclusion of this trip I anticipated meeting my much loved Pine Woods Bible Class, which I had not seen for two years. In due time, I reached the end of my journey. Brother Frank, the son of Arlou, met me at the station with horse and carriage. I was soon at his mother's home, and welcomed by her and Sister Ella. Ella, like myself, is a student of the new international language of the world,—Esperanto, which is doubtless the commencement of the fulfilment of the prophecy of Zephaniah iii 8, 9. We enjoyed ourselves immensely conversing with each other in this marvelous language.

After supper on Saturday night unknown to me, the Pine Woods Bible Class came trooping into the house. I surely was glad to see their happy faces. We then held one of our old time Bible Class meetings. At the conclusion of this service, I administered the sacred communion to them. This service, I apprehend is more solemn, than many believers regard it. It is the antitypical Holy Place, where the Royal Priesthood, assemble to participate in the sacred service of the sacrifice; the bread and wine representing the victim of the sacrifice as literally as the Holy Shekinah represented the Divine Presence in the most holy place.

Under the type none but a circumcised priest who had approached the altar of sacrifice, and had been washed in the laver could enter the sanctuary, and officiate as a priest. So under the antitype none but a royal priest, who has approached the antitypical altar of sacrifice has been circumcised in Christ—been washed in the antitypical laver, can be permitted to enter the antitypical sanctuary, and participate in the antitypical sacrifice.

See 1 Cor xi 23 to 29, 20th Century Trans.: "Jesus, the Master, on the very night of his betrayal, took some bread, and after thanking God, broke it in pieces, saying as he did so, This is my body given on your behalf. Do this in memory of me. And in the same way with the cup, when the supper was finished, saying, This is the new covenant made by my blood. Do this whenever you drink it in memory of me. For whenever you eat this bread and drink the cup you proclaim the Master's death—until he comes. Therefore, whoever in an unworthy spirit eats the bread, or drinks the Master's cup, will have to answer for an offense against the Master's body and blood." This is a very serious matter indeed.

On Sunday we all met in the school house in the Pine Woods and held a Sunday School. Albert is the Superintendent, and Carrie is the adult Bible class teacher.

After Sunday school I preached, and again at night, and so continued for two weeks, preaching in all eighteen sermons. We had good audiences and splendid attention, and I feel assured some seed has found lodgment. During the meetings I made my home with Albert and wife who reside near the school house. After the meetings I rested up two days at Arlou's home studying Esperanto with Ella. Others at this place are also going to learn it. I was interested in visiting the large dairy farm owned by Lud and Carrie. Their average shipment of milk to New Orleans is about one hundred gallons per day. They are born of them dear children of God, anxiously waiting for the coming King in his glory.

It is glorious spring time here, flowers are blooming, the mocking birds are singing, fresh vegetables are ready. About the middle of February they commenced to pick strawberries. To me this was a delightful contrast with the frozen regions of the north.

The time came that I must separate from these children of God, for whom I have a sincere attachment. I take comfort in the thought that we will in the near future meet where partings will be no more.

My next call was at Crowley, Louisiana, the home of Bro. and Sister Haupt and family consisting of three children who all belong to the household of faith. What a happy thing it is of a family to be all united as one in Christ. I always enjoy visiting this happy family. Brother and Sister Haupt are old time acquaintances, whom I baptized into Christ when they were young people, prior to their marriage. I preached in the Christian church at Crowley. Bro. Haupt is a master of the Esperanto language, and recently addressed the World's Congress at Washington, D. C., using this language. There were twenty-two nations present, who could only communicate with each other by means of this language.

My stay at Crowley was necessarily short. Bro. Haupt accompanied me to the station when I started for Alvio, Texas. At this place we have two isolated ones, Sister Carlton, and her mother Sister Benda. Mr. Carlton met me at the station with his horse and carriage, and drove me to his home. Here I was kindly entertained for about one week. Our daily talk was the things pertaining to the Blessed Hope. They had many questions to ask which I answered as I best knew how. They seldom ever meet any one of the faith, and are so delighted to have some one to whom they can open their minds. They need the encouragement and comfort which God's children can impart to them.

At this place I received a letter from Bro. Haupt written in Esperanto, giving me the address of Bro. Gellatly of Baltimore, Maryland, another student of Esperanto. I wrote to him in this language and also to Ella of the Pine Woods Bible Class.

It was with regret that I must leave these dear sisters at Alvin. I then took the train for Goldthwaite, Texas. Here I find a small group of believers. Our Bro. Dr. Wilson met me at the station. I spent one day and two nights here, and I tried to leave some good words of cheer. They love the Blessed Hope, it is a comfort and a solace to them in their pilgrimage along the journey of life. I am now at Brownwood, Texas, the home of Sisters Crandwell and A. J. Martin.

As my report is already long, I will speak of this in my next notes.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.
W. H. WILSON.

Editor Restitution:

A series of meetings was held at North Salem Church by Brother Jos. Williams, beginning Feb. 21 to Mar. 5, inclusive.

Excellent sermons were delivered. The meetings were largely attended, and good interest shown during the entire meeting. Six were baptized in Christ.

A Church Duty.

In Acts xx. 17, we read that Paul called the Elders of the Church at Ephesus, to meet him at Miletus, and when they came to him he informed them that they should see his face no more, and then proceeded to give to them instructions concerning church discipline; especially warning them that of their own selves men would arise, speaking perverse (false or untrue) things, and so draw away disciples after them. Therefore he commanded them to take heed unto themselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Spirit had made them overseers. Defend them, guard and protect them, from grievous wolves, who would enter in from without, and also from men arising from among themselves (former brethren) who would speak perverse (untrue) things.

Peter also sounds the same warning note. "There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, (evidently Josephites) and many shall follow their pernicious ways."

Paul says "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that you withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the traditions (teachings) which he received of us."

Such action by the Church, through its appointed elders and overseers, is now, and always has been necessary, if we would keep our faith pure, and unspotted from the world. Our beloved Lord was ever proud of the fact that he was the actual Son, the only begotten Son of God. Not one of many, but the only thus begotten. He frequently pointed out that he had many brethren, who also were sons of God, but they were "begotten by the word of truth." He was begotten of a virgin, by the creative power of God. He lost no opportunity to impress this truth upon the minds of his hearers. But Josephites were even more numerous then than now. When he claimed to be the Son of God, they laughed him to scorn, saying "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know?" Also the high priest asked him, and said unto him, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said I am! And the high priest rent his clothes and said, What need we any farther witnesses? And they all condemned him to be worthy of death." Thus we see it was old time Josephites who crucified our Lord. Should we call such an one a Brother?

I have admired the spirit of Brother Wilson, who after a recent call in THE RESTITUTION to the Church of God to meet in Conference, added "Josephites not wanted." That was a trumpet blast with no uncertain sound! If Brother Chaplin were alive, he would say Amen. If Brother Joblin or if Brother Wiley Jones were alive they would say Amen. If Peter, and Paul were alive, they would say Amen. Let all the Church of God arise and say Amen. Let the line of demarcation be drawn so plain, that all may clearly understand that none who seek to rob our Lord and Savior of that title so highly prized by him, can have any thing in common with the true Church of God. This may sound harsh and unkind to some, but when we reflect that while we close our eyes to the presence of the Josephites at our church meetings, and conferences, extending to him the right hand of fellowship, and addressing him as brother, possibly mildly remonstrating with him upon his error, but fearful of plain speech lest we offend, he is persistently riding his hobby; diligently spreading among the fold his "damnable heresies," "denying the Lord that bought him, and many are leaving our fold and following his pernicious ways." I would like to see every pen that writes for THE RESTITUTION units in denouncing Josephitism. Let the blast be so loud, and the language so plain, that the outcast will hide his head in shame, and perchance many who have lent an ear to this pernicious doctrine may see his error, and return to the fold.

Brothers and Sisters, in view of the alarming spread of this fatal heresy among God's people everywhere, it would seem that nothing short of vigorous action will discharge our duty to God and our fellow man.

Mining.

We stand before the Bible with our little picks and shovels, as before [illegible] Truth. One digs and finds lead, another silver, another copper, another perhaps opals or garnets; and they are all good. We are looking for gold; and we dig and dig for the precious metal, and "Eureka!"—we have found it. Our shovel has thrown out the dirt full of little shining particles:—Gold! gold! It is wonderful! We are rich! A little while ago we were tired, half discouraged prospectors, foot-sore from the much climbing among the rocks. To day we are exultant. We do not wait to consult an assayer—our own judgment is enough. We are sure it is infallible gold.

But the geologist comes along; we show our precious discovery. It is iron pyrites—"Fool's Gold" he says, "Good enough in its way; but not worth much."

Let us not be too sure, earnest seekers after truth, that our findings are unmixed gold, and not, at least in part, the beautiful shining deception!

Deeper, deeper let us go! In the vast depths are the foundation truths, but do not let us throw away the baser though still valuable metals, nor despise with an "I am holier than thou" air the brave worker who is saving these, and growing rich towards God on what to us are less important findings than we feel are hidden in the granite depths of God's everlasting storehouse of "Divine Truths!"

Arizona Work.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I desire to do what I can toward supporting THE RESTITUTION and expect to send my subscription for the coming year at an early date.

I informed you in a former letter that I visited Arlington, Arizona and that seven made response to the call of obedience to the gospel. For a number of causes the meetings were postponed till February 26. On that date with the efficient help of Elder Caleb Deming a weeks meeting was held. On Sunday March 5th 12 willing souls were assisted in immersion by Bro. Deming.

We went from the irrigation canal to Bro. William Perry's house to reorganize the Church of God at Arlington, Arizona and celebrate our Lord's death. Bro. Deming was re-elected Elder. Bro. William Miller was also given the eldership. Bro. Andreas Anderson and Wm. Perry were selected as deacons, and Bro. Lauredo Anderson as Treas.

The brethren purpose on keeping up a regular Thursday evening Bible class with Elder Deming acting as teacher. Although I have been often cast down with ill health this successful work has braced me up with confidence and an increased desire for evangelistic usefulness. If the Lord wills I expect to start through California to Oregon and Washington. If any of the brethren desire for me to visit them on the way address me without delay in care of Mrs Grace Lawrence, Palo Verde, Arizona.

W. L. SKEELS.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Please accept the enclosed order for THE RESTITUTION for 1911. Trusting that this finds you and Sister Underwood in good health. Surely the times are ripening fast, unfolding every hour. May we remain steadfast in the faith, abounding in the work of the Lord, walking worthy of our high calling, that when Jesus comes we may be found of him in peace, is my prayer.

Your Sister in the patient waiting for Christ to come, that we may see him as he is, and be made like him.

MATTIE NEILL.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life necessary for final salvation.

Selections.

Constructive Christianity.

Jesus is the carpenter—the constructive force in human life and in society. The man who is on his side makes, builds, raises up. He tunnels through mountains of human misery when he cannot cast them into the depths of the sea. He flings across gulfs of despair—specs of eternal hope. He makes straight through the dreary desert of an uncivilized civilization a highway for the march of an emancipated people. The man who yields himself in simple loyalty to Christ and seeks to live in his spirit is a medium of light, a source of health, a center of knowledge, a saving energy, a redemptive force, a tendency making for love.

Each one who has come out of selfishness into service has become a savior. He has crossed over from the side of things which spoil and lay waste and destroy. He is one with all good men every where, all good movements, all angels of heaven, all operations of God for saving men. I pray you join yourselves to these forces this day. The first step is to say to yourself, "I belong to Christ." Say that today, this instant, now! Say it and mean it, and in this moment the destroying forces have lost one vigorous unit, and the energies of righteousness have received one powerful recruit.

Register yourself. Put yourself on record as a follower of Christ. Stand up to be counted by eyes which see the invisible. Rise in your soul of souls and name the name of Christ.

"Roaming in thought over the universe, I saw the little that is Good steadily hastening towards immortality, and the vast all that is called Evil I saw hastening to merge itself and become lost and dead."

Brother, I call you from that death to this immortality. Choose well; your choice is brief, but eternal.—Charles F. Aked.

Seven Kinds of Givers.

First, there are those who give spontaneously and generously, but only to themselves—auto-givers, they might be called.

Second, those who give thoughtlessly, without any real or high motive—givers of the occasion, as it were.

Third, those who give as a sop to the conscience and self-esteem; in a species of atonement for the evil they do—penitential givers.

Fourth, those who give as a matter of display, to win public applause for their generosity—theatrical givers.

Fifth, those who give because others give, because they are expected to give and are ashamed not to give, and therefore give grudgingly—conventional givers.

Sixth, those who give because they feel they ought to give; who give through a sense of duty, and not through love—moral givers.

Seventh, those who give in the spirit of Jesus; who give because they love their neighbor as themselves, and above all things desire to help him—spiritual givers.

To which kind do you belong?

Look Out For Others.

A man was walking down a dark street and met another man with a cane and a lantern. The striking thing about the second man was this: He was feeling his way with his cane, and apparently making no use of the light from his lantern.

When asked if he was blind, the man with the lantern replied that he was, but he said that he knew the streets well, and had no difficulty in making his way with the aid of his cane.

"But why do you carry a lantern?" was the next question asked.

"To keep other people without lanterns from stumbling over me," was the blind man's answer.

Thus this blind man was trying not to be a stumbling-block in the way of others. It is a good thing for us all to try to avoid putting stumbling-blocks in the way of those whom we meet in the journey of life.—Anon.

We let others occupy our columns mostly this week.

The plague situation in China and India remains much the same, and thousands are dead and other thousands dying.

China is making a mild protest regarding Russia's claims but will in the end yield, as the Czar's troops are quietly pushing on.

There being five Wednesdays this month, our next issue will bear date April 5. Hence we give two Sunday School lessons this issue.

An effort is being made to quiet affairs in Mexico. The insurrectionists say they do not [illegible] will stop if President Diaz will resign. Inasmuch as the people elected him by a large majority, he declines to agree to this. So it looks as if they would continue the struggle.

Strongest Incentive to Watchfulness.

I regard personal interest as the very strongest incentive to watchful action that I know of. Let one's personal interest in something he values highly be jeopardized, and he will be very watchful of his interest.

I cannot conceive of any interest so vital as that which is involved in the second coming of Christ. Every other interest known to man pales into insignificance when placed in comparison. The Lord left us instruction in Matt xxiv 42: "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." There are so many points to watch that we have got considerable business on hand if we take care of them. Not having accurate information as to the time of the Lord's coming, it necessitates careful watchfulness along many lines, that our personal interest may be preserved.

This conspicuously illustrated in the parable of the ten virgins. They represent the whole company of those who are looking for the coming of Jesus. How many were prepared to meet him is clearly shown in the parable—only one-half. The trouble with the other half was they lacked light. Now, why did they need light? Because of midnight darkness. The kind of light that was necessary is found in 2 Cor iv 4. "The light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them." Many who are looking for the second coming of Christ walk in darkness; yea, in midnight darkness. They have lamps—empty professions—but they do not have any gospel oil, consequently they do not have gospel light. Nothing but gospel light will guide any one through midnight darkness unto the coming of the Bridegroom.

There are some who have gone forth to meet the Bridegroom who are destitute of gospel light. These need light concerning the essential features which constitute the Gospel of the Kingdom, as preached by Jesus and his disciples as the message of life.

The teaching that will alienate from the life of God will be found in the passage of Scripture which enumerates doctrines which, if not believed, will alienate such a disbeliever from Christ; and, as far as the future is concerned, such a one is in the sad and lamentable condition of being without hope. See Eph ii 11-12: "Wherefore remember that ye being in times past Gentiles in the flesh * * * that at that time ye were without Christ, on account of being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, and having no hope, and without God in the world."

"Not all who believe in the second coming of Jesus have the light concerning the restoration of the commonwealth to Israel. There are some who teach that Israel will never again exist as an independent commonwealth. They say Israel as a nation will never return to the land covenanted to their fathers, but must remain a hopeless ruin. So far as the Covenants of Promise relate to the land covenanted to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their seed, the Christ is concerned, their teaching would render such covenants null and void by affirming its destruction by fire prior to its being possessed by those to whom it was covenanted.

The question is: What personal interest can any people have in a commonwealth they would consign to a hopeless ruin? None! They are in need of Gospel oil, that they may have Gospel light sufficient to dispel the midnight darkness which they are in. Without it they will be unable to see clear enough to find the "narrow way" which leads to the coming Bridegroom. Self interest should lead any one to secure the genuine article.

The Scriptures are clear in their statements about the future restoration of the commonwealth of Israel. Listen: "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen nations whither they be gone, and I will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations; neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."—Ezek xxxvii 21-22. God did not suspend this commonwealth forever. See Ezek xxi 25 27: "It shall be no more until he come, whose right it is, and I will give it him."

The cross of Christ cannot be preached independent of the commonwealth of Israel, for Matthew says, in chapter xxvii verse 37: "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." Jesus could never reign as "King of the Jews" should the Jews forever remain a dispersed people and disorganized as a commonwealth. Now, there are some who believe, and boldly affirm, that God will not "bring them into their own land," and will not "make them one nation in the land." They strongly affirm that Jesus will never reign over restored Israel as "King of the Jews." They hesitate not in declaring that the exiled sons of Jacob will never, in a national capacity, occupy their fatherland.

This kind of teaching is certainly contradictory to the angelic message to Mary. See Luke i 31 32, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Now, David's throne was in Jerusalem, the seat of government over the house of Jacob, "and he whose right it is," and who was "born King of the Jews" will come in all his glory and exercise his authority that was given to him after his resurrection, on the throne of David. See Acts xvi 16-18. "After these things I will return, and I will build again the Tabernacle of David, which is fallen; and I will build again the ruins thereof and I will set it up, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who maketh these things known of old."

In watching we should also watch the national movements of Israel, because Israel is the great sign nation of the world. Unless we do so, we may find ourselves walking in darkness.

Strict watchfulness along practical lines is also needful. "Not every one who saith unto me, "Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." The phrase "doeth the will" covers both to believe what he teaches and do what he says.

The virgins who lack oil will seek admission into the kingdom, for we read: "Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, open to us; but he answered and said, I know ye not." See also Matt. vii 21-23: "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied (taught) in thy name? And in thy name have cast out devils? And in thy name done many wonderful works? and then will I profess unto them, I never knew you." They were professed Christian people, some of them preachers, but "I never knew you," says Jesus.

The above should be a lesson of warning to us. Let the lesson be a solemn warning to all, and see to it that the requisite oil is provided before the cry rings out upon the air: "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Now is the time but when the door is locked it will be too late.

The signs indicate that a great change is at hand. A tremendous crisis is impending. People in general perceive it. Politicians, statesmen, financiers, and men of the world, who know not the prophetic Word, say that things are heading up for some mighty change, but as to what that change will consist of they have but very little conception.

In conclusion, I would say: Beloved, we are not in darkness; we know what is coming; we know that the dark, ominous storm cloud, now visible in the social and political heavens, will shortly burst and shake terribly the aforesaid heavens and earth. See Heb xii 26-28: "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." And this word Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain; wherefore we receive a kingdom which cannot be moved. Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and Godly fear."

After the storm will come "the King of the Jews," the revival of the commonwealth of Israel, the new life, and the blessing of the nations in Abraham and his seed.

The great concern of all virgins should be "How about my oil?" Have I a sufficient supply for my lamp? We have all received a sufficient [illegible] that it will be everlast[illegible] to lay in a supply after the word comes: "Go ye out to meet him." The supply must be laid in now or never. A pleat of religious profession alone will be of no avail.

Remember his words to the foolish virgins: "I know you not." I entreat you, as one who seeks only your own best interests, to consider well, and meditate seriously, over the statements made in Eph ii 11-12. They mean so much. It is the pivot on which our eternal destiny will turn.

Have you a citizen's interest in the commonwealth of Israel? If you have, then jealously watch and preserve your rights. The benefits that citizens will possess over aliens is simply immense, and so we cannot afford to trifle with that interest. It is said of Ephesian Gentiles: "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers from the Covenants of Promise, and foreigners (aliens,) but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

Sunday School Lesson.

APRIL 2, 1911.

Elisha Heals Naaman the Syrian.
2 Kings v.

Golden Text:—"Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." Isa. xlv. 22.

With the last regular lessons of the past quarter, we were made acquainted with the prophet Elisha who was to take up the work of Elijah. The prophet lived at Samaria, the capital of the Northern kingdom of Israel. At Damascus, the capital of Syria, some 110 miles north of Samaria, there lived a man named Naaman, who was a captain in the army of the Syrian king. This man's name means "Pleasant to look upon." He was a good looking man, perhaps a fine looking man, but he was a leper. That dreadful disease has begun its work on him, and he was unclean, and apparently there was no cure for his disease.

During the wars between the nations, a little Jewish maiden had been taken captive, and was a servant to the wife of this man. As she saw his affliction, and heard of the sorrow of the family on this account, her sympathy was aroused, and she told her mistress that if her husband could see the prophet in Israel, she thought he could be healed. This was told, and coming to the knowledge of the Syrian king, he directed that his captain go, with presents and letters from him to the king of Israel, and have a trial of this man's power. He thought to buy with money this cure. When they came to the king of Israel and told their errand, he was in distress, thinking it was but a pretext to get into a quarrel again, and was much excited about it. When Elisha heard of it, he sent and told the king to send the man to him, and he would show Naaman that there was a prophet in Israel. When finally the company appeared before his door, he did not go out to them, but sent word by his servant that this Naaman should go and dip seven times in the Jordan, and he would be cured. This did not suit the proud Syrian, and he turned away disappointed and disgusted. He declared that the rivers of Damascus were better water than the Jordan, and if water could cure leprosy then better bathe in such water as his own land afforded. He was going away when his own servants reminded him that if some great thing had been demanded he would have complied with the request, but this simple thing might at least be tried, and finally he was prevailed on to comply, with the result that he was healed, and his flesh came to him as a little child. The story continues that he returned to the prophet, and sought to have him accept some present, but the prophet rejected his offer. It seems that Gehazi the servant of Elisha was not adverse to taking a present however, and after Naaman was started on his return home, he followed and asked a gift for some poor young men, and was given what he asked. When he came again to Elisha, the prophet asked him where he had been, and he replied that he had not been away, but Elisha knew he had, and for his duplicity he was made to have the leprosy that Naaman had suffered.

There are a number of lessons to get from this incident. There is the little maid, with her sympathy overcoming her timid nature, till she could tell of the wonderful things done by the great prophet in Israel, and her faith that even the dread leprosy could be healed by his power. Then we have the marked difference in the faith of the king of Israel and the prophet. The king rent his clothes [illegible] such a thing was the work of none other than God himself, and it was not to be expected he could work such a miracle. In contrast is the supreme confidence of Elisha. This proud officer of a proud monarch of a heathen land should be made to know that there was a prophet in Israel. He should be made to realize Israel's God. Not the least hesitancy on the part of Elisha, but absolute confidence that God would answer the call, and perform the cure. Some have called this boasting in Elisha. Well it it is it was boasting of the right sort, so that need not trouble. The simple thing that Naaman was directed to do, was not so simple after all. It was quite a distance to the Jordan, and as Naaman went there he would have time to think. Suppose after all he did go and dip in Jordan and his disease was not cured, how he would be a laughingstock for not only the Israelites, but his own people as well. It would be humiliating to one in his high position. It would make him the butt of all the coarse jokes that could be thought of. It would be an open disgrace. It was not so easy to comply with this task as it might seem. It was necessary that the pride be gotten out of Naaman's heart before he could be cured. To cure the leprosy the diseased flesh must be changed to good flesh, and till the putrid condition was changed, and rid of, this could not be done. So the pride and haughty spirit must be gotten rid of and the heart made humble, before there was any changed condition. It is so now as it was then. No man boasting of his high position, his influence with kings and those in high power, the rich in this world's goods, no matter how famous and great—this must be all put aside, and with humbleness as of a little child, with just such faith as the little maid exhibited. This is the only way that one may come to God now and be made clean.

Humble means for great results, teaches us not to despise little things. Common things must be done, and life is made up not of a few great things that bring us honor and praise but the little deeds and words that are the outgrowth of a good heart, willing to help and serve in any sphere however humble. This constitutes the Christian life, and is the life that God wants, and which he will reward in the judgment day. Are you willing this coming week to so serve God?

Elisha's Heavenly Defenders.
2 Kings vi. 8-23.

Golden Text.—"For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Psa. xci. 11.

At the time of this lesson the king of Syria had come with an army to attack the Israelites, and had purposed with his men to make his camp at a certain place where it was expected the Israelites would pass, and could be attacked with good advantage, but the prophet Elisha warned the king of Israel not to go that way, and this was done more than once, till the king of Syria thought that he had a traitor in his camp. But he was informed that it was no traitor, but the work of the same prophet that had cured his captain Naaman. He sought then to capture Elisha, and sent a vast company to surround the place where he was at night. When morning came Elisha's servants were much frightened at the host that encompassed them, and did not know what to do. The prophet assures them that there are more for them than are against them, and when his eyes are opened he sees the much superior forces that are there to care for Elisha. The Syrian host is blinded so that they do not recognize the prophet, and they are led to Samaria captive, where at the suggestion of the prophet they are fed and then allowed to go to their own land, and the war is thus ended for awhile.

This is a simple lesson of trust in God. Those who confidently put their trust in God, and rely wholly on him for protection, will have his care. The foes of right and truth and God are as hosts, and the timid are affrighted, but when we see and realize that over all there is the God of hosts, we can safely rest in his protecting arms, and not fear what foes may do to us.

There is danger all about us, and our natural eye can behold just enough to make us afraid and tremble. But with the eye of faith we can look over, look deeper, see farther, see more, and as we do we can be assured in our heart that those things that are working for our good are more than what is against us. With our eyes shut we see only danger, with them opened we see deliverance.

In a New Field.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have been endeavoring to get a series of meetings where I spent the days of my youth, and so on the eve of March 2d, we began at Gingham-burg, Ohio, fifteen miles south on the Electric road. I introduced the meeting in this manner: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, and the word was made into flesh;" and the word was before Abraham. The Savior said in the Acts of the Apostles, before Abraham was I am.

Then we sang "All hail the power of Jesus name." Then I read Ezekiel xxi. 25 26. Thus profane and wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God. Remove the diadem, and take off the crown. This shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him.

Then we sang the hymn "Joy to the world, the Lord will come," and then I read Revelations xxi. I read each verse with care, so they could distinctly understand it. Showed them plain about the holy city coming down from God out of heaven, and where John said the angel took him into a high mountain, and showed him that great city, the Holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God. Then I showed them the height of the great wall in feet, which is about 261 feet. And then in regard to the size of the city, he measured it 12,000 furlongs, or 1,500 miles; the length, breadth and height are equal. It being 500 miles each way, 250 000 square miles, larger than six states like Ohio. A house not made with hands, eternal.

Then I read one verse of the following chapter: And he showed me a pure river of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

Then we sang "Shall we gather at the river," and we arose in the Lord's Prayer, after which Brother Robison occupied the pulpit.

We had good audiences every night but one when the weather was disagreeable to be out. We also had good attention, all we could expect; in fact every thing went off admirable, but I must lay this to the efforts of Brother and Sister Robison.

We have arranged to have meetings there once a month during the year, Saturday evening, Sunday morning and evening. This is a good field to work in, all denominations being represented.

Yours in the Faith,
W. H. EIDEMILLER.

Report of Meeting.

On February 10th, Brother Almus Adams was called here, Moorefield, Nebraska, to preach the funeral of Sister Steadman, and afterwards he decided to remain and preach for a few evenings.

He held meetings in a school house south of town for a week and a half, with large crowds and good interest, and during the meeting three decided to accept the truth. We then thought best to stop there for the present, so we went to town, to the church for the remainder of the week, at the close of which two more accepted the truth.

Some of the people in the country then wished to hear a few more sermons at the school house, so he went back for another week, with the same good interest as before, and it seems that it is only a matter of a little time when several more of those interested listeners will be with us, and we earnestly hope they will not wait too long.

On Monday, March 6, Brother and Sister J. N. Worley, and Sister Dunkin were baptized; but the others will wait until another time.

Brother Adams was with us nearly a month, and his time was certainly well spent, and we greatly appreciate the good work done by him.

Editor Restitution:

The brethren at Cleveland, O., have been enjoying a series of sermons on the signs of the times, by our beloved pastor, Brother Huggins. In these last days it is most appropriate to review the prophetic signs of Daniel, and these sermons have plainly shown to us that all the ways of the Lord are sure and certain, and Gentile times are fast running out. According to the chronological data, the coming of the kingdom of the Lord will be about the year 1916-1956.

Brethren, the beginning of the end, when Jesus shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe, is surely at hand. According to Brother Huggins' interpretation of these prophecies having being fulfilled, there remains nothing between us and the Lord's coming. "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Does not this awaken a responsive cord in all our hearts? This is the glorious hope set before us in the gospel, and whosoever has this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he (Jesus) is pure.

May the inspiration received from these lessons on the signs of the times make us a prepared people, so we can say with John "Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Your Sister waiting for Him,
HATTIE P. SANFORD.

Obituary.

Mary E. Wilkins, daughter of Thomas and Louisa Wilkins, was born Oct. 22, 1836, in Laporte Co., Ind. Died at the home of her son Jesse Stanley, Clay City, Ill. Jan. 11, 1911; aged 74 years, 2 months and 20 days. She was married to Wm. M. Stanley Nov. 20, 1852. To this union five sons and five daughters were born. In the year 1866 they moved to Missouri. They left Missouri and went to Clay Co., Ill., in 1874, where they remained until the enemy death claimed them. Her companion preceded her to the grave Mar. 7, 1880. She is survived by eight children, 53 grandchildren, 16 great grandchildren, one brother, one sister and many other relatives and friends, who mourn her loss.

In early life she with her companion united with the Christian people, remained with them until Nov. 5, 1891. She then united with the Church of God, and remained a member until death. She read the Bible and THE RESTITUTION as long as she could see to read. Mother's life had been filled with care and pain. She bore her suffering with patience and Christian fortitude, and said it was all right. Let us thank God she sleeps with the everlasting arms beneath her. Asleep in Jesus, awaiting the trumpet call to awake her to a life that will not end, and where no sad parting will come. When I last met her in Sept., 1910, she said to me, I know I can't live long, but I am ready. I am not afraid to die. So confidently did she rest on the promises of God to bring her back to life again. She could say as Paul said, I have run the race, I have finished my course, and feel sure of a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Four of her children were with her during her last sickness and death. All that medical aid and loving hands could do could not stay the hand of death. But let us not weep as those who have no hope, but remember these comforting words, "Blessed are dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, sayeth the Spirit, that they may rest from their labor and their works do follow them." May we each so live that we may have the same confidence that we will be awakened in the resurrection morning and meet mother there.

Farewell, dear mother, sweet thy rest,
Weary with years, and worn with pain;
Farewell, till in some happy place,
We shall behold thy face again.

'Tis ours to miss thee all our years,
And tender memories of thee keep;
Thine is the Lord to rest, for so
He giveth his beloved sleep.

The Needle's-Eye Gate.

Tall was my camel, and laden high,
And small the gate as a needle's eye;
The city within was fine and fair,
And I and my camel would enter there.

You must lower your load, the porter cried,
And then get rid of that hump of pride.
This I did; but the load was great,
And far too wide for the narrow gate.

Now, said the porter, to make it less,
Discard that lot in spite of selfishness.
I obeyed; although with much ado,
Yet still, not camel nor I got through.

Ah, said the porter, your head must hold
Some little package of "trust in gold."
The merest handful was all I had,
Yet threw it away, this porter said.

Then by a marvel, the camel fell,
Sorrunk to the size of the portal small,
And all my riches—a vast estate,
Easily passed through that little gate.

So I—and not through the needle's eye.

If John thought there were "thousands" of errors in the Word of the Lord, why did he suffer himself to be banished to the isle of Patmos "on account of the Word of God?" Rev. i. 9.

The martyrs that were "beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God" (Rev. xx. 4) could have saved getting their heads cut off if only they had known that there are "thousands of errors" in the Bible. What fools Higher Criticism has made of these men who gave their lives for the erratic Word of God.

Some of our readers will enjoy the following poetic effusions from an anti-Creed man which appeared in one of our Monthly Exchanges:—

"What makes our burning lamps go out?
Our faith impugned—hope cried in doubt?
Because some will not live without
A man-made Creed and Discipline.

What makes the Christian's road so bright,
His mind so clear, his heart so light?
Is not the Bible in this light
His only Creed and Discipline?

Why not the Bible be our guide,
In all our faith and works beside,
And by its teachings all abide,
Without that Creed and Discipline?

To identify the writer it is only necessary to say that he is the same man who, at the General Conference last summer, said in a Sunday School talk that "the Bible was the best Book in the world;" the same man transformed into a poet, speaks in above lines. At heart he believes the Bible, about which he sings so sweetly in poetry, is as much "Man-made" as our Creed is. We notice he says, "Why not the Bible be our guide" "And by its teachings all abide;" but if the Bible equally with our Creed and Discipline is "Man-made," why not take them for our "guide" and "abide" by their teachings without the Bible? See THE RESTITUTION, Ebenezer department for Feb'y. 9, 1910, article, "That Question," from which I quote these words written by our poet: "The chapters" (referring to Neh. vii; Ezra ii.) "differ in numbers which run up into thousands, and yet you say there are no errors, and challenge me to find a single one in the Bible." In the same Monthly the same writer has been pointing out several errors in the Nebraska Statement of Faith. He has not found a dozen errors in that "Man-made Creed;" in the Bible, in only two chapters, he has found errors "which run up into thousands!" He repudiates a "Man-made Creed" with less than a dozen errors in it, he being the Judge, and asks us to accept the Bible as our "guide"—"And by its teachings all abide"—a book that in two chapters has errors "which run up into the thousands!" Nobody but a partial inspirationist has the conscience to figure up "thousands" of errors in only two chapters of the Bible, and then in the face of these unnumbered thousands of mistakes, to turn poet and sing the merits of the Bible, and to preach to little boys and girls that it is "the best book in the world." In only two chapters errors "run up into thousands;" but for all that "the Bible is the best book in the world!!"

Samson and the Bees.

I have just been reading Tickner Edwards' book "The Lore of the Honey Bee." It is without doubt the most elaborate and artistic work that I have ever read on the subject of bees, and seems an epitome of all that is known or certain, the wonderful insect "republics" that have been a puzzle in all ages, and still are to a great extent. In my opinion however, the book is marred by the blundering evolution theories of the author, which no doubt is more his misfortune than his fault, for the modern professional entomologist who does not subscribe to this doctrine is taboo with all his brethren who occupy the highest "seats in the synagogue."

To a plain man, for instance, the idea that these insects have perfected their system of government by careful self culture and individual immolation for the public protection, all of their own initiative, is too absurd a "nature fake" to be worth a moment's consideration. A dream wilder than the wildest fairy tale. Even the facts as they stand are surpassingly wonderful and hard to credit were it not for the testimony of patient and laborious experiment that has been carried on systematically for many years.

But what I want to call attention to most particularly in this book, and which is illustrative of the means used by such (otherwise conscientious) writers when they have a theory to support, is the loose way they have of handling any other statement or statements that happen to militate or fail to agree with their theory.

The following quotation will explain itself: "Just as marvellous, however, to the modern entomologist will appear the belief wide spread among the ancients and shared by Virgil that swarms of bees can be spontaneously generated from the ox. Virgil professes to derive his account of the matter from an old Egyptian legend, and gives directions to bee keepers how to restock their hives. "First there is found a place small and narrowed for the use, shut in by a little tiled roof and closed walls..... Next is found a two year old bull calf whose crooked horns be just beginning to bud. The beast, his nose holes and breathing are stopped in spite of his much kicking, and after he has been thumped to death, his entrails bruised as they melt inside of his skin."

The upshot of the business is that all the inferior mess was supposed by Virgil, et al, to turn to bees as thick as rain drops from a summer cloud. "Nearly all the ancient writers," continues the author "with the exception of Aristotle, mention the practice in some form or other. Varro writing half a century before Virgil, says it is from rotten oxen that are born the sweet bees the mothers of honey."

Mr Edwards then goes on to explain that they made the mistake of supposing that blow-flies—or drone-flies as he calls them—were honey bees, but at the same time he does allow that all these fellows were mere literary men, and not practical men in the bee business; and he continues again: "But having gone thus far with the drone fly, it is difficult to resist going a little further. We cannot leave him in the ignominious company of slaughtered oxen, but must give him his due of more lordly associations. Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong man came forth sweetness."

When Samson went down to Timnath on his fateful mission of wooing, and saw the carcass by the way beset by a cloud of insects, we need not cast any doubt on his genuine belief that they were honey bees. He propounded his riddle in all good faith, and the form of it can very well be explained of a not undue stretch of allowable poetic privilege. That the creatures he saw hovering about the dead lion were really bees, and that Samson obtained honey from the carcass, is not to be accepted without the exercise of a faith that is indistinguishable from credulity. There is little doubt at this time that the part of the story dealing with the honey is but a deft embroidering on the original legend, by some later chronicler, and that the insects which were seen about the lion, were really drone flies generated in the same fashion as those of Virgil's ox."

Now it is hardly worth while trying to reply to this that the story states Samson "took honey in his hands," went on eating and "gave to his father and mother." So that Mr. Edwards not only makes the chronicler a liar, but Samson himself, as the riddler in professing to have so done is likewise nominated as honorary member of the "Ananias Club," or else he didn't know the difference between a bee and a blow fly, and was first cousin to the man who "didn't know a bee from a bull's foot," although dwelling in a land "flowing with milk and honey," and the ruler of a great people for twenty years.

Now to me the story of Samson is one of the most beautiful in the Bible, a companion of that of Joseph and David, and especially for boys one of the most fascinating. True some points in the transaction have so marred it that an immoral cast is put upon it, but where that is understood and rectified, it is really a picture of a hero that has no parallel in history. The Scotch William Wallace approaches him in many points, in fact is a sort of under study of him. Both were physically powerful. Both took up arms for the public weal on the strength of a private wrong—the murder of their wives in both cases—both were unsuccessful in their lives, both died for the liberty of their country by treachery, and in both cases their deaths were the immediate cause of the ultimate deliverance of land and people. From the grave of Samson sprang Saul, David and the hosts of "mighty men of Israel," as from Wallace scattered carcass was born the heroes that delivered Scotland under Robert Bruce, and as we may say that the history of modern freedom was born and maintained in Scotland and England, until further carried to these far shores, as we may trace historically the cause of Israel and of Israel's God to the heroic life and death of Samson. It would be a pity to have him turn out a liar and a fool. True he blundered some to his undoing, but let him that is strong and wise before a handsome woman's languid eyes stand up and stone all the rest of us.

As a matter of fact Mr. Edwards' rendering of the story is impossible, and the blunder he has made is the result of several causes, chief of which is that he is an Englishman. He writes of English bees and English conditions. For instance, if a carcass of a lion or any other animal was to lie in the back yard of an English village or town, or even in the country districts, it would have to lie there until it was either buried or carted away, meanwhile the blow flies would get in their work if the weather ever got hot enough for them.

Very few people know where England and the British Isles are—even those that live there. Just think of it—they lie between the 50th and 60th parallel of latitude, that is, the most southerly point of England only runs down as far as the most northern point of Newfoundland, and the most northern island of Scotland reaches up as far as the end of Greenland. In other words Britain is on a level with Labrador and Hudson Bay, and why it is not frozen all over nine months in the year is one of those natural miracles that sometimes occur, like "meat from the eater, and sweet from the strong."

Now on the other hand, the scene of Samson's [illegible] with the lion was about the 32nd parallel of latitude, or on a level geographically with Savannah, Georgia, so that the most casual student will understand at a glance that the conditions between England and Palestine are altogether different, and carcasses don't lie out in the wild and quietly rot down this way, and blow flies that are not in a great hurry have "no show."

I well remember when first I saw that strange bird, the American Vulture or Turkey Buzzard, gathered on its prey. I was fascinated at the sight. It was down in "Old Virginia," and the sight was so commonplace to the natives that they laughed at the interest I took; but since then I have lived for about a quarter of a century in the agricultural districts of Maryland, and have seen and studied the buzzard in all its moods and conditions—lived for years a few hundred yards from a tree called a "buzzard's roost," where they congregated in the evening near a country town, where they sat round the chimneys on cold mornings, and came down into back yards and fed with the chickens; but even now when I see a buzzard I am just as interested in him as ever. Even the wonderful aeroplanes that bear him up into and beyond the clouds a speck hardly visible to the naked eye, and yet from that exalted vantage point, scanning the whole vast country beneath him with telescopic eye.

People that live in cities or in countries where these carrion birds do not live, cannot realize their use, or the wonderful provision that the Creator has designed by them. They are the ready and natural scavengers of the tropical and sub tropical regions, and nothing escapes them. No sick dog can crawl under a bush in the thickest woods to die, but they will find him and gather from all quarters to devour him; and it is the custom of the farmers in Maryland and Virginia to drag out their dead stock to some waste corner, and thus dispose of the carcass.

It will be remembered also that the corpse of human beings are thus disposed of in Oriental lands by the religious sect known by the names of Parsees, or Zoroastrians or Fire worshipers. In this case they have a roofless building called a Tower of Silence, into which the body is taken, and as the bearers return immediately these birds swarm down and consume it.

The American Vulture seems to be about the weakest of that class of bird. The Vultures of the East and of Africa, from all accounts are more rabid and powerful, and there are a great variety of them. William Vasse, a French hunter and naturalist, in his book on "Zambesia" gives this interesting account of the exploits of birds of carrion and of prey in that locality: "The frequency of my visits to Gorongosa has brought me a company with whose presence I could well dispense, namely, the bird of prey. As soon as I have killed an animal the Kites arrive: immediately after them the sky is dotted with specks that grow larger to the view, and with a harsh whizzing hundreds of vultures of two species, let themselves fall from a vast height, and cover the trees.....As soon as you withdraw from the carcass, carrying with you what you have selected, all this winged host descends, crowding, pecking, and quarrelling. If the wounded animal dies far from you, run, for in a short time nothing will remain. The vultures, having pecked out the eyes, attack the rest, making his way into the body, eating out the soft internal parts, and picking the bones so that when you arrive you find nothing but a skin spread over a perfectly anatomized skeleton..... I have seen a flock of several hundred vultures clean the carcass of a zebra in twenty minutes."

Now this, and such as this, is what happens every time in the ordinary course of nature in lands where the vulture inhabits. I have often seen some old mule or horse carcass in just such a condition as Mr. Vasse here describes, a "skeleton with the skin spread over it." Eventually the beasts of prey tear the skin and scatter the bones, which in our territory here is affected by the negro's half starved dogs, but in the case of Samson's lion it must have been just at this juncture that the bees took possession, before either dogs or blow flies had a chance, and every one who has lived in the country knows the strange vagaries of a swarm of bees, and now given the conditions of such a "skep" it was, although an exceptional, yet not such a marvelous thing after all.

Now if we study the life and character of Samson, it will be seen that the strongest trait was his contempt for any thing mean or sneaking, such as lying or untruth. It was this that got him into all his trouble. His life was a protest against underhanded men and cowardice. It is always claimed against him that he was revengeful, and yet if you observe carefully he never took private revenge, but "took it out" on his country's oppressor, as Wallace did, and Washington in a more distant way. He was not, as some suppose, merely a strong man, but was a careful strategist, carrying on a "guerrilla" war, striking here and terrorizing there—aping the enemy's country alone and holding them at bay with the mysterious might of his sole arm.

Now a few words about how Samson slew the lion. Usually the pictures represent him as tearing its jaws open. This is very unlikely. In that case the lion would have gotten in the first stroke, and that would have been sufficient to kill any man. Now it is not an uncommon thing for a man to kill a lion. Hunters have been known to draw their knives and stab them to the heart while being borne away in their teeth. David claimed to have slain a lion while he was yet a youth, and more are mentioned among the warriors of Israel in David's time when lions seem to have been numerous in that land.

But the wonder is that Samson had "nothing in his hand." Now I was reading lately a curious thing about the gorilla, which is something in the human form, yet is much more powerful than a man, quite as powerful as a lion perhaps. It is said by the natives of the country where it lives, to watch for its natural enemy, the leopard, stretched out along the limb of a tree where the carnivora come to drink. As the leopard passes underneath, the gorilla drops on him, grips his neck in his fore hands, and his hind quarters in his hind hands, doubles him up backwards, and snaps his vertebra.

Something like this I fancy, was Samson's exploit. When the lion made his leap, as it invariably does, Samson side stepped as they do in bull fighting, then before the brute recovered, seized him head and tail, and "rent him as he would a kid," backwards, thus escaping without even a scratch.

J. F. GELLETLY.

Books, Pamphlets, MSS. Etc

Two questions from Brother F. M. Howell, will be answered soon. "Curiosities of the Bible," "Truthful Gems," and "Description of Christ," manuscripts from Bro. E. W. Knapp, good and useful—thanks. "Eternal life" and "The end of the ages," poems by Brother Mason—will use in due time. Two pages of "Gold dust," good as most of Sister Drew's writings are. "Confidence," a brief but good article (the kind we like to get) by Sister Nellie Pate. "A pattern," by Brother Sterling Russell. "An introduction to unitarianism," and "Five fundamental principles of our faith," two booklets sent and marked by Brother E. W. Knapp. To show our brethren who are gravitating toward unitarianism how really infidelic the the system is, we quote the following paragraph: "A little reflection shows that the whole account of man's fall must be given up.....: Does the Bible claim to be infallible? If it does, is the claim verified? Modern scholars have found many undoubted mistakes in it. Along with the loftiest thoughts they have found many human errors. If the Bible is not infallible can the appeal to proof texts really prove anything? Is it longer possible to rest content with a doctrine merely because it is 'scriptural?' Common sense answers, No!" Unitarianism is full-fledged infidelity—admittedly so. Note this ye brethren who are tolerant of Josephiteism. You are playing with poison, but don't seem to know it.

The Hope Within Us.

"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." 1 Pet. iii. 15.

There are various reasons which people give for the hope which they have.

1. Some think they will be saved because all will be saved. This is not a safe ground of hope, for if all should not be saved, then these people would not be saved. This makes salvation depend upon a disputed point, for; "Though a sinner do evil a hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God." Eccl. viii. 12.

2. Some think they will be saved on the ground of their good work. This is running a great hazzard, inasmuch as they do not know how the account will balance. They no doubt have done their duty and much good, but this will not save them from their guilt of wrong or from rejecting Christ.

3. Others again, think they will be saved because sin does not deserve eternal punishment. Even if there is no eternal punishment they have no further hope than that they will not be punished. These people do not think of their eternal welfare, so what hope is there then for these? Since hope is the combination of a desire and expectation of some future good, they have no future except a blank one.

4. Others again, think they will be saved because God is too good and merciful to suffer them to be lost. The mercy and goodness of God did not prevent the destruction of the old world by water; the cities by fire; or people from falling into sin. Why do people persist to stand by what has heretofore failed?

5. Some think they will be saved because Christ died for them. That he died for all is admitted, but still all are not saved. Christ died to save us now, and is as able and willing to save us now as he ever will be. Then why not accept him?

6. Some think they will be saved on the ground of subsequent reformation. They are always going to repent. They know they will be lost if they should die in the condition they now are, but still they neglect to repent. They may not live to repent. Take the opportunity when you have it, then you may be sure.

7. Then others have a hope, the greatest hope of all, the hope which we have. We are sure of this hope because we have received the pardon of our sins by faith; we have now the witness of our acceptance with God; and the purpose in our hearts to persevere. This is the Christian's hope; the only safe ground of hope; for it is grounded upon the atonement.

The Christian's hope is based upon a good reason, and is defensible against all objections and queries. Christians are bound so to live as to be able to give, at all times, a clear and sufficient reason of the hope they entertain. This requires both piety and intelligence. These professions of our faith ought to be made with meekness and fear. It is this that will give us weight and power to move the world.

VIOLA GAZELEY.

"The Honest Truth."

Some persons pride themselves on being blunt, or as they call it, "honest;" but very blunt people do very little good to others, and get little love to themselves. The Scriptures recommend gentleness and kindness. There is nothing in all the world of ours half so mean as a vindictive and malignant disposition. Yet many Christians gratify this spirit, and deceive themselves with the idea that they are rebuking sin. Christians should take heed of getting fond of the work of "rebuking." Such "spiritual constables" do a great deal of mischief without intending it.

They are in the church what a very witty and sarcastic person is in society, or what a tell-tale is in school, and approximate very closely to that class which the apostles terms "busybodies in other men's matters." Such Christians, in time come to be regarded as nuisances in society, constantly to be avoided, and the little good they may do is thrown away. Our manner must be tender and winning. The nail of reproof, says an old writer, must be well oiled in kindness before it is driven home.

Selections.

Take My Yoke Upon You.

When a weary selfish heart comes to the Savior, the Savior meets his needs by saying: "Take my yoke upon you." "But, Lord, he is tired and weary already; another yoke will crush him." "No, no; he has been carrying himself, and himself only, and that is the heaviest of all loads, heavier than any one can bear." But strange it is, that if he adds another burden, his own burden will become light. That is the mystery of grace, that the burdens of a selfish man are enlightened by adding more. "Take my yoke upon you." "And what yoke is that, Lord?" "The yoke of other folks' sorrows; put them on thy shoulders—take my yoke upon thee, increase thy burden, and thy burden shall become light, and instead of weariness thou shalt find rest."—J. H. Jowett.

Beautiful Thoughts.

Life's real heroes and heroines are those who bear their own burdens bravely, and give a helping hand to those around them.

We may be pretty certain that persons whom all the world treats ill deserve the treatment they get. The world is a looking glass, and gives back to every one the reflection of their own face. Frown at it and it will in turn look sourly upon you; laugh at it and with it, and it is a kind and pleasant companion; and so let all take their choice.

Never cast aside your friends if by any possibility you can retain them. We are the weakest of spendthrifts if we let one drop off through inattention, or let one push away another, or we hold aloof from one through petty jealousy or heedless slight. Would you throw away a diamond because it scratched you? One good friend is not to be weighed against the jewels of the earth. When you rise in the morning form a resolution to make the day a happy one to a fellow-creature. It is easily done; a left-off garment to the woman who needs it, a kind word to the sorrowful, an encouraging expression to the struggling—trifles in themselves light as air—will do it, at least for the twenty-four hours; and if you are young depend upon it it will tell when you are old; and if you are old it will send you gently and happily down the stream of human time to eternity.

It is a perilous and doubtful task to unveil the depths of the human heart; to reconcile the complex and often unconscious duplicities of human nature; to decide where delusion ends and deception begins; to estimate the force of temptations and the degrees of resistance to them; to discern the subtle harmony which binds all the parts of life together, and may unite general purity and acute apperceness to grievous frailties and ignoble crimes. None but the All-seeing One, "to whom all hearts are open and from whom no secrets are hid," can pierce the obscure mazes of human motives. The harsh, censorious, confident, sweeping, unrestricted judgment will blunder, whether it praise or blame.—Seneca.

The American Saloon Indicted.

As a citizen of the republic I indict the American saloon. I indict it in the name of the childhood of the nation, and challenge its right longer to exist. I indict it, not upon a single count, but upon many counts.

I charge it with the theft of childhood's birthright, the right to a "fair chance" and a "square deal."

I charge it with contributing to the neglect of childhood, with the alienation of parental affection, both of father and of mother.

I charge it with contributing to the delinquencies of childhood, with alluring it into paths of vice and of sin and crime, perilous paths, paths from which, if it return at all, it returns with tired and leaden feet, with joyless heart, with defiled body, with sin-scarred soul.

I charge it with imparting the efficiency of childhood, its physical, mental, and moral efficiency, with corrupting the fountains of its life even before its birth.

I charge it with the murder of childhood after its birth, with child-murder, child murder literal and actual, with infanticides cruel in form and multiple in number.

Upon this indictment and these specifications I place it upon trial in the forum of public opinion, ask a verdict of conviction, and demand a judgment of condemnation.—J. Frank Hanley.

We have a number of copies of "The Word of the Kingdom" which originally sold at $1.50. This is a work gotten out by Brother John O. Woodruff before he died. Only a few copies remain, and they will make excellent presents. While they last we will mail you one Free, if you will send us

Two New Subscribers.

JUST LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have on hand some copies of the Emphatic Diaglott. All of our readers known what it is—a word for word translation of the New Testament, by Brother Benjamin Wilson. There is a column with a line of Greek and beneath it the equivalent English words so the reader may know just the word that is used. A very valuable help in Bible study. We will give you one of these books Free if you will send us

Four New Subscribers.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1 50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1 50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

God's Purpose In Creating the Earth and Man, is the title of a little 16-page tract written by Brother D. C. Robinson, 366 West Main Street, Salem, O. The title indicates the character of the work. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen, $1 50 per 100. Brother Robison does not wish to make money so says that any of the poor will be supplied free on request. Send to him as above.

BROTHER B. Kelroy who lived until recently at Waterloo, Iowa, wishes us to say that his address is now Glad Brook, Iowa. Let those interested make note of this.

Tract Wanted.

"The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," is the title of a Tract published in 1877, by Chas. T. Russel, which I am told was sent to each subscriber of THE RESTITUTION about that time. I very much want a copy of that tract, and will thank any one who can send me a copy, or pay them whatever is right. Let me know by Postal if you have a copy, and the price, and I will then send for it. Address me at Westbrook, Maine.

E. P. WOODWARD.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the door of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 300 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. One copy, $1.10, two copies or more $1.00 each. Order from Robt. G. Huggins, 10623 Lee avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If more convenient those who wish may order through this office.

To the Churches Abroad:

It is desired that you give this matter prompt attention, and forward your action to the President J H Willey, Plymouth, Ind, or to the undersigned, or send it with your delegate to the next conference.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 00 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

AN author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 5, 1911. NUMBER 13.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Pure Water.

Strong drink has had its praises sung
And that by many an unclean tongue,
But water is the gift from heaven,
Bright water is by nature given.

Strong drink destroys man's vital powers,
And often ninth brings sorrowing hours.
It ruins hopes, destroys health
And brings on wasting [illegible]

To make it they use food destroy,
And worse compounds they oft employ,
With such vile stuff the drunkard's fed
And wretched families cry for bread.

But water pure gives sweet delight,
'Tis like a gleam of heaven so bright,
It gives man joy in all his ways
And brings him long and happy days.

Pure water is distilled in heaven.
By nature's God pure water's given,
It comes in gently in the dew,
And day by day all things renew.

Comes sparkling from among the hills
And dancing on in laughing rills
In swelling torrents onward roll
It belts the earth from pole to pole.

Let drunkards then and fools deride
When flowing down on death's dark tide.
Pure water is creation's plan
'Tis one of God's great gifts to man.

War Not Peace.

The human family appears to be divided into three distinct divisions.

1. The uncultivated savage or wild man.
2. The semi-civilized, and
3. The civilized man.

These three may be subdivided, but for our purpose the foregoing three covers the whole ground.

In their moral and mental make up fundamentally they do not much differ. The instinctive warlike disposition, as related to what they covet is if anything more intense in the civilized than in the untutored savage. The later is content with less, but his innate selfishness and cruelty and his warlike disposition has never been outgrown by education. He has been modified by culture, but his instinctive nature for evil has never been entirely eliminated or neutralized by civilization. He has by culture become refined in manners, polite, courteous, and what we call respectable in appearance. His bad qualities have been more or less concealed by civilization, but never eradicated. One thousand years ago the northern tribes of Europe were a barbarous multitude of nations given to war and pillage, reckless and ambitious for conquest and glory. Their lust for the spoils of war knew no limit. When not fighting among themselves their covetous eyes were turned to the south where wealth, luxury, and plenty abounded in the sunshine of Italy and Rome. Northern Europe at this moment though much changed in its physical appearance, and modified in its civil and domestic aspect is nevertheless as warlike and as lustful for conquest as it was a thousand years ago, showing that self-culture and discipline will not overcome the instinctive disposition of covetousness, nor restrain its exercise in the way of spoiling the weak and plundering the defenseless. It is therefore evident that what is called culture and civilization cannot so change human nature as to inaugurate an era of justice, peace and good will among the various dynastic governments of the world. The sea of nations will never cease to be boistrous and angry so long as they are under the constitution of sin, however much philanthropic minds may desire it. War, cruel, wasteful and destructive in its immediate effects, is not altogether unproductive of beneficent good in the end.

True it is the exercise of brutal force and direful calamity upon those who engage in a struggle to kill their fellowman but at the same time in its more remote influence it has been instrumental in checking the forces of evil, and also in that general diffusion of knowledge that makes for the revival and protection of civil and religious liberty.

It has been the means of turning the light of literature and learning into obscure and dark places that could not have been otherwise reached. God often employs the wicked to punish the wicked, thus weakening the power of both the conqueror and conquered. I could cite a multitude of instances where this result has been and now is visible that no well informed mind would have the courage to dispute it. Moreover both parties to the conflict have later on been greatly benefited so far as the general public was interested, or the well being of their posterity was involved.

From the days of Nimrod the "mighty hunter" to the present time war has done more than any other human agency to set in motion the wheels of progress and civilization. This is true notwithstanding great empires and kingdoms have disappeared from the earth, and their once productive lands become desolate and barren, and their cities and palaces rich in all that makes a nation famous, have been wiped out existence by the hand of war. War, however, was not the cause of their desolation, but the means, the agency employed to take them out of the way. Whatever stands in the way of the divine purpose, to obstruct or oppose whether it be one man or a host of men, will speedily meet with a fiery rebuke that will humble their pride, stain their glory, and destroy their power.

For hundreds of years war was waged between the fanatical hordes of Asia and the trinitarian image worshipers of Europe. Victory sometimes perched on the banner of the crescent and at other times upon that of the cross. It was a struggle for the mastery and for empire on the part of the Mahometans and a desperate and determined effort for life and existence on the part of the paganized Christians. The more they fought and bled the more they weakened each other. Neither party was permitted to gain ultimate success and victory.

It was simply a case of one great religious system of fraud and delusion executing the judgments of God upon another equally bad, while the exhaustion of their strength for evil was about equally balanced until neither party was any longer a menace to the world's uplift in civil and religious liberty, and the wonderful achievements to follow in the last days. The two figure heads of these bloody and despotic systems still remain, but neither the Pope nor the Sultan are able to stand alone. It is by mere sufferance that they are permitted to protest against modern and revolutionary thought in both religion and politics. Their weakness in civil or political affairs makes the world tolerant of their priestly office still revered by the deluded multitudes as the sacred gift of God.

God did not permit the world to become all Mahometan, nor on the other hand to become all Roman Catholic, yet war cruel, bloody and destructive was the agency employed to prevent a resultant state of things that would have been world wide in its direful influence to depress and stupify all mental and moral activity and progress.

In the 16th century the reformers plead for civil and religious liberty which war had made possible by curbing the power of superstition, but still it required the French revolution and the wars of Napoleon that followed to fully develop and to complete the work to which the reformers, both secular and religious devoted their lives.

Our heritage today would not be what it now is, if he who seeth the end from the beginning had not interfered to guide and control the history and destiny of nations and kingdoms greedy of the world's empire. The ways of providence are inscrutible to those only who are ignorant and faithless as to what the eternal spirit has revealed to his servants the prophets. Chosen and holy men have given us an outline history of the progress and development of political, social and ecclesiastical conditions as they gradually come to the surface all along the lines of the Gentiles. From the days of Moses to those of Jesus, the prophetic writings abound with predictions of future events as related to Israel and the surrounding kingdoms and empires of the Gentile world.

The slavery of the Jews in Egypt,—their captivity by Assyria and Chaldea was all foretold by the prophets, also their deliverance from Babylon, by Cyrus, king of Persia and their subsequent subjection to [illegible] by the Romans, [illegible] narrative of human [illegible] war that brought [illegible] from the hand of the oppressor, by violently breaking the power of unrelenting tyrants.

Cyrus was called by name [illegible] before he was born, when [illegible] word was to deliver Israel from Babylonian bondage and punish the Chaldeans for their excessive cruelty. To such the Lord to his Anointed, [illegible] whose right hand I have holden to subdue nations before him. I will give thee the treasures of darkness and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord who calleth thee by thy name am the God of Israel." Isa xlv. Here then is a prediction dating 712 B. C. but did not become current history until B. C. 538 nearly 200 years after its utterance transpired. Before it was fulfilled, but the wise among the people of God recognized its fulfillment as a sign of the times, and took advantage of the opportunity offered to escape from the seventy years captivity foretold by Jeremiah the prophet.

The conquest of Babylon by Cyrus not only delivered Israel, but it also opened the eyes of the Persian king to the fact that Israel's God was above all gods, the invisible creator "who ruleth in the kingdoms of men and giveth it to whomsoever he will." All this, however was accomplished by war and the shedding of blood, but out of it was evolved a great deal more than the Persian monarch anticipated when he entered upon his campaign against the Chaldeans. It was the God of the Jew who gave him victory, and Cyrus himself acknowledged this fact in the favor bestowed upon the captives in aiding them to return and rebuild the temple dedicated to the worship of the true God. From what we have said we come to the following conclusions.

1. That war though the legitimate outgrowth of man's evil desires and his ambition to rule over his fellowman has by an overruling providence been productive of much good that could not have been otherwise obtained.

2nd, The advocates of national peace and disarmament, now active in promoting the anti-war sentiment and the doctrine of arbitration fail to recognize the fact that righteousness, the true basis of peace is just what the nations do not want, and to arbitration which means justice and right they never will submit.

3rd, "First pure and peaceable" is the divine order, and cannot be made opperative in a humanly divised system of things already so rotten with corruption that those involved in it are fearful of the dread consequences that are sure to follow an explosion.

4th, The great powers of the world, while they do not say it in words, nevertheless look upon each other as thieves and robbers, and therefore arm themselves ostensibly to preserve peace, but in reality to protect themselves against the thief, who is on the alert to break through and steal. Their estimate of each other is well founded, and hence we conclude there is no hope for peace until God's Anointed wields the sceptre of his power.

Laborers.

In the ninth chapter of Matthew it is recorded that in answer to a criticism made by the Pharisees, Jesus said unto his disciples (verse 12 and 13), "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." "But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice; for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

The great apostle Paul in his letter to Timothy (chap i. verse 15) wrote, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

The same apostle in his letter to the Romans, where he writes regarding both Jew and Gentile, has this to say (verse 10 chapter 3) "There is none righteous, no not one." Which [illegible] for a salutation [illegible] in sin, read also the 11th and 12th verses of the same chapter. "There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God." "They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doeth good, no, not one." Is this not a horrible picture to look upon? Is this not a state of affairs that is deplorable? Yes, but the great physician has left a remedy—a medicine that can conquer the dread disease sin. Let us turn back to John and there read in the 3rd chapter, verses 14, 15, 16 and 17. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must he Son of Man be lifted up." "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved."

We now have the patient—the world in sin, the Physician—the Lord God Almighty, and the prescription—faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the righteousness of God, but there still is one element missing, some one to administer the medicine, some one to [illegible] patient the medicine left by [illegible] Physician, shall we say the Angels?

In connection let us see whether God [illegible] is amply able—doeth the work alone, or does he expect us, "Who have tasted of the free fruits of the Spirit" to aid and assist? It is a known fact that in our day, the doctors do not administer the medicine, that is left to some member of the family—or a friend or may be a nurse, trained or untrained, but some one must be intrusted with that duty. Matthew in the 37th and following verse of the 9th chapter records the words of Jesus. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." There is but one other question to ask, and that is, Are we willing to work with, and for God (the Physician) in administering his remedy (the knowledge of the love of God as exemplified in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord) to sinful (sick) man, to the honor and glory of our God? The Lord Jehovah? The nurse is nothing. The Physician is all. His remedy it is that heals and cures. Christ was willing, read his own words as recorded by John (chap vi. verses 39 to 40) "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." "And this is the Father's will which has sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." As said before, Christ was willing, are we Christian? If so, then are we "followers of Christ." "Laborers together with God" building on that foundation "which is Jesus Christ." Are we willing to show Jesus Christ to the world? Are we willing to show to sinful man the way of escape that God has provided? Are we willing—with God's grace—to follow in the footsteps of the Master, and in love, with gentleness, lead the erring ones to the foot of the cross, where they may learn about Jesus, and God's plan, through him, for the redemption of mankind? Talents have been given us. What use are we making of them? There is a day coming when we will have to give an account. Our claim is, "We have been blessed above our fellows with greater knowledge of our God and his purposes." Are we making a greater use of that greater knowledge? Or are we content to "tie it in a napkin and bury it in the ground"? These are pertinent questions, my brethren, and were suggested to the writer by listening to the evangelist, Wilbur F. Chapman, address an audience of nearly four thousand people, which he had [illegible] night [illegible] one month in this [illegible] since then [illegible] eral by Brooklyn, and [illegible] obliged [illegible] last number sat, and listened to this man I asked myself the question, "What is the Church of God in Brooklyn doing to fulfill the plan of God's salvation?" "Alexander Donaldson, what are you doing to shed forth the knowledge of the glory of God?" It seemed that the world—represented by that vast audience—was an drowning men, being cast about by the waves of the sea. Chapman—representing the popular churches—was throwing out bundles of straw as life preservers; while we, the Church of God—the real life savers, with our staunch life Boat, stood idly by and allowed those "who had a zeal, but not according to knowledge" do the work that we should perform. Brethren, are we to have a "crown of rejoicing"? Are we to receive a "crown of glory that fadeth not away"? If so, then must we be "laborers together with God." We must be willing to labor in his vineyard to bring forth fruit to his glory and honor. No, this will not be an easy task, for as Jesus was "made perfect through suffering," so will we suffer if we attempt to "let our light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven." Still "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us," and as God—the Physician—has left a prescription to cure mankind of sin, let us as faithful nurses—co laborers with him—administer it as he has prescribed, which alone can do good, remembering the Master's words (John iv. 34, 35, 36) "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? Behold, I say unto you. Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit into life eternal; that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. So brethren may we be up and doing, and may God have the glory. Amen.

ALEXANDER D. DONALDSON.

Meeting of General Conference Board.

Pursuant to the call of the President J. H. Willey, The General Conference board met at St. Louis, Mo., March 1, 1911. Members present: J. H. Willey, Peter Jeffreys and O. J. Allard; absent J. H. Morse. Meeting called to order by the President and after deliberating for some time, the following was adopted,

We the undersigned official board of the General Conference, in accordance with the action of the General Conference held at Waterloo, Iowa, Aug. 29 to 31, 1910, recommend that each individual church of the Churches of God in the different States send a delegate to represent their church for the purpose to decide whether the existing conditions within the churches of the different States demand a general organization.

We further recommend that the expense of the delegates be met in the following manner. That the total expense of the delegates to be totaled and divided by the number of delegates in attendance and each church pay a like amount. For example Kansas sends a delegate whose expenses are $10.00; Nebraska one, expense $7.00; Iowa one, expense $8.00; Minnesota one, expense $5.00; Illinois $5.00. Total $30.00, number of delegates 5, expense for each church $6.00. The church near paying the same amount as those far away. The churches not feeling able to stand the expense of a delegate we urge to unite with some near by church and they join in sending a delegate.

That the next General Conference be held at Waterloo, Iowa, on the Church of God campgrounds, because of its central location, railroad facilities and also facilities for making the delegates comfortable from an economical standpoint, therefore [illegible] most advantageous place [illegible] for all concerned. [illegible] meeting to begin [illegible] whole heart." Psa. ing Monday August 28th, [illegible] tinuing until all the business [illegible] may come before it has been transacted.

We beseech you brethren in the name of the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ that our coming together may be in the Spirit of the Master that good may be done in his name.

Signed

J. H. WILLEY, Pres.
O. J. ALLARD, Sec.
PETER JEFFREYS, Treas.

Brethren Scattered Abroad:

The call has been issued for a General Conference. The board realized how little power they possessed in making this call. After much deliberation we decided to make the call as it appears in the paper. The most difficult thing was to decide upon the place of meeting, as some who attended the meeting last year at Waterloo, declared they would never attend a meeting held at Waterloo again, because all brethren from every State were allowed to express themselves on questions that come up.

The personnel of the gathering this year will be different than last as it will be composed of a delegation of the brethren and not of leaders. Therefore the apparent desire to be dictators eliminated, and no occasion for the voice being [illegible] the delegates, and by deciding on Waterloo the board felt we were putting all factions on the same footing as last year, so there could be no occasion to accuse one another of unfairness by moving the place of meeting east or west.

The Church as it stands today is not what could be called a church, as we consist of only local organizations here and there. Therefore any trouble arising upon doctrinal or moral lines, the Church is powerless to take care of these matters decently and in order. As we understand it God knows no State lines in the body of Christ. Therefore any trouble arising effects all States alike, hence the necessity of a general organization and some means devised by which controversy can be controlled and handled in a spirit of brotherly love, and according to the directions of the apostles. There can never be an organization effected that will make us all believe alike, but there should be and I believe can be, an organization effected that we can agree to work together for the good of the cause in general, and not be forced to organize factions and split the Church all to pieces so there can be no harmonious work between States, or even towns and cities. The reason we find ourselves in such a chaotic condition today is because of no organization to control the conditions that have arisen and threaten destruction to the body as a whole. Brethren, let me exhort you to consider well your duty in this matter and let us come together and if possible form an organization, and either have representation through our State Conferences or direct representation from each local church, (which can be determined by the General Conference.)

In conclusion let me call your attention to a few Scriptures upon the importance of such a move as a General Conference:

Prov. xi. 14, "Where no counsel is the people fall; but in a multitude of counsellors there is safety."

Prov. xv. 22, "Without counsel purposes are disappointed; but in the multitude of counsellors they are established."

Prov. xx. 18, "Every purpose is established by counsel."

This appeals to me that something should be done by us as a people to right conditions that are unbecoming

The Restitution.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 5, 1911.

A Circular and an Answer.

Inasmuch as this letter has been in the hands of many of you for some weeks, allowing ample time for consideration, we respectfully ask a like consideration of our reply.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 10, 1911.

To the Brotherhood of the Church of God, Throughout the United States and Canada, Greeting:

The Ministerial Association which was organized on Nov. 29th, at Cleveland, Ohio, has been so grossly misrepresented, and the statement of its purposes so persistently misinterpreted, that we feel [illegible] to put before [illegible] in the case.

The brethren who thus organized are so well known to the brotherhood generally that they need no introduction. Their doctrines are known and need not be discussed in this circular. Suffice it to say that they still stand for the truth of the gospel of Christ. Not having departed from the faith of the gospel, as some may have been led to believe from statements recently appearing in The Restitution, the action taken by the Ministerial Association at that time, to which exception was taken by the management of The Restitution and others, was not against the doctrines advocated by The Restitution, but rather concerning the business integrity of said management in financial transactions.

For years complaints of a very grievous nature have come to the ears of our preachers and evangelists as they have worked among the brethren, regarding money sent to The Restitution office, the sender thereof not receiving the goods ordered, nor proper credit therefor. Not only so, but reports of conduct in financial transactions unbecoming one whose profession is Christian came from time to time. Letters sent to The Restitution office requesting that these matters be made right received no answers only after repeated requests had been sent, or no answers at all. This condition is generally known among the brethren; so much so, that at many points brethren refuse to have anything to do with the publication which has stood as our church paper for so many years. Said management has been requested both personally and by letter repeatedly to make these matters right, but with very unsatisfactory results.

Now that the matter has been brought to a climax, members of the Ministerial Association and others have pleaded with him to select one brother, allowing the Association to select another, which two shall select the third, these three to constitute a Board of Investigation to inquire into the charges which are made, and to determine upon the merits of the case. Up to this date not a hint of acceptance of such proposition, on his part, has been received. It is the desire of the Association to have this matter settled decently and in order, and in justice to all parties concerned. If the charges against the management of The Restitution are true as we are forced to believe from the character of the evidence before us, then that management should surely be changed; if not, then those making the charges should surely be disciplined.

We do not desire the publication of a new paper, providing the manager of The Restitution can and will vindicate himself of the above mentioned charges, and thus restore himself and his management of The Restitution to the confidence of our people; and to give this opportunity the above proposition of committee investigation was made. The conditions of this proposition not being accepted by said manager, we demand either the transfer of The Restitution, for a reasonable consideration, to the new publishing association now being formed, or upon refusal of such transfer, then we demand the publication of a new paper by said new association that will meet the requirements as the official organ of the Church of God and merit the confidence and support of our brotherhood. To this end we recommend that our brethren everywhere secure stock in the new company now being formed, that they may be in better position to dictate the business and editorial policy of said new paper.

Believing sincerely in the righteousness of this undertaking, and having full confidence in the wisdom and integrity of our people, we send forth this circular asking careful, prayerful consideration of its contents.

Fraternally submitted.

The last four signatures are those of brethren who have united with the Ministerial Association since its organization, having approved of its purpose and being desirous to co-[illegible] its [illegible]

L. [illegible]

The above Circular letter is being sent out to the brethren far and near, and though generally speaking it is far the best policy to ignore such matters, yet there comes a time when silence ceases to be golden, and it seems to us that that time has come in this case, therefore we will take some space, and touch on this matter lightly.

The Circular says that the Ministerial Association has been misrepresented, grossly so, and that its purposes have been misinterpreted. Inasmuch as these "Well known" "five brethren" make this statement, unsupported by any evidence to back up their words, we can believe it or not just as we please. They do not even say who has so grossly misrepresented them, but as all their animus is directed at the manager of The Restitution it is evident they wish to create the impression that the paper has grossly misrepresented them. On this charge we refer any fair minded brother or sister to our files since our issue of Dec. 14, when we printed their first report. We said then that they had tried us, declared us guilty, and pronounced sentence without hearing but one side, without doing what our common law courts do. We set forth that when a man is caught red-handed in a crime, and is arrested and charged with the offense, the Judge will see that he is given every possible chance for defense—even to the supplying of a lawyer to defend him. We stated that even then, and he be found guilty, and if there are any circumstances that can be brought forward in his favor, as showing why the crime was committed, he is given the benefit of every item. We made it clear that this was not done by the five "Well known" brethren, even with a lawyer in their midst. Such a trial as we were subject to at their hands was a contemptible farce, and no fair-minded man of the world would think of doing such a thing, let alone five ministers who were imbued with such a lot of love for God and brethren as they profess.

Was this a "gross misrepresentation?" We declare before you all that it is a fair statement of what they did do, and challenge them to show misrepresentation in what we wrote.

In our issue of Jan. 4, we brought forward evidence to prove the above still farther. To make it plain, Brother L. E. Conner wrote to a brother minister whom he knew to be a friend of ours, and told him the reason why he was not invited to the meeting. The reason given was because they wished to "discuss Underwood" without restraint, and it would be embarrassing to say what they wanted to say with him present. Hence he was not invited to this council. Brother Conner hurried this letter of apology to this brother before the report of their meeting was out, so that he would be prepared for it in advance, and so smoothed over.

Will Brother Conner deny this? Hardly!

Again Brother S. J. Lindsay wrote in a letter that the reason some ministers were not invited was because they wished to get together the "conservative element" of our ministers, and therefore did not invite "Huggins, Robison and Adams." In our issue of Jan. 4, we presented cases of those who we learned were invited, and showed plainly that some who held most "radical" views on disputed points were invited, thus showing that Brother Lindsay's statement that only the "conservative element" was sought was not borne out by the evidence, to say the least.

Will Brother Lindsay deny this? Hardly! The letter can be produced. We stated that refusing or neglecting to invite three such "Well [illegible]own" brethren as Bros. Huggins, [illegible]obison and Adams, especially when Brother Huggins was within a short distance of the place of meeting, only a few minutes journey, and Brother Robison in the same state, was an insult to these brethren. We maintain that yet, and challenge the Ministerial Association to show any misrepresentation about it. The fact was they did not want any one there who would act to thwart their scheme. Hence they did not ask any of our open and avowed friends to attend, and any claim that they, or any of them were or are friendly, needs a large sized grain of salt to make it "go down." They have at least a queer way of showing friendship and brotherly love.

Talk about brotherly love and friendship! Allow me to state that when I was a young man, I was induced to join the K. of P. Lodge. Ever since I severed my connection with that order. [illegible] have been a student of the school of Christ for years, but when it comes to talk of brotherly love the five of them have not yet learned as much of the true meaning of brotherly love as two nights would give them in the K. P. Lodge. Two evenings with the lessons of this order, well learned, would give them a clearer insight into the true significance of the term "brotherly love" than they have yet grasped by far.

The above Circular states further that the doctrine of these five "Well known" brethren "are known and need not be discussed in this Circular." Is that so? Well, for fear all the brethren may not know of your "doctrine" quite well enough, we may be pardoned if we just touch up one or two of the five, and see if the brotherhood generally have fully grasped your "doctrines." Nothing like a near acquaintance sometimes.

Let us examine the President, Brother S. J. Lindsay, first. As I write I have before me a card stating what the Illinois State Conference believes and teaches. The name of S. J. Lindsay is at the bottom of the card, and across the top is written in his own hand the words "My Creed." This Card sets forth belief in the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth when Christ comes; in the [illegible]talization and joint heirship of [illegible]nts with Jesus; [illegible] to Palestine; literal resurrection of the dead; immortalization of the righteous, and destruction of the wicked; eternal life only in Christ at his coming; entrance into Christ only by belief, repentance and baptism; holy life as essential to salvation. Brother Lindsay states this to be "my creed"—in other words "my belief."

So far so good. To you who keep files of The Restitution please refer to our issue of Jan. 4, and there you will see what was said of certain "conservative" brethren. We there set forth that these "conservatives" declare we have no right to interfere with what any brother's conscience prompts him to believe. They say "a man's conscience is supreme."

Brethren, this is a pen photograph of Brother S. J. Lindsay, and he will not deny it, for he knows I have the papers to so prove, and he has stated such in the presence of many. If this is so it nullifies every item in his "Creed." Not one will stand, for with this as a principle of action—or inaction—any sort of an ism must be tolerated and allowed full swing in the body of Christ, and nothing can be done to eliminate it. A man who "conscientiously" believes in the immortality of the soul, heaven at death, consciousness in the death state, future home in heaven, world-burning, Eddyism, Russellism, [illegible]ism, Universalism, Justification by the law, Josephism, even purgatory and the infallibility of the Pope, would have a perfect right to claim membership with the Church of God, and the Church would have no power to say him nay. A position of this sort simply stultifies all his preaching and Bible School work, and renders his "creed" of no value whatever.

Brethren, to convince you that this is not overdrawn, I need only refer you to his "Well known" attitude toward some of the issues named above. He has related at my home cases of where he met ministers of Orthodox churches, and "exchanged views" in a friendly, brotherly way, as if it were merely a "difference of opinion," and there was nothing vital about it. We would not be understood as advocating that it is wrong to be friendly with members of other Churches, not at all. We want to make clear that it is our duty to make them understand that they are not in accord with God's Word. Hence it is more than an "exchange of views"—it is a vital principle that is at stake. Such persons are wrong, are in error, and should be made to understand in plain terms, yet kindly, that they are on unsafe ground, and if they want a hope of salvation, must change their ways. If Brother Lindsay's memory is in working order he will know to what we allude.

Brethren, Jesus Christ and his apostles did not curry favor with error, but denounced it. They made no bid for popularity.

For a number of years the Church of God in Cleveland, Ohio, had for a pastor, Brother M. Joblin. His right hand man, and one of the main supporters, was Brother R. McLauchlan. After working in harmony for some years, there came some trouble that was of a personal nature, and the faction headed by Brother McL. went off. The trouble was not a doctrinal one. The merits of the case I have nothing to do with. For a time those who split off from the Church met for worship in rooms, and then their organization, with Brother McL. as the acknowledged leader. After a time he died, but the organization was in a measure kept alive.

Meanwhile the Church with Brother Joblin at its head, went steadily on, and became a strong factor in the organization of the Ohio State Conference—this other organization not being affiliated in any way with any state or district conference; simply existing alone and by itself.

After a time Brother Joblin died, and the original Church in due course called Brother R. G. Huggins, who was at the time laboring with the Churches of Illinois. Brother H. was soon settled in the work, having been approved. He was a young man of vigor, good appearance, fluent in his speech, sound in the faith. In all ways well calculated to build up the body, and as he was not a partner in any quarrel, naturally as time went on, the differences being to a large extent buried in the grave, union of nearly all the brethren in Cleveland could have been effected. This would have resulted in making an exceedingly strong and even aggressive body of earnest workers, whose influence would have been for good, not only in the City of Cleveland, but in the State of Ohio, and spreading out, they would have been a source of strength to every other state in the Union. Had this come about who can tell what a great work would have been wrought for God and his cause! Unity, harmony, brotherly love, forbearance, forgiveness, charity and kindness would have ruled, and God and his Son, Jesus the Christ, would have been honored.

Brethren, stop—think! "The saddest words of tongue or pen" are these "It might have been."

It is stated in a resolution passed by the Ministerial Association that I have "greatly hindered the cause of truth, and impaired ministerial and evangelistic effort." Now, inasmuch as the cause of truth is best served by promoting among the membership the spirit of forbearance and brotherly love, and after that the dissemination of gospel truth, I wish to call your attention to what "hindered" the unity and harmony of the Church in the City of Cleveland, and your judgment, brethren, is all I want.

The moving spirit in this split off faction in Cleveland Church saw the tendency, and being possessed of the "sinews of war," began to search for weapons—tools—to work with. Inquiry was made for "a preacher" who would be able to take up and make an aggressive fight to counteract the very natural result that was coming, unless it could be checked. After some little time the selection was made and Brother L. E. Conner, once of Indiana, and at that time of Illinois, was chosen and accepted the position.

Now the facts are that Brother Conner knew of the divided condition existing in Cleveland before he was called. Even if he did not know the merits of the case, he knew it was there. Now get this firmly in mind, brethren. If Brother Conner had uppermost in his mind the unity, and harmony, and brotherly love of the brotherhood in general, and in Cleveland in particular, what, may I ask, should he have done? Had he been prompted solely by a spirit of Christian love among brethren, and for the "good of the cause," what would have been his course of action? Had these motives been the paramount ones in his mind, he would have said to those who "gave him a call," "What is the trouble in Cleveland? Brother Joblin, a good scholar and speaker, a fine man in every way, is in your city already. Why don't you go to meeting where he preaches?" On then being told that there had been a rupture, and the factions could not unite, if he still had in mind Brotherly Love and Christian Unity, what, as an honest conscientious Christian man, what would he have done? Not one of you, brethren, but will agree with me that his reply should have been "I cannot yield myself to such a cause, that will only tend to further disrupt and destroy." He would have said "I cannot act as a tool in your hands to further rend apart God's people." He would have said "This condition is all wrong, and the motive that causes you to call me is wrong, and I cannot give my influence to thus 'hinder' the unity and harmony of the Church of God."

But stay! What did Brother Conner do? He accepted the call, and entered into the work laid out for him with all his energy and push. He sold his services to this disrupting and separating element for a sum of Money! He [illegible] left the Church of God as a minister, entered the law, and drifted to the heart of Danville, Illinois, that hotbed of rotten politics known as "Cannonism," which is a stench in the nostrils of all decency. He had become a part of the disreputable political office-seeking crew of that district. Not succeeding in his schemes—getting into trouble that forced him out—he returned without apology to the Church of God. This position at Cleveland is soon offered, and as it "looks good to him," he accepts. With all his force and vigor, he throws himself into the work of driving further the wedge that should split the Cleveland Church wider, and as the influence of the two factions might clash in other points, such as at the Waterloo meeting last summer, rend the larger general body asunder.

Brothers and Sisters of the Church of God, your own judgment is all I ask as to who has been a hindrance to the cause of truth, and impaired ministerial and evangelistic effort. If I have been guilty of any course that takes rank with this one action in the career of Brother L. E. Conner, then name it, and inflict the punishment, for as I stand in the presence of God in a typical way, I would rather make amends now, and get forgiveness for my damnable sin, than to carry it to the day when I shall actually be summoned to his [illegible]

Again along this line. During the life of Brother McLauchlan he gave many talks or sermons, often at the table of the Lord. He was a man of very decided and definite ideas. He was a Scotchman, pure and simple. Before he died he compiled and published a book of 500 pages of his writings. A perusal of this work for only a few pages will convince the reader that Brother McL. was most rigid and strict in his belief and actions. Telling it plainly so that all may understand, if there ever was a man who was "set in his way" it was Brother McLauchlan.

Some years ago there was held in Plymouth, Indiana, a Conference of the Churches of the State. The ordinary Conference business ended Saturday, and the meeting, as far as the Conference was concerned, closed with Sunday evening preaching. Word was passed for the brethren to remain over for a Monday meeting. Very unusual, but most of them remained. This was done at the request of Bro. L. E. Conner. Of course the meeting was to be "informal." It was not a part of the "regular Conference work" hence the Conference Secretary need not take down the proceedings, and really the business was entered into without the formality of even choosing some one to act as special secretary. No need of that—all very "informal" you see. Notice, please, you brethren. A matter important enough to have all stay over another day, yet not necessary to be recorded!! See any sharp "lawyer" practice in that?

Well some who were at that meeting are dead now, but all are not, and one is alive yet who had enough wit about him to use a pencil and paper. The substance of the business before this called meeting was to let all the brethren know there were those who held to very narrow views, some to not such very narrow views, some to rather liberal views, and some to extremely liberal views—even to the extent of stating that every man, woman and child that had ever lived, did then live, or ever should live, will be saved, and have everlasting life in the kingdom of God. That only in this way can full restitution be accomplished. Nothing short of this was complete restitution. Anything less than this was belittling to Christ and his redemptive scheme, and could not fill the measure of God's love and will, in that it is his will that all be saved.

Brother L. E. Conner stated this as his belief, and declared he "was honest in his opinion." However, he "held it to himself," and "never had preached it." Through the mouth of Sister S. R. Wince he was corrected by "the blind girl" who declared he had so preached at old Antioch, and he had to admit "that once."

It is not our purpose here to enter into the question of Universal Salvation, as to its merits or demerits; only to state that the outcome of the matter was that later on the Indiana Conference declared itself contrary to that theory, and resolved that its Evangelistic Board should not pay out Conference money to those who went about preaching and arguing in favor of universal salvation, and that action of the Indiana Conference has never been rescinded either.

Now, a short time since I loaned the book that was [illegible] by Brother McL[illegible] a friend to a brother [illegible] this city, and he read much of it. He is well acquainted with Brother Conner, but never met Brother McL., and never saw any of his writings until this book came to his hands. After he had read part of it, I asked him, in consideration of his knowledge of Brother Conner's "private" belief, if he thought Bro. McL. would take the Communion with Brother C. or recognize him as a Brother in the Church? His answer came without a moment's hesitation, "No, he would not."

Brethren, the point I want to get before you is, that one of the main ones in getting Brother C. to go to Cleveland, and one of the main supporters—if not the sole supporter—of the work he is now engaged in, is doing so with money that was left by Brother McL. Think of it!! Living in a large measure off money left by a man who would not have countenanced you in his home, let alone paying you for preaching! It will not do to say "I don't preach my private views." "I hold them to myself, alone." Were Brother McL. alive he would soon know your "private" views, and there would be no backing down by him. Any one who ever knew him will bear witness to this—even his enemies—and one need only read a little way in his book to be sure of the truth of these words.

Do you think a man who holds such "private" views and will do all this, is the man whom you want to have dictate the policy of The Restitution? I haven't thought so, and he is angry because he was not listened to. Do you want the paper turned over to an Association that will be dominated by a man who has in this manner rent asunder the Church of God, and now cries "stop thief" thinking to divert attention to some one else?

It is a shame, and painful to have to write these things, but I have remained silent until silence is no longer golden, and I am compelled to lay the case before you for your judgment. It is not for myself. A. R. Underwood may be laid "on the shelf" or laid in the grave. That makes little difference. The question is the maintaining of the integrity of the Church of God. That is the only question that matters really.

When Brother Conner reached his home last summer, after being at the General Conference at Waterloo, Ia., one of his first acts was to telephone to a person living in Cleveland, and during the course of the conversation he deplored the failure of the meeting, in that the main object—"to get The Restitution away from Underwood"—was not touched on. This shows that he had this in mind when he went to that meeting, and is the real motive in the forming of this Ministerial Association. The Restitution under its present management has maintained the same ground as all its past managing Editors have from Benjamin and Thomas Wilson, H. B. Pierce, H. V. Reed, S. A. Chaplin, and till the present management assumed control. That position ever was and is that of opposition to the theory of Universal salvation, Justification by the law (Sabbath keeping), human paternity of Jesus (Josephitism), and with that the integrity of God's Word—the Bible. The prime movers in this Association will declare to you that they do not hold these views, but they will not denounce those who do hold them, but wish them God speed in their efforts to spread such views.

At old Antioch Conference last June where the subject of whether Indiana should be represented at the General Conference, and a question was raised concerning the good to be accomplished; Brother S. J. Lindsay urged sending a representation good and strong from Indiana, backing up his plea by stating that he knew that the brethren (in Iowa especially) were being disrupted over the Josephite and Sabbath questions, and that they wanted "us Eastern fellows" to come and help them give the disturbers "a swat" that would send them where they belonged. Well, some "Eastern fellows" were there, and were ready to hand out the "swat," but no Brother Lindsay was there, and up to date no body has heard of any "swat" that he has administered, and when Bro. Conner came to that meeting all his force was used to ward off any "swat" aimed at them.

Brethren, the position taken by the leaders in this Ministerial Association, logically argued, can bring but one conclusion—"it makes no difference what you believe so long as you are sincere." I am here to declare to you all—preachers, hearers, men and even the women—hear O Church of the Living God! It does make all the difference what you believe. God's promises, salvation, eternal life, entrance into his kingdom, heirship with Jesus Christ, always and ever are conditioned on three things—belief, obedience, right life. To virtually say that any old belief may be held, carries with it as a natural sequence that you can obey or not as you please, it will make no difference. All you have left is your life—the way you are living—and that leaves too much to God. He has never promised to save you for that alone.

It will probably be said that this is overdrawn—that these brethren of the Ministerial Association do not take such a position. I am only now pointing you to the leaders in that movement, and telling how they act toward those who hold these errors. They do not denounce them, nor the errors they teach, but allow them to believe and teach any thing they please, and all the "discipline" intimated in their Constitution is for the ones who do denounce these errors—those who are radically opposed to mutilating the Bible to bolster up Josephiteism, etc.

Again I ask, Does the Church of God want THE RESTITUTION turned over to these men, or to an Association that will be dominated by such principles, or rather lack of principles? From the hundreds of letters received since this matter came up we do not think the Church as a body wishes this done, and until we have a louder "demand," coming from the Church of God when it can become organized into some definite shape, we see no reason for yielding to the great "Ministerial Association."

The Circular we are reviewing declares concerning unsavory financial transactions of the manager of THE RESTITUTION. To this we reply—Mat. xviii. 15 17 gives the way Jesus wants matters between brethren settled. Men may think they can devise a better way, but Christians—Christ's own brethren—his peculiar people—those who honor his Word, and are guided by it, are bound to put aside All human ways of settling difficulties, and do what he says. His Word should be supreme in the heart of every believer in him. If any individual member, or any company gathered as a Church, has gone, or goes contrary to the plan laid down by Jesus, they do so at their peril. Mark this well. You will answer to God in the judgment day for such action.

Now what are the facts? Let us see. A few individuals gathered together, and from hearsay only, and without asking for testimony on the other side, passed condemnatory resolutions. A brother who doubtless means [illegible] thinks it would be a good way to appoint three men to hear charges and their rebuttal evidence, and decide the issues. This brother does not claim that he is engaged as a "one or two more," that is asked to hear a difference between two who are not agreed. Hence, Scripturally he is out of order—is suggesting a human way in opposition to Jesus' way.

Reference is made by some to certain "charges" made against me. Now according to Jesus' way those charges should be made to me direct by the one whom I have trespassed against. This is not done. I therefore advertised in the paper repeatedly asking any one who had a grievance, and had not been fairly treated, to make the matter known to me privately, and it would be taken up and settled. Until this was done—then, and not till then, would Jesus' rule allow the bringing in of "one or two more" to decide between us; nor would Jesus' rule allow any Church action until both of these had failed.

Now, we have asked, and do still ask, any one with any grievance he or she has against us, to comply with this rule of Jesus Christ.

Even as late as our issue of Feb. 22, we endeavored to give a hint, so that the proper course might be taken by any one who had even had a grievance that had been settled, and with which they had become dissatisfied later. Now to all this general accusation we can make no reply. It is impossible. Any court would reject such a case, and demand specifications. We repeat, that Jesus has given to us, as above, the proper course of action. This Circular creates a false impression where it states about the Ministerial Association and others having "pleaded with him (meaning myself) to select one brother, allowing the Association to select another, which two shall select the third, these three to constitute a Board of Investigation to inquire into the charges made." Probably this "pleading" was done just like their other work. It was carefully planned that this Circular letter should be sent all over the wide country, even a poor deluded tool in their hands is used to flood the Plymouth Church with them; yet when I, the most interested person in all the world, wanted one to see what was "demanded" of me, I had to send to their headquarters at Cleveland and BUY a copy. This "pleading" was probably done the same way—done to other people, leaving me out. But the suggestion of such a plan by a set of such "well known" brethren is the astonishing thing.

Brethren, I simply appeal to your judgment. Is such a man-made plan the proper one? Have these "Well known" ones gone about this in a Scriptural way? Is this plan a better one than the one Jesus gave? If it is the desire of that wonderful Ministerial Association to have all "settled decently and in order," and "in justice to all parties concerned" why don't they instruct those who have a grievance to proceed in a Scriptural manner, just as Jesus said to do, and just as we have repeatedly asked them to do?

In our issue of Jan. 4, we said as follows:

"We wish here to say that any brother or Sister who does not think he has been properly credited on his account, is asked to kindly write us at the office about it, and we think he can be satisfied and the matter set right according to his mind. We repeat what we have often said, We are willing and anxious and glad to correct any error we make, and presume our brethren are as willing to acknowledge an error on their part.

We understand the Bible to teach that if you have any grievance at us it is your duty first to tell us, and see if we cannot between us straighten up any difference. When that is done, and we fail to adjust the difficulty you have a right to come to us with a third party—but not until we have failed have you any such right. Inasmuch as we have no unadjusted complaint at this office, that has been so presented, we have the right to assume that none such exists. Therefore, we resent the interference of any third party—even though he be a minister—in our business, until we have had opportunity with complaining individuals to adjust any difference."

This was our position then, and is now, and this Ministerial Association has had this fair and Scriptural way we proposed to meet any complaints for three months, and have failed to come up with a single aggrieved brother or sister. We go further even than this, as the matter develops more fully, and say If any one has had a grievance, and has settled it, and is now dissatisfied with the settlement made, we stand ready and willing to re-open the case in the Scriptural way, and re-settle it to his or her satisfaction.

Brethren, no threats, "demands," or "any other creature" will swerve us from this straightforward Scriptural plan of settling this or any other matter. In all kindness to each member of the Ministerial Association, those we have met in former years, and those we have never had the opportunity of seeing even, I say to you that you have treated me unfairly, unkindly, harshly. As men you would have a right to so if you so pleased. But you have gone much farther. You have treated me unscripturally. You have not acted with me as fairly as would men of the world, let alone brethren in the same church. You will excuse rather plain talk. I am a plain man, and despise subterfuge. This is my personal feeling—my "opinion" if you please, regarding your treatment of me, and with this feeling I am ready to stand before the bar of God. My prayer for you is that you may, when called, have your garments unspotted and clean, and though I am no preacher, as you each claim to be, let me exhort you that the time to "clean house," and set it in order, is now, in this life—the next will be too late.

On November 16, 1874, there was a called meeting at Antioch Church, in Marshall County, Indiana, and "The Christian Publishing Association" organized with R S. Dwiggins, William Railsback, S. A. Chaplin, Cyrus Taber and Thomas McDonald as a Board of Directors. This Board later made R. S. Dwiggins Pres., Thomas McDonald Vice Pres., S. A. Chaplin Treas., and Daniel McDonald Sec. Subsequently this Board contracted with a firm of printers to print THE RESTITUTION (which had been bought of Wilson, Pierce & Co. of Chicago) the contract price of which was $2.644 per year, and a further contract was made with H. V. Reed to edit the paper for a salary of $1 000 a year.

The next year the editorial salary and work was divided, H. V Reed being given $700 and S. A. Chaplin the $300. At the close of the year 1876 the Association was in debt $948 11, and Stock was voted to H. V. Reed and S. A. Chaplin that reduced this debt to $740.11. S A. Chaplin was then made sole Editor, and at the close of 1877 he was given more stock to the amount of $500. At the beginning of 1880 the salary of S. A. Chaplin as Editor was fixed at $200 a year, and A. R. Underwood was engaged as Business Agent at $5.75 per week, for which he kept the books and correspondence, mailed the papers and tracts, corrected mail list type, supplied mailing and wrapping paper, etc. and supplied office room, fuel and light.

The books show that including the year 1880 the entire cost of issuing the paper in any year had not fallen below $3,200. The size of the paper then being 22x32, the same as a six column paper of the ordinary width of column. There was dissatisfaction with Mr. Reed who had the printing contract, and A. R. Underwood made a proposition to procure an outfit of material, and print the paper at a reduced price and also to enlarge it to 24x36, or the usual size of a seven column paper of ordinary news width, or as it is now with six columns to the measure. At no time did A. R. Underwood's work of all kinds—printing or Business Agent exceed $2,300 a year.

This went on and each year the Association had bids from other parties but found A. R. Underwood's bid the best. At the end of 1886 the society was in debt to the Editor $180, and to the printer $696 98, and capital exhausted and no means of paying.

At the beginning of 1887 A. R. Underwood proposed to relieve the Association by offering to print the paper for the receipts, less $20, per month for Editor, and cancel the debt of $696.98 due. This was accepted, and the following year the Editor's salary was increased to $26 75 per month, and he was relieved of all office work, simply passing on manuscripts and writing In September 1889 S. A. Chaplin resigned as Editor, and that work was left to A. R. Underwood, with J. L. Wince as adviser. At the beginning of 1890, A. R. Underwood was continued as Office Editor, and the Board of Directors constituted an Editorial Staff. At this time the subscription price of the paper was reduced from $2 00 to $1.50, but no change was made in contract to do the printing.

At the Stockholders meeting of 1896 resolutions were unanimously passed expressing hearty satisfaction with the management. This condition prevailed and contract was renewed up to including 1898, after which the representation of stock being poor for a number of years, calls were discontinued, and that is the situation at this time.

At the last meeting there was a possible representation of 366 shares of stock, of which A. R. Underwood held 195, and since then other shares have been transferred to him till now he has 244.

At the time A. R Underwood started to print the paper he was not a stockholder, and had no intention of ever being one—simply a young man seeking a job of work to do to make his living. What induced him to become a stockholder?

At certain times blocks of stock had been issued to H. V. Reed and to S. A. Chaplin, and this stock together with a lot bought by different ones, they deeming it wise to consolidate in the hands of one, was held by a brother here. He arranged to leave this community, so wished to sell. Just at this very opportune time, one O. M. Myers whom most of you remember as possessing some peculiar ideas, made a proposition to take charge of the paper—wanted the Association to give it to him, in fact. They did not see fit to do so, so Myers went after some stock, with the evident intention of getting control in that way. Learning of the stock held by the brother here he made an offer for it. This brother being a friend of mine, came to me. He wanted to sell. It mattered not to him so he got his money, but knowing I had my all invested, and that it would put me out of business, he came to me. A slight advance over the Myers bid gave me the stock, and then and there A. R. Underwood prevented forever THE RESTITUTION from being made a medium for the dissemination of the theories that O. M. Myers held.

Brethren of the Church of God, listen while in all modesty and humbleness I say to you, that ever since then I have had an "opinion" that I had done a good thing, that I had served the Church, that I had served God. I have felt certain all these years that God would reward me as I deserved for that and every other service for him. Query: Does the Church of God owe me any thanks for keeping THE RESTITUTION out of the hands of O M. Myers?

Again: There was a brother in Rensselaer Indiana, who was a creditor of the Christian Publishing Association to a considerable extent, having loaned money when it was being established, long before I was a stockholder. After I had acquired a controlling interest, by being forced to take stock I did not desire, and being owner of a little printing office wherein my all was invested, the President of the Board came to me with claims of the brother above mentioned that was still unsettled. He showed to me that to call the stockholders together to consider the claim would be but to court disaster, as he was sure they would not stand an assessment, and if I voted an assessment on them by virtue of my holdings of the stock, that it would burst the whole thing into shreds, and besides I would in the end have the large part of it to pay, etc., and from the picture drawn by him as a lawyer knowing all the facts, I was induced to quietly "give up" a considerable sum of money, and save [illegible] by about [illegible].

In telling you of these matters because some have thought that I rather wanted to dominate THE RESTITUTION. That I sought to "squeeze" others out, etc. Now this never was a fact. In theory I have always favored a strong, well-founded organization, with power to control and also discipline. With power to say to even the preacher what he shall go out and preach, if he claims to adhere to that organization. I have ever argued that the Church of God should "stand for something," and not be a conglomerate mass, whose unit members could take up with every ism that took their fancy, and preach it at will. I have ever argued that a Church paper should not be a slop bucket—a swill barrel—into the which could be dumped refuse from every table. So I have endeavored to hold this paper above such use and have been accused of "popery" etc.

Get this fully in mind, brethren. The Christian Publishing Association, well organized and backed, was a losing venture. In a very few years its capital was exhausted, it had little or no material property that would raise money, and each year it was getting more and more behind. When I took the contract to print the paper, I got the contract because I bid lower than others; and I held the contract by keeping below others, notwithstanding that the size of the paper was increased. Still the Association was behind, and to save it from complete failure, I undertook to print it for the receipts, reduced the yearly subscription price, and cancelled the old back debt.

Let me say just here, that there is no objection in this quarter to this new Association starting a new paper. You will have some valuable knowledge that you can obtain in no other way. Each one who is asked to "take stock" in it knows full well what Brother Lindsay must have as a salary as Preacher or Editor, as he has said to you himself how much he must have if he continued in the evangelistic work. Brother Conner must be supported in at least as good style as now, and you know what that means. No matter which one, or who it is, does the work, he must be supported in the same good style as now. I say to the new Association, start your paper, get all to "take stock" that you can—the more the better. To you who "take stock" let me recommend that you bid a last fond farewell to your money as you put it in, for as a means of separating you forever from it, I can heartily and cheerfully commend the starting of another paper. It sure will do it. Besides I have two letters here at the office in which the writers, (from different sections of the country) speaking of Bro. Lindsay specially denominate him as "money-mad."

Now should you be told that A. R. Underwood was in debt, you can see what some of the things are that put him there. Cancelling a debt of good earned money, paying for stock he never wanted, being forced to pay an after claim. These coupled with an unfortunate business partnership in which whiskey and gambling tell the story, together with loss of my office by fire, and a hymn book deal where I was left to "hold the sack" for several hundreds of dollars.

These did get him involved. When the cramp of it was on tight a lawyer advised a course that would legally free me from all claims, and leave me with a fair start for me, here or elsewhere. This course, while legally freeing me, would surely have caused a good measure of loss to others. By industry, economy, hard work, with time given me, I could struggle on, and in due course give creditors their just due. The lawyer was disgusted, and called me foolish.

Brethren, there was no moment of hesitation, rosy as the lawyer's story was. I was some day to stand before the bar of God. My loved ones were sleeping in the grave. Could I meet them after beating my creditors by bankruptcy proceedings?

I have met as far as possible my obligations. I am still willing to meet the rest. I have NOT tried by sharp dealings to defraud any man or woman, and the man who says I have will answer to God for the false statement.

You, Brethren, into whose hands have been placed this circular by this Ministerial Association, are simply asked to kindly read what I have here written, and I leave with you to say if you want THE RESTITUTION turned over to them, or leave it as it is until such time as a good strong organization of "The Church of God" is consummated, that can handle the publication and other work of the body.

Brother and Sister, all who have been patient enough to read through this rambling sketch, I thank you. It has been no pleasure to write it, and I do not expect any one to find pleasure in reading it. To me it is the most solemn and sacred work I ever done. If I have erred in judgment in any expression, God knows it is not with intention. I have been assailed, maligned, and my name traduced, carrying with me the ones I love best, who well know my life has been one of sacrifice for God and my fellows. For the sake then, of those who are near and dear to me, I also thank you for reading these columns.

May God guide and keep us each to his kingdom, is my prayer.

A. R. UNDERWOOD.

BROTHER W. H. Wilson writes that he expects to reach home about April 10, and will be ready to attend any calls after that.

WE apologize to our readers for using so much space in a personal matter. Our only reason is that we were driven to it, and there was no other course left us.

SINCE our last issue the plague condition is about the same; China has yielded to Russia's demands; Mexico is settling down a little, and there is some prospect of the conflict ending. There was another fire horror in New York City wherein about 150 women and girls lost their lives.

ONE day last week this office received a pleasant call from Sister Georgia Osborne who was back on a visit to her old home in Marshall Co. Eight years ago they moved to California, and are much pleased with their new home, to which they have now gone. Sister Osborne is still earnest in the cause. May the Father's blessing be with her household.

WORD reaches us through Sister Leila E. Whitehead that Brother Jas. W. Wilson is growing weaker very rapidly, and the end is thought to be near. Last Friday he was able to speak a little, and said to give his love to the Church. Of course he had in mind the Chicago congregation especially, but can be taken by all, as he always had a high regard for the Church in general. He expressed himself as having no fear of death, as it was but a resting and a waiting for the coming of his Lord.

BROTHER J. H. Willey and wife have gone to Southern California, where they expect to remain for a number of months.

THE following from Sister Wince, under date of March 26, is the latest news we have from Sister Chaplin:

"Dear Readers of The Restitution:

We have thought for some time that mother—Mrs. Sarah Chaplin-Wicklizer—was going to get well, but for several days she has not been improving, and we feel quite fearful as to the final result. We can only wait and trust.

S. ROXANA WINCE."

Joash, the Boy King, Crowned in Judah. 2 Kings xi. 1 20.

Golden Text.—"Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart." Psa. cxix. 2.

The circumstances leading up to [illegible] Jehoshaphat, named Jehoram, had married Athaliah, who was a daughter of the wicked queen Jezebel, wife of Ahab, of the Northern kingdom. He reigned for eight years, and being under the influence of his wife, he went after many of the wicked practices of the Northern kingdom. When he died his son Ahaziah was made king, but he was young and his mother Athaliah kept control in a measure. He was away from home in the Northern kingdom, when the revolt of Jehu took place, and was killed, after having reigned but one year. As all the children of Ahaziah were young, and it was likely that if one were put on the throne some one else would dictate the policy of government, Athaliah being unwilling to give up her place as queen, attempted to kill all the royal children, and succeeded in all except the little boy Joash whom the priest's wife hid, and then took him to a temple chamber where he was hid till he was seven years old, and the priest arranged for his being crowned and made the king, as described in our lesson, and the death of Athaliah. At that time it would seem that the first lady of the land was not the wife of the king, but his mother, and if a son of Ahaziah were to be made king, his mother, not Athaliah would be the real head This Athaliah was such a vile and brutal woman that she could have her own grandchildren put to death in order to retain her power. She kept her position for six years, which shows the low condition of the kingdom of Judah, and how they were under the spell of the idolatrous practices that prevailed in the kingdom of Israel.

After the death of Athaliah, by aid of the priest a covenant was again made between God and the people whom Joash was to rule over, and steps were taken to destroy the idols and re establish the true worship of God once more. The people rejoiced, and a period of quiet prevailed.

In this lesson we have wrong as it was vested in this wicked woman, dethroned. On the other hand, the right as shown by the rightful heir being made king, was enthroned. Every time a person makes a decision for the right, this is repeated in their lives. We should seek to find the hidden good, cut short the reign of evil, and set definitely in place the right. This takes in and makes up our daily life. At times the evil is stronger than the good. The evil looks more attractive than the right, and it is a hard task to bring the mind to put aside the wrong and take up the right. But this must be done. We must rally to our standard the forces for good, as did Jehoiada the good priest, aided by his wife, and crown the right, and dethrone wrong.

This lesson teaches us to take a decided stand. To drift along, as did the nation of Judah for this six years, is a disgrace. We should avoid such a course, and the only way it can be done is to stand strongly for truth and right. In this we can ask and obtain God's blessing. Will you look for every possible chance the coming week to let this lesson guide your life?

NOTICE.

During the first part of December copies of the book "Does it pay to become a Christian," by James W. Wilson, were sent to every one who sent money to me. Two packages of books have been returned because no such persons lived at those towns. Will any and every one who sent money to me, and who has not received books ordered, notify me at 5439 Ontario St. Austin Sta. Chicago, Ill.

of the people of God. I exhort every church far and near to take this matter under advisement at the earliest possible moment and select a delegate or join with the churches near you, and send a representation to Waterloo, to see if we cannot get at things decently and in order and not compel brethren to bring upon themselves censure for their seeming activity in righting what they believe to be wrong by taking matters in their own hands. Its the duty of the brethren to do this, not leaders. We are your servants (or should be,) not masters. The duty is yours to see these conditions are righted, not ours, its our duty to carry out your will not our own, in these matters. We have seen in the past what formation of leaders has done. It has burned Godly men at the stake, it has imprisoned them, it has excommunicated them because of selfishness. Let's try and get down to the Spirit of Christ in this matter, and if possible [illegible] as near as possible to the 15th Acts 15th chapter for our guide. I beseech you to awake to the necessity of this move, and do your duty at once. Any information wanted regarding the matter will be cheerfully furnished by addressing me at Fort Dodge, Iowa.

$100,000,000 In Hand For a Jewish Colony.

Details of the contemplated establishment in Mesopotamia of the largest Jewish Colony the world ever has seen, were made in this city, (New York,) recently.

Announcement was made of the confirmation in support of the International Jewish Organizations which have never acted together before. That the new movement has financial resources in excess of $100,000 000 and that the country which it is proposed to turn into a Jewish Colony will support a population of ten millions, are indications of the extent of the enterprise. Men in this city who are interested in the latest movement toward the establishment of a Jewish Colony said credit for having united the various forces in support of this elaborate plan should be given to Jacob H. Schiff and I. Zan Zangwell. The latter is president of the Jewish Territorial Organization, now in session in London, before which body he has laid an official proposal by the Turkish Government, looking to the turning over to the Jews of all of Mesopotamia. Mr. Schiff has expressed his confidence in the plan to found a Colony of Jews which is to have home rulers, and he is depended on by friends of the Mesopotamia project to further cement a spirit of co-operation between the Jewish Territorial Organization, The Jewish Colonization Association, The Jewish German Relief Society, The French Alliance of Jews, and the Zionist Movement, with which co-operation the settlement of Mesopotamia is looked upon as feasible. Private advice from London received in this city told of a meeting of the Jewish Territorial Organization, at which Mr. Zangwell, Sir Andrew Wingate, Mayor Spellman and others declared that in Settlement of Mesopotamia is to be found the solution of troubles which have beset the Jews since they were dispersed in Palestine. One of the strongest arguments in favor of Mesopotamia is that in supporting the proposal to establish a great Colony in that land one step is taken nearer the accomplishment of the plan to make a Zionist settlement out of Palestine. It is proposed to send at once an Expedition of Exploration through Mesopotamia for the purpose of gathering information which will guide the propagandist of the Colony idea. According to the best information obtainable forty million dollars will be required to provide irrigation works for one section of Mesopotamia.—St. Louis Star.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies post paid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where large quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will usually be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send [illegible] to B. Juergensen, Barberton, O.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was [illegible] as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill, or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan William. Then the husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 12, 1911. NUMBER 14.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

[Selected by S. I. Evans Wines.]

There is the Lord.

"If God be for us, who can be against us?" Rom. viii. 31.

"There is so much against us," we have said,
Bear down our hands and dropped a droop ing head.

But we forgot
There was the Lord—for us against all odds.
The host of foes, the God of all the gods,
His name we reckoned not.

We looked to the, and we had
Our all hope and relief beyond our trust
We did not count
On bread divine, the food by which we run
The race, the heart of the Almighty One,
The wings by which we mount.

"There are so many risks, so plaguing trends
And hitting sins—the mischief never ends."
But we left out
The God of Truth, who promises to exalt
His constant ones, proved faithful in His exalt.

God lives and loves—why doubt?

Man, when you cast the figures of your life,
The member that most you in the strife,
You are undone
If you omit the mighty Lord of all,
At whose one nod all earth and hell must fall—
Match all your sum with Him.

There is the Lord, whoever fails and flies,
A hand is still and every need supplies—
Write down His name!
You need not add another—need not call
For other helpers—He is all in all—
His help, His holy saving claim.

Our Fellowship.

SOCIETY, COMPANIONSHIP.

Who are we to fellowship with? Abide in me, and I in you, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. John xv 4-9. God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. I Cor i 9. That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. God is light, if we say we have fellowship and walk in darkness; we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John i 3, 7. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another, be kindly affectionate one to another with brotherly love; for by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. For God hath not appointed us to wrath but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, and he at peace among yourselves, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Gal vi 1, 2. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves. Rom xv 1, 2. It seems to be a safe plan to fellowship with any that are led by the Spirit, and if led by the Spirit one will see the fruits of the Spirit. Gal v 22, 23. And such fellowship will lead one to live very close to the blessed Redeemer, cause him to obey his commands, and at last reap the rich reward promised, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Are there any that we are commanded not to fellowship with? Yes. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done in secret. Eph v 11. But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. 1 Cor x 20. Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. Rom xvi 17. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one do not eat. 1 Cor v 11. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. Read Deut xiii. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. 2 Cor vi 14 to 18. Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us, and, if any man obey not our Word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. 2 Thes iii 6. 14. But if he neglect to hear the church let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican. Matt xviii 15, 17. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words; from such withdraw thyself. 1 Tim vi 35. Having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof, from such turn away. 2 Tim iii 1, 5. Avoid foolish questions, a man that is an heretic after the first and second admonition reject. Titus iii 9, 10. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. 2 John x. Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, be not ye therefore partakers with them. Eph. v 6, 7.

From the above we think there are many of us that fellowship with those we ought not to. I never had the privilege of being with believers of our faith until I moved to Oregon, where at one time was a church of a goodly number, but at the present time only about enough to keep up the organization. Why is this? One reason is, it is a church of many creeds (For according to Webster a creed is one's belief) one part believed in the pre-existence of Christ. Another, all mankind will be saved, others that every one that has died will be raised to life again, and others that only those that have their name recorded in the Book of Life will be raised, others have never been baptized into Christ, and other isms. And it was a remark I heard many times, that any one could join the Church of God, it made no difference what you believed. Now these things ought not to be. Christ said every house divided against itself shall not stand. Matt xii 25. It has nearly come true in this case. There have been two efforts to formulate a code of faith, that all believers in the future should believe, in order to be a candidate for baptism. But they throw up their hands in horror. That would be a creed. Call it what you will, there are at least six different creeds or beliefs in the church today. Now, brethren, what is one's duty? Should he fellowship with all that hold these different views, and allow them to have their way, and he keep still? Or follow Paul's commands in that respect. If I was going to advise one that was just now organising a new church I would advise that a declaration in the things believed should be believed in by every one before they could be accepted into that church and have unity and harmony.

Yours in hope.

E. W. KNAPP.

"For as the body without the spirit (or breath) is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

What is faith? "Faith is the substance (or "ground" or "confidence") of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Acts xi. 1, and "Without faith it is impossible to please him," (God.) Part of Heb. xi. 6.

As an act of faith—which it is so necessary for us to have if we are to please our heavenly Father—we must believe

1. "That God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6.

2. That God is the Creator, the builder and the Preserver of the world and all that therein is. Heb xi 3. Psa. l. 10.

3. That through his love God has a plan for the benefit and good of mankind and the ultimate salvation of the faithful, as outlined in his promises made to Abraham, renewed unto Isaac, and repeated unto Jacob, and remade unto Jesus our Lord, to whom they refer, and through whom they shall be fulfilled. Gen. xiii 14 to xxv. 9-15; xxvi. 1-5. Luke i 30-33.

4. That Jesus is the Only begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth. Matt. xix. 5; John i. 14.

5. That Jesus is "The Christ." Matt. i. 16.

6. That during his first advent, Jesus lived a perfect life, fulfilled the law. Matt. v. 17.

7. That Jesus died for our sins, and was buried. Rom. v. 6.

8. That Jesus was raised for our justification. Rom. iv. 25.

9. That Jesus, as Christ, now sits at the right hand of God, making intercession for his people. Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24.

10. That, To those who look for him, shall Jesus come a second time, without a sin offering, unto salvation. Heb. ix. 28.

11. That when Jesus does come it will be for the purpose of renewing all things, the driving out of this world sin and the effects of sin, thus establishing his kingdom so long promised. Rev. xxviii. 22.

12. That as Jesus was Prophet, is Priest, he then shall be King, even King of kings and Lord of lords. 1 Tim. vi. 14, 15.

What are works? Works are not the cause of faith but the effect of faith. Works are the natural outcome of faith, if we have true faith—not merely knowledge—we can no more hide it than we could cover or hide a brilliant light in a dark room. Neither can works save,—or give salvation—for all agree that salvation can only be gained through faith in the name of the only begotten Son of God, Christ Jesus our Lord. So in making the argument we do we are not substituting works for faith, but we are trying to combine faith with works, either of which cannot exist without the other.

Our text tells us, "As the body without the spirit (or breath) is dead. So faith without works is dead also." This needs no explanation; for it is impossible to put it in stronger language. We know what life is, what it means to be animated. The body that has breath in it thinks, talks, acts. The absence of the breath is death, in death there is no animation, no thought, no speech, no motion, it is dead, and this is what James in our lesson of today, says our faith is without works.

We read "to obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams," 1 Sam. xv. 22, and it is an old definition that "Disobedience is sin" and that "Obedience is righteousness." So in speaking of we will commence with baptism which should be—as it is—the first act of obedience to follow faith.

2. Then we are told "To search the Scriptures." John v. 39.

3. Then follows "To grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Peter iii. 18.

4. "Holding fast the profession of our faith without wavering." "Considering one another to provoke unto love and good works." "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, but exhorting," (Heb. x. 23-24,) and

5. Partaking of the Lord's Supper in remembrance of his death till he shall come again. 1 Cor. xi. 26.

6. "Letting our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven." Matt. v. 16.

7. "That denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 12, 13.

8. And as God would have "All men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth" we are admonished by Paul in writing to Timothy to "Preach the Word, be instant in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." 1 Tim. vi. 4; 2 Tim. iv. "

We are told "Not to be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not," and "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. vi. 9, 10.

10. For "Freely ye have received, freely give." Matt. x. 8.

11. We are "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep ourselves unspotted from the world; for this is pure religion and undefiled before God the Father." Jas. i. 27.

12. We are to "feed the hungry," "give drink to the thirsty," offer "entertainment to the stranger," "clothe the naked," "assist the sick," "visit the prisoner." Matt. xxv. 35 36.

13. "We are to provide for our own household; for if we do not do this we have denied the faith and are worse than infidels." 1 Tim. v. 8.

14 We are to use what ever talent the Lord has given us, to the best of our ability, in the service of our Master, to the honor and glory of our Lord who shall reap the profit when he comes. Matt. xxv. 15-30.

15. Like Paul we are to preach "Christ crucified." 1 Cor. i. 23.

16. We are to "love another with a pure heart fervently." 1 Peter i. 22.

17. We are to "love our enemies," "bless them that curse us," "do good to them that hate us" and "pray for them that despitefully use and persecute us." Matt. v. 44

18. In other words "we are to be perfect even as our Father which is in heaven is perfect." Matt. v. 48.

REWARDS.

Christ Jesus our Lord, also the apostles tell us that those who work with, and for the Lord God Almighty shall receive a reward for their labor, the promise is positive, absolute and sure. The great Master in one of his talks to his disciples said this, "And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." "But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for he is kind unto the unthankful and the evil." "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father is also merciful." Luke vi. 34-36.

The great apostle Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, after rebuking them for following after, and giving glory to mortal man, writes, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." "So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." "Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor." "For we are laborers together with God." 1 Cor. iii. 6-9.

At another time when our Elder Brother, Jesus, was talking to his disciples, he said, "If any man will come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. xvi. 24-27.

Then that apostle, "Whom Jesus loved" in his great revelation of the things that are yet to come wrote these cheering words, "Beloved, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." "Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "He that testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen, Even so, come Lord Jesus." "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen." Rev. xxii. 12, 14, 20, 21.

It well behooves us, then, to take heed to the words of Paul to the Philippians, "Wherefore, my beloved .... work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." Phil. ii Faith, Hope, Charity, (love) the greatest Charity. 1 Cor. xiii.

Brethren, we may have faith so fixed, so firm, that we will be able to move mountains, we may have a hope so strong, so real, that in imagination we live in its realization, but if we lack that love for our heavenly Father that constrains us to worship and adore him; if we have not that love for our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ that prompts us to devote our very life to his service, to the glory and honor of God; if we fall short in that love to the brethren that compels us to give them preference, as well as to hide their faults and imperfections; if we are destitute of that love for our kindred, that forces us to protect and support them, as also to forgive them their shortcomings; if we are bereft of that love for our neighbors, (the world) that in all things we would desire their advancement, and that they too, would embrace that saving knowledge of the love of God, as exemplified in Jesus Christ, our Lord, and we be willing to spend our time, means, and energy in the promulgation of "The Gospel of the Righteousness of God," which is Jesus Christ our Lord, then is our faith useless and our hope void, and to us Jesus has died in vain, for we are not embracing our opportunities nor living up to our obligations.

"For as the body, without the spirit (or breath) is dead, so faith without works is dead also." James ii. 26.

ALEX. D. DONALDSON.

An Open Letter to the Self-Appointed Ministerial Association

I am in receipt of your circular letter to the Brotherhood scattered abroad. I was glad to receive it so that we might know just what your purposes and intentions were. Now they are so plainly set forth there will be no necessity for misrepresentation.

1. I agree with you that the five brethren who are responsible for this move are "well known," but I see we are to know them better—or at least I am getting better acquainted.

2. "Not only so," you say, but reports of conduct unbecoming a Christian come from time to time. I notice—"reports:" I would say to this, He that is without such reports, cast the first stone. There are proofs also for others.

3. "Now that matters have been brought to a climax." By whom? Five self-appointed delegates, have pleaded that Brother Underwood, the owner of THE RESTITUTION, which is his business capital, his living, to choose a man, and the Association choose a man, and the two choose one and call Brother Underwood to account, because his business methods do not suit them. His methods of conducting his own business do not please the Association, and if this owner of his own business refuse to do this, then "We demand,"—who does? —these self appointed dictators "demand" he turn his business over to them. I would like to ask one member of this Association, who is a business man, How would you feel if five of the brethren should get together and "demand" that you pick one man they one and the two a third, to investigate your method of doing business, and in case you ignore it, then they demand of you that you turn over your coal business to them? Do you think you would feel obligated to do so?

Brethren consider what I say for one moment. That you had a perfect right to go ahead, get stock sold, and start a paper, no one for a moment questions, but to appoint yourselves without any voice of the Church, or rather brethren, and make a demand upon a man that he surrender his business rights to you, is no more right than for you to "demand" a position in the Cabinet for me from President Taft.

4. "Believing sincerely in the righteousness of this move." Now brethren, I am an ignorant, uneducated brother, and it may be because of this fact that I fail to see the righteousness in this undertaking. Therefore [illegible] I have no [illegible] and I know, if I have in any way misrepresented you I will apologize to you in the paper which prints this letter, and I believe such paper will be courteous enough to give you the space to show me wherein I have misrepresented you in this letter.

In conclusion let me ask, is it possible you cannot discern that your move is one of the most preposterous things ever undertaken by any of our brethren? I have been born and was brought up in the faith of the gospel, and in all my experience I want to candidly say, that within my province, I have never witnessed the like. I have no hard feelings toward any member of the Association, but contrary, and it pains me beyond measure to see men of your learning and ability, to appoint yourselves without any voice of the brethren at large, and make "demands" of and accusations against one who is in no way under obligations to any one of us. If we were a general organized body, and THE RESTITUTION was owned and controlled by the Church, then by a vote of the brethren would have perfect right, but as a faction, I fail to see where you have proceeded righteously in this undertaking.

I "plead with you" (however without authority) as a brother, to get out another circular letter to "the brethren in the United States and Canada," acknowledge you have exceeded your authority, and beg Bro. Underwood's pardon for your part in the matter. Then either go to work and start a paper of your own, representing your little faction (no one will question your right for a moment) or else do your best to get a delegate or a voice of each individual church at the General Conference, to appoint you to represent the Church as a whole and run a paper representing the Church as a whole, by authority of the brethren. This appeals to me as the righteous way. If I am wrong I shall be glad to be set right, and I think no one will refuse you space through the same channel you receive this. Remember, I am not defending any man wherein he may have done wrong.

I am your Brother in the work for righteousness.

Obituary.

David Alguire was born March 17, 1828, in Dundas Co., Ont. Died at the residence of his daughter Mrs. Geo. Fetterly, North Bay, Ont., Feb. 28, 1911; aged 82 years, 11 months and 11 days. He was married to Margaret Alguire in Feb. 12, 1850. To this union six sons and one daughter were born, of whom five sons and one daughter survive him beside his widow.

Early in life they were baptized at Adam's Mills, Ont., by Brother R. V. Lyon and remained members of the Church of God, until death claimed him, the dread enemy of mankind.

He read the Bible and RESTITUTION (of which he was a subscriber from its earliest publication), until a very short time before his death when his eye sight failed. Father has been very feeble for the last two years when his strength failed him so, he had to be helped from place to place.

The end came very peacefully and he slept away apparently without pain or suffering. Thus he giveth his beloved sleep. But we do not weep as others who have no hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit that they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

'Tis ours to miss them all our years,
And fonder memories of them keep;
Theirs in the Lord to rest, for so
He giveth his beloved sleep.

His daughter,
MRS. GEO. F. FETTERLY.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, OFFICE EDITOR

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 12, 1911.

WORD from Brother and Sister Willey is that they are now located in San Diego, California, where they will be for a time.

HAVE had no further word from Sister Chaplin, so suppose she is no worse, or we would have been informed about it.

WORD from Sister Whitehead concerning Brother James W. Wilson comes under date of last Sunday evening—"He is now so weak that he cannot open his eyes, and a great deal of the time he is in coma. I guess it cannot be very off now."

[illegible]—As we go to press we get word that Brother Wilson is dead. He will have obituary next week.

We note the sad news of the death of Sister Verlie Stephenson as given by Brother Adams. He was trying to secure a plate that we might give her picture, but it has not come, so we go to press without it. It is sad to part with those who have had long and useful lives, but it seems a little worse to lose one who gave such promise of helpful service, just at the time when the Church so much needs just such workers. May the remembrance of the dear one, and the hope of soon meeting her again comfort the sorrowing hearts.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Enclosed please find stamps covering fully the number you enclosed when you wrote me for circular letter. I had not thought of you entertaining the idea that you were "buying" it until I observed it in THE RESTITUTION. It has always been my custom to enclose "a plenty" in postage when asking such things, and naturally thought likewise of you, and paid no further attention to the matter. I am now sorry I did not return them immediately, and do so now, asking your pardon for misinterpreting your act in sending them. I have no authority to sell the circulars, as they were for free distribution.

Your Brother,
L. E. CONNER.

The above letter is given in justice to Brother Conner. His apology is accepted and pardon granted freely. Also "thanks awfully" for the return of the stamps. They do come handy. We trust our point was plain:—Our friends were well supplied with these circulars, and offered to loan us one, but as it was aimed directly at us, so making us the most interested person in the world, we wished one of our own, hence sent the Secretary for one, and being naturally sort of "independent" sent the money to pay for it. As the money is returned—the circular being for "free distribution"—we extend thanks for the circular sent us. Just why we were omitted in the first "free distribution" is not real clear, but any way it gave the ministers a chance to "get their work in" nicely before their "demand" reached us.

Communicated.

The Two Malefactors

History presents many pathetic pictures of human suffering and heroism in the last hours of life, but there are none that call forth from the human heart such great interest and sympathy as the suffering and death of Jesus and the two thieves executed with him. The words uttered are to be accurately weighed with their bearing on a future life. The words of each were spoken in the prospect of immediate death, and should be considered to mean what they say. Then were there two thieves crucified with him, one on the right and another on the left. And they that passed by reviled him wagging their heads, and saying, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

Likewise, also, the chief priests mocking him with the scribes and elders said, he saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the king of Israel let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him; for he said, I am the Son of God. The thieves also, which were crucified with him cast the same in his teeth.

We quote Matt xxvii 38 to 45 inclusive to show the temper of the people who passed by. The depth of hatred and malice, that wrankled in the breasts of these passers by, chief priests, scribes and elders can be measured only by the words they used. And with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left, and they that were crucified with him reviled him. Mark xv 27, 32. John merely mentions the fact that they crucified him and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst. John xix 18.

Luke testifies, "And there were also two malefactors led with him to be put to death. And one of the malefactors which was hanged railed on him. If thou be the Christ save thyself and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation, and we justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss, and he said unto Jesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in paradise. It will be seen that Matthew and Mark affirm that both the thieves railed on him. John is silent as to either one railing, while Luke asserts that one railed on him, and the other rebuked him for it. From the facts stated, it is fair to suppose, that both railed on him at first, while one repented later on in the ordeal of death. It will also be seen, that each of the sufferers prayed. One said, If thou be the Christ save thyself and us. This prayer was railed out. It was not mixed with faith. "If thou be the Christ," shows that he did not believe him to be the Christ. The repentant thief could see the passers by, and hear their cruel mockings. He heard the bitter taunts of the high priests, scribes and elders. He saw writing above the head of Jesus, "This is Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews," and he heard the tender words of Jesus, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." It melted his heart and he prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." This was a prayer of faith. He believed that Jesus would come again, and rule the whole earth. He wanted to be remembered then, when the Lord comes into his kingdom. When will that be? Let Jesus answer; When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory. Matt xxv 31. Today as used here, signifies a period of time, and not a literal day. Jesus had foretold his disciples that he would be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights—the interval between his death and resurrection; so he could not have been in paradise that day. Neither is it certain that the thief died that day, as his legs were broken preparatory to being taken down during the Sabbath, for it was not lawful that a criminal should hang on the cross on the Sabbath day. Jesus forgave the repentant thief, and assured him that he should be with him, when he came into his kingdom and restored the paradise of God again in the world. How tender was our Lord's heart in the dying hour. In his great suffering he forgave his cruel murderers, and prayed the Father to forgive them. Never did any one trustingly ask a favor that he did not grant. The deepest sinner can repent, and come to him and get forgiveness. He never turns one away. "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance."

H. M. LUCAS.

Searching for Light.

I have just received the following letter asking for information. It reads as follows:

"Dear Bro. Wilson:

What does the Bible mean, when it says the Gentiles were aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel? Eph ii 12. I don't understand what the Commonwealth was. Please explain, as I believe it is necessary for us to know this, as well as the Covenants of Promise.

From one in search of the Truth.
MRS. JAMES DELOZIER."

This is a very important question. It is a vital one. No Gentile can ever be a saved person, unless he, or she, shall first become a legal citizen of the Commonwealth of Israel, as you have read in the Scripture reference you have given, that "aliens" from the "Commonwealth," have neither "Christ," "God," or "hope." Let me say to you, that you have struck a vital point when you asked that question. I will endeavor to make it plain to you. You say: "I don't understand what the Commonwealth of Israel was please explain."

All right. We will first ascertain what the word "Commonwealth," means. The word "commonwealth" means some form of government, as for instance, a state, a republic, a kingdom. For instance if we should wish to speak of the government of the State of Texas, it would be proper to call it the commonwealth of Texas. If I should wish to refer to the government of Israel, I may speak of it as the "Commonwealth of Israel."

The officials of the government of Israel in the past, once exercised the functions of that commonwealth: but on account of the wickedness of those officials, God saw fit to suspend the exercise of the governmental functions of that commonwealth, until a given time, and that given time is, "Until he come, whose right it is." Ezek xxi 25 to 27. The commonwealth itself is not destroyed, its functions alone are suspended. I may make it plain by a comparison. The directors of a public school may decide to suspend the school for six months. The school is not abolished, but the active exercise of its functions is suspended for six months. So the Commonwealth of Israel is not abolished, but only suspended, "Until he come whose right" it will be to exercise those functions. Now, during the suspension of these functions, God is selecting out from among the nations a set of officials who will exercise those governmental functions in a just and a righteous manner. When these officials have all been selected, then he who "whose right it is," to reign as the head of that commonwealth will come, and once more set in motion the governmental functions of Israel's commonwealth, which were suspended. Now the officials under him whose right it is will all be selected from the legal citizens of the commonwealth of Israel.

Again, you say, "What does the Bible mean, when it says, the Gentiles were aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel?"

I will again use a comparison. A citizen of Germany comes to the United States. What is that German citizen? Why an alien from the commonwealth of the Republic of the United States. Can he become a legal citizen of the United States? Yes, by complying with the laws of the United States provided for making aliens citizens.

So likewise, all Gentiles are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, until they comply with the laws which will make them citizens of the commonwealth of Israel, after which, they cease to be "Gentiles in the flesh," and become "Fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

The Israelitish race sprang from Abraham. So all citizens of the re-organized commonwealth of Israel, whether they be of the Abrahamic or Gentile extraction, according to the flesh, will have to become legal children of Abraham, before they can become official in the re-organized commonwealth of Israel. This is shown in Rom iv 11, 12: "And he (Abraham) received the SIGN of circumcision, (not circumcision itself—what the circumcision is, is explained in Lesson III. Students' Text Book) a seal of the righteousness of the faith, which he had being yet uncircumcised that he might be (What?) the Father of all them that believe," whether Jew or Gentile according to the flesh.

Verse 16: "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the Seed, not to that only which is of the law, (Israel) but that also which is of the faith of Abraham, (whether Jew or Gentile) who is the Father of us all."

See Gal iii 7: "Know ye therefore, that they which be of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." All true "children of Abraham," have become legal children of Abraham, even if they were previously "Gentiles in the flesh."

What is the legal form for making alien Gentiles "Abraham's Seed," or in other words, citizens in the re-organized commonwealth of Israel? We read in Gal iii 29. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, (children citizens of the commonwealth of Israel) and heirs according to the promise," made in God's covenant with our father Abraham.

Who become Christ's? First, those who in the first place, "walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham," and then comply with the requirement of Gal iii 27: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." All such have become Abraham's seed or children, legal citizens of the Commonwealth of Israel. All Gentiles who refuse to comply with these naturalization laws, remain "Gentiles in the flesh," and as Eph ii 11, 12, says, they have neither "Christ," "God," or "hope."

I sincerely hope that my correspondent will see clearly the answer to her important question, and will comply with the naturalization laws. I should be pleased to assist her, or any one else who may read this, and desire to become citizens of the re-organized commonwealth of Israel in putting on Christ. This is a serious matter and don't let Universalist or other liberalistic preachers lull you to sleep under their vain delusions. If this should give light to some of the readers of THE RESTITUTION which they have not seen clearly before, please write a line to THE RESTITUTION and say so.

I have been a citizen of this commonwealth for many years, and I steadfastly refuse to meddle with the affairs of any other commonwealth, either by voting, or otherwise.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.
W. H. WILSON.

Obituary.

Miss Verlie Stephenson was born in Hamilton County, Neb., June 29, 1892, died Mar. 25, 1911; aged 18 years, 8 months and 26 days. She came to Frontier Co., with her parents in the spring of 1898 when less than a year old. She lived on a farm near Moorefield all her life, and graduated from the Moorefield high school and was finishing her second term of school at the time of her death, which was caused by measles. This community was probably never shocked so as when the news went over the lines that Verlie had died at 3 o'clock in the morning. Her scholars it is said refused to eat their breakfast. I closed a meeting here a little over two weeks ago which she reported and has been published. This was her last official work and perhaps her last writing. On February 10, I was called to preach Sister Steadman's funeral when she played and helped sing and yesterday at the same place, the same songs in part were sung for her. Having moved to another neighborhood, I was 28 miles away when the message reached me to come as soon as I could. And I never responded to a message with more sorrow than that one. When I arrived and after the sad meeting with the stricken parents and brother and sisters, they showed me her church book and there in her own hand writing we read this, baptized at Conference at St. Paul, Nebraska, in the Loup river, Sept. 6, 1908, by Bro. Almus Adams, Verlie C. Stephenson. If ever one lived a pure and spotless life from the day of their baptism till death, I believe she did. I have known her from childhood and have been closely associated with her in church work for the past four years and it has never been my lot to meet a nobler character. She was so quiet and unassuming yet she had a way of making her presence felt wherever she was. Business men and school boards and people of all walks in life came to me after the funeral to sing her praises. Surely the bitterness of death is made less by having such a character to leave behind. Some honors were best owed by friends in the way of flowers that are very rare. 43 teams were in the procession besides the many that stopped at the church. The church was packed, most of the available standing room being taken, and every one was there to shed a tear born of grief. The church members came to me after she had been laid to rest in the cemetery south of town and without hesitation granted her first place in the church. If she won this honor by a pure life, why not others? Her life was short but well spent. The future in this evil world is uncertain, but we believe her crown now is sure, so we will try and not mourn. Take thy restful sleep, dear sister, for we believe it will be but a short time till you will take your place in the kingdom.

A father and mother and a brother and two sisters, besides the Church and every one who ever knew her are left to mourn. We spoke to the people from Eccl ix 8. And while the text was suited to her life we had to admit to that throng of people who had known her all her life that her life work spoke more eloquent than pen or tongue. May the kingdom soon come when there will be no more parting.

ALMUS ADAMS.

In behalf of the Church at Moorefield, Nebraska, we wish to express our deep sorrow in the loss of our beloved Sister Verlie Stephenson. How we will miss her pleasant face in our meeting, but the Lord will watch over her mound, and will raise her up at the last day, and if faithful we will meet her again. Yes, Verlie is gone, but she still lives in our hearts, and her works are still felt. The able sermon preached by our beloved Bro. Almus Adams needs mention. [illegible] heart broken as he was, the Lord gave him strength under the trying ordeal to speak words of comfort to all who mourn. He pictured her beautiful life in harmony with the text which impressed all with a desire so as to meet her in the kingdom of God.

Submitted in love.
THE CHURCH AT MOORFIELD.

Editor Restitution:

We the Berean of Moorefield, Nebraska, wish to express our deep sorrow and grief in the loss of our dearly beloved sister in Christ, Verlie Stephenson.

The society has lost one of its purest and brightest stars, and we ask for the sympathy and prayers of all the Bereans everywhere that the Lord may help us to live as she did, and meet her in the kingdom, is the prayer of her bereaved companions and fellow laborers.

Our gatherings were never complete without her, and we know it can't be long until we will all be together again in the kingdom, if we will make the provision she did.

We will try to take up the work where she left it off, and hold her in memory and work ever sacred.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I resumed my work in connection with the church at Arlington, Arizona, after a week devoted largely to thorough reformation. Twelve converts were immersed in an irrigation canal near the village. Many of these had been "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," when we first tried to establish this work; but after devoting a week to the work in March we left a well established and organized brotherhood of about twenty.

Much more good is done by turning the mind toward reformation than toward splitting straws on differences real or imaginary.

We parted with representation of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord. While we continue to think of these away down in the Arizona desert our burden may seem increased, but we will still rejoice that strength has been given to do more for the Master. If computed as the world counts riches,—how much would it be?

I am trusting for sufficient health to hold another meeting—protracted near the capital of Arizona. I felt that I almost begrudged Brother Denning, the Elder, of the privilege of going into the water and immersing the twelve; but for the safety of others I could not trifle with such an uncertain ailment as heart failure.

I shall hope to start to Falls City, Oregon, as soon as plans may be made to travel from Arizona to Oregon. Address me at Phoenix, Ari.

Report of Labor.

Brother S. J. Lindsay came to Tennessee and commenced a series of meetings at Emory Gap, Tennessee on March 5th, and continued for two weeks and also held meetings one week at Glenalice, Tenn., the meetings were attended with good interest and a fair attendance and we trust much good may result. One put on Christ by baptism, Bro. James Poland of Emory Gap. May he ever keep in the narrow way, and we have reason to believe others will soon follow. The Church at these points had a feast of good things out of God's storehouse of Truth and a time never to be forgotten.

Your Brother in Christ.
J. W. GOOD.

WE trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compels all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.5 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

Josiah Repairs the Temple. 2 Kings xi. 21 to xii. 16.

Golden Text.—"Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly." 1 Chron. xxix 9.

When the temple was built under Solomon, it was a magnificent building. The united action of Israel was liberal in pouring out the treasures without stint. The gold of Ophir, and the cedars of Lebanon were used in its construction. The navy of Tyre was united with that of Jerusalem to bring supplies for its building. So sacred was the work the sound of hammer was not heard. It grew in silence as do the forests. Everything about it was wonderful, and the queen of Sheba was impressed with its magnificence and beauty. Here was the center of all the religious service ordained to God by his people, and great was the reverence of the people for it at the first. But idolatry, false systems of worship, [illegible] from the heathen and tradition dictated by God, led even the people to be slack, and to let the temple become broken in many parts. Neglect of the true worship led to neglect of the material building, and it was in most shameful condition. In this condition it was found in the time when the boy Joash was made king of Judah. He was influenced by the good priest Jehoiada, and made a decree that certain moneys that came in were to be diverted to the repairing of the temple. For a period of years the priests who should have taken care of this money, used it in their personal services, and there was evidence of graft, as nothing was being accomplished. When they were called to account the plan was changed, and a chest was provided with a hole in the top to receive the money, and after a time this box was opened and the accumulated money used to pay the carpenters and masons, and to pay for necessary material. In this way the work was accomplished, and the temple was repaired.

Later on in the life of Joash he made a bad bargain, and the Lord was not with him. The king of Syria came to do him ill. The end he was so frightened that he bought peace by taking all the treasures of the Lord's house and gave it to his enemy if he would go away and leave him. He went from bad to worse, and was finally slain in a treacherous manner by his attendants.

By a study of this lesson we may learn how to give in a systematic manner for the business of the Lord's house. These funds were to be gathered by the priests in a manner that insured an even and just proportion to each person. This made each one feel his personal interest in the work. It was not for a few rich to give all, but the whole people were interested, and were to give proportionately. Each person should feel that it is his privilege to give what he can, regularly, systematically, into the Lord's work. This is the true spirit in supporting the cause, and each should bear his part.

A Christian is judged by the world by what he is—not by his profession merely. The world has a right to doubt the sincerity of a people who are professedly Christian, and who let the Lord's house fall into ruin, and yet keep their own houses up in good style. A part of what you have should be paid in regularly, and each one is under obligation to give. All that you have is the Lord's by right. But he lets you use it, and demands that you reserve a part for his service in a proportionate way.

The lesson implies more than the material of the Church construction. The service of the Church is as necessary as the house, and that requires your attendance and interest as much as the mere matter of finance. You cannot say your duty is done when you have paid your part only. The work of a Church—the service of the Lord's house requires your attention as well, and that in proportion to your ability, the same as the giving of money. If you can speak, or sing, or teach, or do any thing that tends to promote the work, it is your duty to do it, and not leave it for another, any more than to let another bear the burden of giving your share of money as well as his own. The lesson demands giving and service. From God you get every thing. What do you give to Him? What will you for Him this coming week?

The President's Proclamation.

When the Ministerial Association published its secret deliberations the brethren in the North, South, East and West condemned it without one moment of hesitation. With only personal exceptions by individuals who had no insight into the depths of its organization. Feelings, and purposes, the condemnation of the Association was well merited, prompt, and unanimous. The Editors of our different papers were particularly frank, severe, and unequivocal in their strictures upon the underhanded, unscriptural and unbrotherly action of the Ministerial Monopoly. Though full of affectionate these criticisms have gone home. Any way they have moved the President of the Ministerial Association to issue this proclamation in Present Truth, Feb'y issue, page 8; Mr. Chas. Crowe:

Dear Bro.—Have just read your editorials in current issue of Present Truth. You should be careful not to write or say anything until you are fully informed.

I have a feature to your statement that we (a few of us among alike) met and organized, ignoring all others. No invitations were sent to Adams, Adams, B. C. Higginsand D. C. Robison for the reason that nothing can be accomplished by any organization made up of such extremes. If these men are allowed to continue to dictate the policy of our church, in ten years we'll have no church to dictate to. The fact is the rest too much "dictation" and too little of "teaching." We did invite the conservative ministers of our church and many who could not be present responded nicely and their sympathies and energies are with us. It is our purpose to see that righteousness is done if we have power to do it. Please make correction.

Your Brother,
S. J. LINDSAY.

The charges made against Brothers Adams, Robison and Huggins in above letter are very serious. The brethren named are so full of "extremes" they were "ignored" by the Ministerial trust. They are now dictating the "policy of the church" or else they could not "continue" to dictate it. If they are "allowed" to go on dictating "we'll have no church" in ten years. They dictate, but don't teach. To all these charges we have to say:

I. Brother Robison is well known in Ohio, having been our evangelist for several years. At home he has an excellent character with a good reputation as a "teacher." I never before heard of Him as a dictator. Strange that S. J. Lindsay can find out things about him that we home folks are ignorant of. I surmise that readers of Ebenezer are satisfied with what home folk think of him. He needs no words of commendation from me.

II. We were at the Nebraska Conference last fall. It was held in the home town of Bro. Adams. Home folk are surely in a better position to know Bro. Adams than the President of the Ministerial Association however "conservative" he and its three officers and six members may be. "Extreme" Adams has been an evangelist in Nebraska 15 or 20 years. The opinion of the brethren he has served for so long is worth ten thousand times the opinion of any man like S. J. Lindsay, even if he is aflame with presidential honors. A straw will tell what they think. At last Conference they elected him for the twentieth time to the office of state evangelist with a raise of salary, unanimously!! S. J. Lindsay says that if he is "allowed" to go on ten years dictating the policy of the church, "We'll have no church." Bro. Adams has been in the dictating business in Nebraska for 20 years—twice the time limit given him but he has not killed the church there yet. At least he had not committed the murderous act last fall when we were there. If he has since done so we have not heard of it.

III. Our life is an open book. For two years we worked with S. J. Lindsay in the churches of Illinois. We lived in Oregon where his residence is and were a frequent visitor at his home. I loved him and his family, and he loved me (apparently). It was during my residence in Oregon, and while I was associated with him that I imbibed my present "extreme" views. I got them with any "dictation" I may have now, from S. J. Lindsay. He was corresponding with G. M. Myers at the time on the subjects of Christ's Sonship and the inspiration of the Bible. He kept his letters on file, and often read them to me. He has them today no doubt. Now I will take oath before any Notary that in his correspondence with Myers, S. J. Lindsay defended the Divine Sonship of Christ and the plenary inspiration of the Bible just as I did at the General Conference, and do today. He repeatedly called Myers' ideas infidelic, and made statements, "extreme" as I am, I may have equalled but have never surpassed in asperity. From his own writings I stand ready to convict and condemn him. I dare him to mail to me his correspondence with Myers for publication that our readers may decide as to the truth of my allegations.

He says I am now dictating the policy of the Church, and if I keep it up ten years "we'll have no Church." I labored in Illinois two years and have had the pastorate of this city three years, during which times I have worked in different parts of the State in special meetings. Here is five years of dictation. If ten years of it will kill the Church five years of it ought to kill the Church one-half. Now that S. J. Lindsay has published a libel on my character I will just prove by the Churches where I have lived and worked, both in Illinois and Ohio. I do not know the Secretary in each one of the Churches, but I now give the name and address of one member in each Church, so readers can write and ask them to what extent my "dictation" has hurt them. In Illinois: J. H. Williams, Ashton: Anna Drew, N. Galena ave, Dixon: J. M. Glotfelty, Lanark; Fred Knodle, Oregon; E. P. Gesin, Forreston. In Ohio: John Lehman, Troy; David Beck, 223 Southern ave, Springfield: Mattie Neill, Pastor of the Church at Salem: A. C. Baker, Secretary Church of God of this City, Blenheim ave. Collinwood. Brethren, were we among you as a dictator or as a teacher—what think ye? Say it!

One word more—Dictation. The Ministerial Association is the great dictator. Its earmarks are visible in this letter. The preacher's trust dictated that brethren Adams, Robison and Huggins were "extreme," so must not be invited to become members—(thanks for your compliment); they dictated who were "conservative ministers" and asked them! "It is our purpose to see that righteousness is done if we have power"—What?—"power to do it." In a circular issued by the Association they say to Bro. Underwood "We Demand either the transfer of THE RESTITUTION, for a reasonable consideration, to the new publishing association now being formed, or upon refusal of such transfer, Then WE Demand the publication of a new paper!"

O readers, we have heard of the Standard Oil trust demanding that little companies must sell to them; but here is a ministerial fraternity with all the heartlessness of a syndicate reaching out and grasping for "power" to the extent of "demanding" that our Church organ must sell to them! The Dictator, the pope, is located at last—he is found.

Brother Newell, of Nebraska, has sent us a Cartoon which appeared in the Omaha Daily News, of January 21. On the left side of the Cartoon appears Carnegie with a little bag of money—$10,000,000 for peace." On the right side is drawn the World Powers with a big sack of gold—"$700,000,000 for battleships." At the bottom are these explanatory words: "While the world is crying Peace, peace, and Carnegie has donated $10,000,000 for world peace, figures show that from February 1, to December 31, this year, a dreadnought will be floated every nine days. $10,000,000 for peace! $700,000,000 for battleships! One peace palace; thirty-six terrific fighting ships!" A splendid commentary upon the Scriptures which say peace, peace, "When there is no peace." In spite of their "peace and safety" cry sudden destruction will come upon them, "And they shall not escape." 1 Thess. v. 3.

"Learn that heavenly chemistry of extracting some spiritual thing out of earthly things. To this end endeavor after a heavenly frame, which will, as is recorded of the philosopher's stone, turn every metal into gold. When the soul is heavenly, it will even scrape jewels out of a dung hill."

The winning of converts by example is a slow process, but it is the sure way—it is Christ's way. A speech may be disputed; even a sermon may not convince, but no one has yet lived who could answer a Christian life; it is the unanswerable argument in support of the Christian religion.—Wm. J. Bryan.

With great sorrow we report the death of a Nebraska Berean, Sister Verlie Stephenson, of Moorefield, Neb.

Owing to sickness in the home of Sister Zoe Adams, Secretary of the Nebraska Jereans, there will be no lesson this month. Let us pray that her grandmother, who is dangerously ill at this writing, will recover; and that we will be able to have our lesson next month.

On the evening of April the 5th we had a time of great rejoicing in Cleveland. Miss A. Roberta Lang, daughter of our Brother and Sister Lang, put on the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. The Lord bless and keep her to the end, is the prayer of her pastor and her brethren and sisters.

The World's Crisis of March 15th, sounds very orthodox. On page 4, we have, "No one ever reached the harbor of heaven by drifting" while on page 8 we have this prayer—"We bless thee for thy presence and the love of friends in heaven and earth." It is saddening to see the Adventists falling back into the ranks of orthodoxy.

Dating March 9, Brother R. A. Humphrey, of Bear, Arkansas, writes: Brother Huggins:

As "It is be ter late than never," I want to express "with pen and ink" 2 John 8ii. 3; John xiii. my thanks to God for your labor of love for the truth, John xvii. 17, both in your book and Ebenezer.

Your sound, as Ebenezer for Jan. 4, 1911, was noble, and your letter with Similes, Feb. 15, 1911, seemed to enlighten the whole page, Amen! I never saw it so pointedly before who to avoid; but was sorry to see Bros. Jones and Joblin brought up in controversy on Pre-existence, and earnestly ask all lovers of the truth, John xvii. 17, to read "Ebenezer" for June 8, 1910, on Pre-existence, please, and for "Princes in the Earth," same page see Acts viii. 33. Who shall declare his generation? Ans. God. For proof see Matt. i 1; Acts iii. 13, 30-41, with Rom. xv. 8; Heb. ii. 11-16; v. 5-10; Col. i. 15; Rev. i. 18. So he will say to them on his right hand—his children, who are now call - "Thy inheirs" Psa. xiv. 16, and brethren, come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom, etc. Matt, xxv. 31; Gen. i. 26. So fulfill Dan. ix. 6; Rev. v. 9, 10. Amen!

Thank God for that instructive and lovely story, and Sister Wiore.

Miraculous Conversions and Their Reformations.

Brother Huggins:

Please answer the following questions in "Ebenezer:"

I. Are there any heathen religions beside some of the protestant churches that have "Miraculous Conversions?"

II. How do you account for the reformed lives of some very wicked people after their Miraculous Conversion?

Your Brother,
F. M. HOWELL.

EDITOR'S REPLY.

I. The Israelites in the degenerate days of the prophet Malachi "Covered the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out," the like of which may be seen at the so-called "Mercy-seat" of a modern revival. Though his altar was literally "covered" with the tears and sighs of apostate Israel, he adds that he did not "regard" nor "receive" with "good will" their worship. Mal. ii. 13.

Though here practiced by fallen Israel this mode of worship was really of pagan origin. The Baalites we learn from 1 Kings xviii.. 26, called on Baal "from morning until noon." "And they leapt upon the altar which was made." Literally as the margin reads, "They leaped up and down at the altar." In plain English they danced round the altar in a frenzy of spirit, tossing their heads to and fro with unseemly bodily contortions, accompanied with groans and cries and gesticulations. The inspired description of their worship is continued in verse 28: "And they cried aloud, and cut themselves, after their manner, with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them." "After their manner" refers to the rites of their religion. They reasoned that if the blood of their sacrifice would not move Baal to mercy, perhaps their own blood might. Their "manner" therefore was to cut themselves with knives and lancets, and thus smear both themselves and their sacrifice with blood. Such was the "manner" of idolatrous Israelites, Syrians, Persians, Greeks, Indians, etc. Between this heathenish manner of worship and the foolish antics of modern theology when supposed "Miraculous Conversions" occur, there may be traced many similarities.

II. The good morals of people who were formerly immoral after they have been "converted" in the manner described, is to be admitted (sometimes) and explained just like an infidel whom we once knew, and was reformed of the drinking habit. Doctors told him he had consumption, and would die at once if he continued to drink intoxicants. He "reformed" immediately and is now a well man.

Many reasons not of a religious nature often reform a man. "Morality" is a very vague term today; it stands often for a code of human whims of man's own devising. When God made man he gave him everything created, animate and all herbs, absolutely everything. Gen. i. 27, 28. Then in the midst of the garden (Gen. iii 3) is the only thing God ever prohibited man from using. God's laws are not prohibitive, but regulative and governmental. Not satisfied with God's law, and of morality the world has devised "Commandments and doctrines of men, they have passed [illegible] which forbid you to "touch this and taste" that, and "handle the other thing Col. ii. 20, 21. In this they make a "show of wisdom, and pretend some "humility," but their morality is purely human. Many are good in their place, but they cannot of themselves change the heart to a saint, a child of the devil to a child of God. Only a change of relationship can do this. Gal. iii 26, 27.

Curiosities of the Bible.

The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 773,746 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The word and occurs 46,277 times. The word Lord occurs 1,855 times. The word Reverend occurs but once, which is in the 9th verse of the 111th Psalm. The word Immortal occurs but once which is in the 17th verse of the 1st chapter of 1st Tim. The middle verse is the 8th verse of 118th Psalm. The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet except the letter J. The longest verse is the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the 35th verse of the 11th chapter of St. John. There are no words or names of more than six syllables. The first printed edition of the whole of the Greek New Testament was that contained in the Complutension Polyglot; published by Francis Ximenes de Cisneros. The principal editor of the work was Sopez de Student de Stunica. It was printed in Greek and Latin, and completed January 10th, 1514.—(Daglott. Per E. W. Kreps.)

Titus ii. 7.

I invite your attention to a few simple but essential truths found in the "Grand Old Book." The primary test for our consideration is "A pattern" of good works, Jesus Christ was a long-suffering pattern and is one to those who should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting. Jesus Christ is certainly a wonderful pattern as by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. It is said of him that he was the gentlest man of the world. If we were all like him what an influence we could shed about us. But as we are by nature sinful, for the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did by which we draw nigh unto God by being baptized and rescued from the perils in this crooked and perverse world, we become lights in the world, there is therefore but one conclusion, that we are then patterns to all. Believers or unbelievers are influenced to a certain extent by a peculiar person providing he be a person to be desired to follow. We, who are God's heritage, are a peculiar people or purchased people, therefore those of the world take notice. In speaking of the house of Israel we read, "Thou the Son of Man shew the house to the house of Israel that they may be ashamed of their iniquities and let them measure the pattern or number." A pattern is a model, something to be copied, just as an artist paints a landscape. The landscape is his pattern. If the landscape was not worth copying or painting, would he paint it? The answer comes back, No. If we are not good patterns none will take the trouble to copy us, as Paul, Sylvanus, and Timotheus, speak of the church of Thessalonica as being examples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. The Thessalonians became followers of the trio and also of the Lord, having received the Word in much affliction with joy of the Holy Spirit. They followed good examples and others followed them likewise. In Acts vii. 44, the pattern is spoken of as a heavenly pattern. Speaking of priests "who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle, for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount," it was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these, but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. As to the things to be offered for the making of the tabernacle we read in Ex. xxv. 40. "And look that thou make them after their pattern which was shewed thee in the mount," or which were most exalted forms." Here we see that a pattern was to be copied in [illegible] "If no man despise us, we [illegible] for [illegible] examples of the believers." Now, it is evident from this, in that we are a spirit in being a people." We can all agree that Timothy was a young man [illegible] "Let no man despise thee therefore despise him." If we young people are the examples to the [illegible] we must be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Obituary.

Many friends and brethren in California and abroad will learn with regret of the death of our dearly beloved brother in Christ, Albert Balch, who fell asleep in Jesus at Oleander, March 17, 1911, after having spent many years of faithful service for the Master.

Born at Covington, N. Y., nearly eighty-eight years ago. His was a long and eventful life, belonging as he did to that class of hardy pioneers who met the privations and hardships of early days in Illinois, Minnesota and Kansas. He crossed the plains to California about the year 1853; returning a few years later to his eastern home, but nearly thirty years ago he again wended his way westward and has since made the Golden State his home.

June 1, 1854, he married Emeline Baker, who died at Minneapolis, Dec. 1, 1867. Three children were born to this union. A little girl who died at the age of two years—Lewis and Elliott Balch now residing in Idaho and Washington.

Dec. 23, 1869 he married Almira Dart, who has proven a faithful companion all these years, and is now left to mourn his loss. Five children were born to this union. Little Mary who died in early childhood in 1882, Carrie Dart of Portland, Oregon; Eugene Balch, Mrs. Laura League and Mrs. Grace Grimstead, all of Fresno, California.

At the age of sixteen he united with the Disciples Church, and about the year 1856 became a member of the Church of God in which precious faith he fell asleep in Jesus. He was one of the pioneer members of the church at Geneva, Illinois, many years ago. Through all these eventful years his hope was anchored in Jesus, and he had a firm faith in God. Preaching the Word until his declining years made him cease from his labors, for many years leading and holding together the little band of believers at Oleander.

The writer was asked to speak words of comfort, and this we did in all confidence, believing that the Apostle's words surely applied to these mourning ones, "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope." For Uncle Albert died in hope of a glorious resurrection, and almost every day he said in the words of the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

We could only compare that life to the grand old oak which goes through the summer's heat, and winter's blast unharmed, and lives on and on. Infidelity, sin, unrest surged about him but he stood, firm in faith—always on the side of right as he saw it—cheerful, quiet, unassuming, with a kindly good will to all. A man of sterling character, of quiet influence in the community. Eternity alone will tell the results of a life of faithfulness like that. "A hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness."

Well may his family be proud of that good name, and well may they pattern after the principles of life he stood for. He oft expressed a desire to live till Jesus comes, but his next awakening moment will be the voice which calls forth the faithful sleepers. Asleep in Jesus, but soon we shall greet him again.

E. E. Groat.

Died at her home, Pelzer, S. C., Sister Fanny Brewer, wife of Bro. Joseph Brewer, Sr., Friday March 31, 1911. The writer does not know the age of the sister. She was a member of the Church of God, Gutheria Grove, S. C. She leaves an aged husband, who is a deacon of the church, five step children, all members of the Church of God, to mourn her loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope being assured that Christ died and arose and that those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Death is a sad event. Yet, it is passed upon all, but we thank God that Jesus has triumphed over death and will eventually deliver his people from the death state.

The funeral was conducted by the writer from Rev xiv 13. After which Sister Brewer was laid to rest in the Guthrie Grove cemetery, there to sleep until Jesus comes.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in The Restitution some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Will It Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. A Letter to A Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1869. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

The article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

The Bible: its Principles and Texts

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible:" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

Out of Touch with God.

Only a smile, yes, only a smile
Given a woman overburdened with grief
Received from you. Twould have given relief
For her heart ached sore the while;
Yet carry and cheerless she went away,
Because, it happened, that very day
You were "out of touch" with your Lord.

Only a word, yes, only a word
By the Spirit's small voice whispered
"Speak,"
The worker passed onward, unblessed and sick.
Some one you were meant to have stirred
Unto devotion, and love unto;
One when the message came to you
You were "out of touch" with your Lord.

Only a note, yes, only a note
A friend in a distant land;
The Spirit said "Write," but then you had planned
Some different work and you thought
It mattered little. You did not know
Twould have saved a soul from sin and woe—
You were "out of touch" with your Lord.

Only a song, yes, only a song
That the Spirit said "Sing today;
Thy voice is thy Master's by purchased right,"
But you thought "Mid this motley throng,
I care not to sing of the City of Gold;"
And the heart that the words might have reached grew cold—
You were "out of touch" with your Lord.

Only a day, yes, only a day,
But O, can you guess, my friend,
Where the influence reaches and where it will end,
Of the hours that you trifled away?
The Master's command is "Abide in me"
And fruitless and vain will your service be
If "out of touch" with your Lord.

The Future Doom of Russia.

Russia will meet her doom during one of the greatest wars the world has ever seen, and the engines of destruction which will be used, will be too fearful to contemplate, without making one almost sick at heart. Daniel says: "The king of the North shall come against the king of the South like a whirlwind," which is a wind that no storm can equal in its destructive fury, and desolating power.

Ezekiel says; "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, (in numbers) thou, and all thy bands, and many people (allied nations) with thee."

Russia, including the regular army, and those having received military training in 1869, was 1,199,998; in 1892, was increased to 4,000,000; in 1897, was 5,093,816; in 1907, 11,400,000. "Like a cloud to cover the land."

Turkey, "the King of the South," in 1869, trained warriors amounted to 499,360; in 1892, was 1,150,000; in 1897, 1,120,[illegible]; in 1907, 2,845,000; Germany (Germany and all his bands was) in 1869, 977,[illegible]2; in 1892, 4,500,000; in 1897, [illegible]25,105, in 1907, increased to 7,340,000.

The whole increase, for the different armies of the world, between 1869 and 1892, was 15,068,718; between 1892 and 1897, was 5,579,768; between 1897 and 1907 was 80,320,830. The increase for 38 years is 50,865,744. This illustrates how rapidly "the cloud to cover the land," is pathing, to go forth and "utterly make away many."

When "the King of the North" shall come "like a whirlwind," he will come with Nahum's "chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships," and shall "overflow and pass over," from the Black Sea, to the Mediterranean Sea. Hence, we see "many ships" will be used in this mighty "whirlwind" storm.

He will meet a terrible foe in the "Merchants of Tarshish," (British navy), who already have "many ships." It is said, that the British navy, if their ships were put end to end, touching each other, it would cover a space of thirty miles. If all the warships of the world were placed in a line each ship one mile apart, they would cover a space longer than from New York to Liverpool.

What is the significance of this mighty preparation for war? It is fulfilling the prophesy of Joel: "Proclaim this among the nations: prepare war; stir up the mighty men: let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say I am strong." Like Japan, who but recently was considered "weak," but now she says "I am strong," I actually put books into the jaws of the great bear, and fed him back. China and India considered "weak," begin to show signs of strength.

Strength is being manifested in other ways besides numerical strength. Modern engines of war, gather strength in these last days. You may gather together all the different kinds of implements of war such as have been used from creation down, even including those used in our civil war, and one of our modern "Dreadnaughts," would soon put them all out of commission. The British Dreadnaught is 520 feet long; beam 82 feet; displacement 18,000 tons; speed 21 knots; armor: belt 11 inches, turrets 11 inches; guns: ten 12 inch; 18 3 inch; she is seventy feet longer than any battle ship afloat. She can concentrate six of her big guns ahead, and also the same number astern, and can swing eight of them to either broadside. The blast from one gun does not interfere with the firing of another. The guns are inclosed in turrets, with sloping sides. This places other battle ships practically out of commission.

The United States battleship "North Dakota" is said "to be our answer to the British Dreadnaught." She is ten feet longer on the water line, and three feet wider, and of 2,000 tons of greater displacement, she has the same number of big guns, but also has 5 inch rapid fire guns for repelling torpedo attacks. This battleship has made her British rival, a "back number." France has six of these terrible monsters under construction. Germany has four of them under construction, with a programme of building three each year. Japan has launched one of 19,200 tons, and another of 19,800 tons, and two of 20,000 tons are under construction. Brazil has three of these "Dreadnaughts" under construction. This has awakened the war spirit in other South American States. Let the "weak" South American States say "I am strong."

In 1827, the largest battle ship built at that time was the "Pennsylvania," she was built chiefly of live oak, she was of 3,241 tons displacement. President Adams wrote of her: she "is said to be the largest ship that will float upon the ocean, and looks like a city in herself." Surely what would he say, could he behold one of these modern battleships?

We now have submarine ships that can dive under water, and approach an enemy's warship unobserved, and discharge a torpedo against it. In 1908, the United States tried an experiment. Five submarines were to make an attack upon the "Yankee Cruiser." They steamed away from "Yankee" in broad daylight, and were watched by officers on board of the Yankee, with glasses, until out of sight. At twenty miles distant, they submerged, and proceeded to the attack under water. They made observations at intervals, by means of a periscope, until within striking distance, when they discharged blank torpedoes, which found their mark every time. The "Yankee" knew of the intended attack, and kept close watch for surface indications of their approach, and saw no signs until the torpedoes were discharged.

Italy sent a flotilla of four submarines in 1908, from Venice to Spezia, a distance of 1,300 miles under their own power, having aid from no other vessel.

England sent a flotilla of submarines 300 miles, they were under water forty consecutive hours. The ambition now is to make submarines for the high seas, in place of harbors alone.

In the thirteenth century the Saracenes seemed to have had some knowledge of powder. At the siege of Baeza, 1325, they had some rude cannon in which powder was used. The effectiveness of gunpowder was not materially improved until the last quarter of the 19th century. During this time slow burning powder has been developed, and more other explosives far more effective than gunpowder.

General Miles once said: "There never was a time in the whole history of the world when [illegible] wealth, and skill were the [illegible] invention and construction of the appliances of war."

Why all this? It is a literal fulfillment of the proclamation: "Proclaim ye this among the nations, prepare war; stir up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near."

We cannot come to any other reasonable conclusion than that.

When these things in literal fulfillment are taking place today, and we see them with our eyes, it amounts to nothing more than rank infidelity to doubt and deny it.

It is the thrilling cry in the midnight hour, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" "The time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation," is dawning on us rapidly. Knowing all this, it makes my heart so heavy I am going from place to place, proclaiming the one old story. "The gospel of the kingdom." But I should find those who profess to believe it, and yet procrastinate about obeying it. I know many of these will be caught as a snare. I tell you, liberal style preachers will have something to answer for soon, if they don't quit putting people to sleep, by smooth preaching, which is causing them to patronize the broad way, leading to destruction.

The time is fully ripe, for those who are "sound in the faith" that they should withdraw from those who deny that Jesus is the Son of God, and "trample under foot the Son of God," by "counting the blood of the covenant an unholy (or a common) thing (no better than the blood of any other man), and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you."

I for one am a come-outer from such, they are not my brethren, neither can I have any fellowship with them. Seek out the old paths and walk therein. My firm desire is to walk close in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham. The fables of men, and the teaching of false brethren, bringing in their damnable heresies, will do us no good in the day of accounts so near at hand.

When I say "near at hand," I know whereof I speak. We are in the last hour of the "times of the Gentiles."

"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The subject of the doom of Russia will be continued.

In the Blessed Hope.

Signs of the Last Days.

That we are living in the last days, I think no member of the Church of God will deny, and as the apostle said, 2 Thess. ii. 3, "Let no man deceive you." "That day shall not come except there come a falling away first." Has that day come? I herewith copy a little item that appeared in one of the daily papers of one of our towns, concerning an entertainment given at the home of one of the members of the Church of God. Her father died strong in the faith we hold so dear. She had been so to speak, brought up in the faith. She now has a home of her own, and is a member of one of the Modern Clubs. I use no names, as I do not want to draw the attention of the brethren to any one in particular, only to show how our own people are liable to mix with the world, and ask the brethren, Where does the responsibility rest? I give the notice in full, omitting the names:

—CLUB MEETS.

The Bible Class of district No.—— which is known as the——Club was entertained Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Z., on——street with Mrs. —— and Mrs. X. as hostesses. The home was decorated with smilax and cut flowers in green and white in honor of St. Patrick's Day. Games and contests formed the afternoon's entertainments and Mrs. X. and Mrs. Y. served a pretty handkerchief and [illegible] decorated pitcher for their efforts in the contest. The hostesses served a two-course Menu and the [illegible] and their trays by means of [illegible] Mrs. P. mother of [illegible] of New York pastored the hostesses in serving. Tiny silk St. Patrick flags were given as favors.

Now, brothers and sisters in the common salvation, what do you think of this? Notice—Bible Class of district so and so. Dont you have an idea that this company were much better seated in the Bible after this meeting? Is it any wonder that Jesus said, "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" When people of our own church will indulge in such things how true that we love the praises of men more than the praises of God? How does such conditions compare with the apostle's admonition, Heb x 24 25, "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, and so much the more as we see the day approaching." To see such conditions and the people of the Church of God mixing in with things of this kind makes me wonder. Have we got the faith once delivered to the saints? If after years of preaching the gospel, this is all we can expect to show forth to the world lets adopt a creed and be like the rest of the churches and receive the praises of the world and lose eternal life at last.

Brethren, let me admonish you to keep yourselves unspotted from the world lest as much as possible. "Let us show forth the praises of him that has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light," instead of some few men who had snakes in his boots.

O. J. ALLARD

Dear Brother Underwood:

Reading in THE RESTITUTION of Mar. 22, 1911, "In a New Field" third paragraph, I submit for your approval a critique on the New Jerusalem, which I copied from the Bible Echo, of July 30, 1874, an English paper, now defunct. Thinking if you can find a place in THE RESTITUTION it might show some of our people how error creeps in at the expense of truth. If you so desire you can omit the passages in Greek. I am glad to note the health of our family paper is still good.

May the blessing of Jehovah which maketh rich, rest and abide on you and yours, and should length of days be meted out to you and the Captain of our salvation tarry yet a little while ere he comes to his kingdom, may your efforts to spread the truth as it is in Jesus abound to many.

IAN KAYSON.

HEIGHT OF THE CITY NEW JERUSALEM.

Students of the Holy Word have frequently found themselves perplexed with respect to the height of the city New Jerusalem; because in the common text, and authorized translation of the same, we are told that "the city lieth four square, and the length is as large as the breadth; and the angel measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height are equal." According to this, the city New Jerusalem is fifteen hundred miles high?

How a city can be so high, it is almost impossible to conceive. One can scarcely believe seriously that it will rise story upon story to the immense altitude given; for allowing one hundred feet to each story. We should have no less than 79,200 such floors or apartments, raised one upon another to reach to the predicted acme. Nor can it be believed that the city will run up to a peak in the center of such tremendous loftiness, for the steeps of this mountain top would be awful to contemplate.

The thing that strikes a thoughtful reader, who realizes as he reads, is, the fact that there is a mistake somewhere—and this is the fact, as we shall presently show. Before we arrived at satisfaction on this point, we comprehended the meaning of the words in vision, and determined to suspend our judgment until we had more light, rather than utter some rash speculation on the subject.

There have not, however, been wanting men who have said some very absurd things on the height of this "great city," imagining by bold as-[illegible] tion. This is to be deplored, of the various theories that have obtained, there are two that are principal. One is, that the city goes up in a point in the center like the pyramids of Egypt, and that the apex is distant one thousand five hundred miles from the earth's surface, this pinnacle theory is in our judgment ridiculous. It, however, has respectable names as its enunciators, one of whom, we are told, recently delivered himself to an audience in a popular church, to the effect that he knew this was the right way to understand the passage, because he had been an architect? Another view is, that the city goes up inside the wall in circular form, something like a round tent, and at the top is covered in as the crown of a hat. In this very foolish speculation, the wall of the city forms a kind of a rim to a city, and has been illustrated to us, as similar to the rim of a hat—only that the wall was four-cornered instead of circular. This opinion was held and grandiloquently uttered by a late Editor of a monthly paper.

But we dismiss these speculations and interpretations as incredible to men of common sense. Practical and reasonable Scripture readers cannot be satisfied with such imaginations. A little more light upon the state of the text of this passage in the original Greek would have saved these men and others from adopting such far-fetched visions. We give the remarks of Granville Penn, Esq., upon this Scripture—Rev. xxi. 17—as they may be of use. They are as follows:

Its length and its breadth are equal. There is self-exposed vitiation in these verses, as they stand in the common texts; since they state the height of the wall of the city to be, at the same time, both 12,000 furlongs and only 144 cubits. [Here we are compelled to omit a part of the article, as since the destruction of our office by fire, we have had no Greek type.—ED.]

From combining these several variations of the text with its matter, we may critically conclude that it stood originally thus:

And he that spake to me, had for a measure, a golden reed (or rod) to measure the city, and its gates.

And the city lieth four square; and its length is the same as its breadth; and he measured the city with the reed 12,000 furlongs, its length and its breadth are equal.

And the height of its wall is 144 cubits.

Thus, the length or extent of the wall encompassing the city, is measured by stadia; but its height by cubits. Beng I, who was not aware of the various variations of the text, was urged to conjecture that the numbers 12,000 and 144 intended the same measure, by different modes of computation; and he even wished to expel the word for cubits, though it is found in all the copies consulted by Birch and Matthaei in Rome and Moscow. The 144 cubits constitute the "vast altitude" ascribed to the wall in verse 13. Neither Erasmus of the early annotators, nor Burton, Bloomfield, or Trollope of the most recent, notice this passage.—Supplemental Annotations to the Book of the New Covenant, by Granville Penn, Esq., London.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 19, 1911. NUMBER 15.

Louis McDonald

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Obituary.

Charles Vincent Watts was born June 26th, 1837, in Skaneateles, Cayuga Co., N. Y., and died at his home in Moline, April 5th, 1911, of acute paralysis, aged 73 years, 9 months and 9 days. Mr. Watts was married first to Almira Josephine Clark, April 19, 1860. She did not live quite five years, and April 8th, 1867, he was married to Rhoda A. West, at Savannah, N. Y. To these unions [illegible] children were born—two boys living, one [illegible] ter Dora Holly, of Dutton, and a son Maurice, living in Leighton on the homestead where his father settled in 1870, April 14th, and living there until Sept. 1901, when he and his wife moved to Moline where they lived until his death. He was converted to the gospel and baptized into the Christ by Elder B. W. Woodward 27 years ago, and left this testimony, "Whichever way it pleases God it will be all right; for I shall sleep until Jesus comes." A pathetic part of the burial was that 44 years before on that day, he and his wife joined hands in matrimony. They were very faithful to each other and their family, and true to the gospel truths. May Sister Watts be comforted with the words of Christ, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live again." The funeral was held from the Congregational Church in Moline, the services conducted by the writer, the sermon from Psa. xlix. 15-17, assisted in reading and prayer by the Pastor of the church.

M. A. WOODWARD.

The following is clipped from the Kentewick, Washington Reporter, of April 7, and is all the information received so far of the death of one whose name has become familiar to our readers as a correspondent.—ED.

Charles W. Tompkins, father of Councilman A. W. Tompkins, died at St. Mary's hospital in Spokane, last Sunday, following an illness of several months. The body was shipped to this city and the funeral was held at the family home yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, V. E. Marriott of the Congregational church officiating.

Mr. Tompkins had been confined to his room most of the time during the past winter and at times was a great sufferer but showed remarkable patience and cheerfulness for one of his advanced years. He kept gradually failing and two weeks ago was taken to Spokane in the hope that an operation might prolong his life. Soon after arriving at the hospital complications rendered an operation impossible and death claimed him Sunday morning. His grandson, Neil Tompkins was the only relative who could be with him during his last hours, Councilman Tompkins being detained at home on account of his own ill health.

Charles W. Tompkins was born in Wicklow county, Ireland, February 29, 1832. He was one of a family of nine children and leaves a brother in Wisconsin and a sister in Ireland. He came to America from Ireland in 1850 and located in Wisconsin where he lived for a short time. Afterwards he became identified with the Albany Milling Company of Albany, Wisconsin, and remained in the milling business until a short time before coming to Kennewick, Wash., three years ago.

He was married to Lucy Ann Hoyt, August 3, 1860, who died in this city, March 4, 1909. Three children were born to them, of which A. W. Tompkins is the only one living.

Through his long life Mr. Tompkins was an earnest Christain and in Wisconsin was a prominent and widely known business man. In this city where he made his home for the last three years, he was not so well known because he was not at the time of life when men take an active part in the affairs of the community or make new acquaintances, but all who knew Mr. Tompkins came to admire him for his cheerful nature and earnest words.

Simplicity is a mental soil where artifice, lying, treachery, double-dealing and selfish, low ambition cannot grow and thrive.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 19, 1911.

We shall not use much space this issue, but give correspondents the benefit of all we have.

We give in this issue a picture of Sister VerlieStephenson, whose obituary was given last week. We are told by Brother Adams that the cut does not do justice to the young lady, but is the best they could procure. From the standpoint of a printer, Brother Adams is right, as it cannot be made very clear, but we do the best we can with it.

The following comes from Sister Wince under date of April 16.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Mrs. Sarah Chaplin Wickizer is no better, but is rather growing worse. Hopeless conditions have set in and though her strength keeps up most remarkably she realizes that her sickness may be unto death. And begs us "to pray for her that she may have the support of an unfailing arm, in her hours of sleeplessness and pain."

If Need Be.

These gracious words, not all for naught,
In sorrow, grief and pain,
The heavy burdens that we bear
Will not be borne in vain.
Our Heavenly Father knows our frame,
He knows how weak we are,
And every sigh and every tear
He seeth from afar.

If daily cares oppress our hearts,
And creature comforts flee,
Does aught disturb our peace of mind,
He knows it need to be.
And when the need he has fulfilled
The end marked out by God,
And we are taught to trust him more,
He will remove the rod.

Oh blessed thought, there's not a drop,
In all the cups of woe,
That is not measured by his hand,
And will not overflow.
Then may we ever trust his love,
And though severely tried,
Remember that it needs to be,
And in his strength abide.

Dear Bereans:

We often hear people remark that they possess no talents, from which we conclude they understand the term to apply to some special gift or mark of genius bestowed upon but few. Let us see if this is true. In the parable given by Jesus for instruction, (Matt xxv 14-30) all in the service of the Nobleman were given something to improve, though the number of talents given each was according to his several ability. Even the weakest among us possess some gift or talent, which is peculiar to ourselves, and which however natural we may consider them are bestowed upon us by our heavenly Father. Some, indeed, possess many times the abilities and advantages of others, both natural and acquired, but the rewards which are bestowed, as we learn from the parable, will not be so much in proportion to the talents as according to the improvement made of them. Every talent improved, though it be but one, will be graciously rewarded. If we have come to look upon a talent as an uncommon gift, we have lost many opportunities of improving those we have. Health, cheerfulness, strength, influence are possessed by some in greater degree than others; are they not gifts, talents, that may be used in the Master's service? Wealth, wisdom, knowledge should these not be employed to promote the glory of God, and for the instruction and happiness of our fellow-creatures?

John Ruskin has said: "If you have talent, industry will improve it; if you have none, industry will supply the deficiency. So if we consider ourselves minus of talents, seek to do something to promote the cause of Christ and the happiness of our fellow men, and we bring out what we have failed to detect before. Some who have had less advantages, are apt to look to those, who by natural or acquired talent, are doing much in the cause of Christ, and become somewhat discouraged, realizing that they might have improved to a greater extent in their younger days, and would now be able to present the truth in general conversation, with far better success. But let us remember that our service to God begins from the time we become his children, and though we have made mistakes in the past, God accepts us as we are, and we begin the new life as new creatures, and our growth and faithfulness in service, commences. How carefully we should build! We cannot build alone, but we have One all powerful, full of love and mercy, who stands ready to guide and direct us each step of the way, if we but let him and ask him. Let us study often and carefully his words of instruction, giving earnest heed to them, seeking ever to know and do his will, that we may grow both in the knowledge and favor of our Savior, and be worthy of the "Well done," that will be bestowed upon the faithful.

ANNA E. DREW.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

Although, from the nature of the duties entrusted to them, the saints will necessarily pass much of their time amongst the children of men, still their place of abode will be in the heavenly Jerusalem, the description of which is fully given in Revelation xx. No cloudy fabric this, as some have supposed, no mere assemblage of glorified mere and women, but a real tangible city of surpassing splendor, its walls and gates encrusted with jewels and its streets composed of fine gold. This wonderful structure will occupy an area of 6,4000 furlongs, or miles, and will be in sight of the inhabitants. Glorious beyond comparison are the mansions which now are preparing within its pearly gates for the reception of God's favored people, and even the inspired pen of John, the beloved disciple fails to convey to our minds any adequate conception of the joys which await our weary hearts. The crystal river making glad with its stream the city of our blessed God, and the clustering boughs of the fire-giving tree, the radiancy of the gemmed walls and the golden streets—these are sights upon which our thoughts love to dwell, but these will constitute the smallest part of the joys which await the children of God who are watching the coming of our blessed Savior. These are the joys for which our hearts long so unspeakably and for which we are ready to relinquish all that earth holds most dear. "God shall be with them, and he shall wipe all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, for the former things have passed away." And if we prove faithful until our Master comes we shall see him face to face and be with those we love for ever more. Oh! surely the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom viii 15. The life of the saints will be one of usefulness and activity. They are to occupy positions of the highest trust during the thousand years of our Savior's personal reign. Each one's office depends entirely upon the manner in which they have used the talents committed to them on earth. Therefore dear beloved Bereans, let us wake up to our duties and responsibilities and make use of every flying moment so that we will not be found in the end wanting. We can hear the footsteps of Jesus for he is not very far away.

I would fain awaken you to a sense of the nearness of his return, and the necessity of employing to the best advantage the short space of time which remains to us. Surely, if we allowed our thoughts to dwell more upon the glorious destiny which awaits the humblest and the meanest saint among us, if we realized the fact that we are no longer strangers and outcasts, but future priests and kings unto God and the Lamb, surely, I know our lives would be different. How trivial the things of time would appear, how engrossing those of eternity, how anxious we should be to improve the gifts entrusted to us, so as to be found worthy of our high calling which is in our Lord. The time is short. Already, piercing through heavy clouds which cluster around the horizon, we can see the final rays of the coming dawn, already amid the din and tumult we hear the sound of the approaching footsteps. Are we preparing for this? Some are. Others are indifferent, and some have dislike to even hear it mentioned. Oh, dear Bereans, let us be ready, we surely want to have oil in our lamps so that we can go forth without any hesitancy, and be ready to answer to the glad announcement, "Behold, I come quickly."

Wonders Never Cease.

I have just been re-reading the articles of "the Ministerial Association," and comparing it with the attitude of some of the members a short time before. I also compare the Resolution as adopted with Article 9, and find quite a discrepancy. Notice "Resolved that the Association heartily recommend the formulation and distribution of concise statements of the more prominent fundamental doctrines of the Church of God for the enlightenment of others, but accept the Bible in its entirety, and the Bible only as the standard by which the faith and conduct of the members of the Church shall be measured and discipline administered."

A very short time before at least two of the members of the Association took a decided stand against the sentiment of the above resolution. If the sentiment of the above resolution had been expressed and maintained at the General Conference, we would [illegible] had different results. The fact that it was not done shows that there are motives which do not appear on the surface. One of the members of the Association was sneered by a few who stood with him in a speech he made at the General Conference, and when he came back in response the above is what he said. I wonder if they clapped their hands when they heard that? A majority stood for those things and do yet. But we stand against human made creeds as we find recommended by this Association, and always will. Article 9-b of the Constitution says, "This Association shall have power to determine when the conduct of any of its members is out of harmony with the principles of the Association, and shall have power by a two-thirds vote of its members to expell from its membership any member so determined to be out of harmony with its said principles." Why did they not work with us for that principle in the General Conference, and give or leave that power with the Church, where it belongs, instead of the ministers, who are servants? You can see the human in that, and that was what we were fighting to keep out. The resolution says the Bible only is to discipline the members. This Article says the members of the Association are to determine this. A two-thirds vote means if a member of the Association had a "pull" or had friends enough he might be retained, regardless of whether he was guilty or innocent. If the members of the Association could always rise above friendship and position, and think only of the facts as proven by the testimony, it might be well. But this has proven to be unreliable already. It would be just as easy for human nature to assert itself and put some out by vote as it was to keep some out when the Association was formed.

We might ask here what a vote would mean? Where is the Bible for that? The whole thing is whether he has violated the principles of the Association. He might do this and be expelled, and still be a member of the Church of God. If a member is found guilty, that finding must be based on the Scripture, unless we decide to try them by human creed and discipline. If as is said, the Bible is to determine guilt or innocence, then some one is forced to interpret the Scripture bearing on the case, and again this interpretation has to be made before the trial, to form a basis of action.

Has this Association, or even the Church a right to interpret the Scriptures? I think not. The Bible governs the doctrines and morals of the Church. Therefore the most that the Church can do is to cite the Scripture, and not interpret.

For instance "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault." We can cite this and make it a standard, and agree to put it in force in order to keep the Church in harmony with the Scripture, but it needs no interpretation, except by the one who preferred to tell the brother's faults to the neighbors first. So with belief; the person who insists on interpreting the Scripture shows he has a doctrine he wishes to read in. For instance "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" needs no interpretation. But the person whose belief is founded on human statement and believes he will go to heaven at death, is forced by his human creed to interpret God's Word, and force it if possible, to agree with him.

These people who talk so much about taking the Bible as their only rule, and try to be conservative, are only saying in another way Let us drop it altogether, and every body decide and interpret for himself. The law that said "Thou shalt not steal" applies with equal force to the man that hides the goods. The same law punishes the man found with goods, [illegible] who shot it. Your only safety lies in not touching the unclean thing. The uncleanness arises from an illegal act. I am afraid if the Church of God does not take a stand and be very careful they will be caught "with the goods." "Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing," Col. ii. 21.

MISS VERLIE STEPHENSON, WHO DIED AT MOORESFIELD, NEB. MAR. 25, 1911.

These unclean doctrines and practices pollute, and they are to perish who use them. The only persons in the world who need to interpret the above Scriptures are the ones who have either stolen or are hiding the goods. He who is not guilty of either can take it as it says. Radical, you say? Yes, the Bible is the most radical book ever written. No compromise with error or impurity of any kind. "Strait is the gate and narrow the way that leads to life," Matt. vii. 14. It is that broad, liberal, conservative way that leads to destruction. So the people who claim to take the Bible are the farthest from it, and insist most on interpreting it.

Upon what facts of Bible and brotherly love did the Association base its action against THE RESTITUTION? The Bible is our rule of action, they say, then broke it before they the meeting adjourned. I remember some fifteen years ago we had a minister from another state to help us in our Conference, and he came loaded with grievances against THE RESTITUTION and succeeded in getting a resolution through putting Nebraska on record against the paper. At that time our Brother Conner was Evangelist for Indiana, and he wrote me about the matter, and I told him the facts. He explained the trouble just as Brother Underwood has lately given it. Has THE RESTITUTION grown worse in its management and make up since then? Or does environment explain it. Every one knows that THE RESTITUTION has grown and could have grown more if the faults could have been divided up and part of it put where it belonged. Brother Conner could do that then—why not now?

Three years ago I was travelling around with another minister, and he was loaded with fault-finding and working for another paper. During the time Brother Lindsay was working in Indiana, and the brother wrote to him of his action, and I saw his reply. He said Brother Underwood was found fault with when he was not to blame, and he was on the ground and knew what he was talking about. He also gave one or two instances. Joining in the action of the Association seems to contradict the former stand. I am satisfied THE RESTITUTION is better than it was even three years ago, and I have heard no complaints for several years. So I believe there is no legal grounds for complaint.

Brethren, let us be careful. As soon as matters are stirred a little, human nature begins to rise to the surface. Let us skim it off and throw it away, and get down to facts and principles that are based on the Bible in fact—not just said to be. I want to hold up both hands, and say Amen to what Brother Woodward has said, Brother Wagoner and others. THE RESTITUTION has a hold upon the hearts of the people that can never be broken. If it had been open to every thing like some others, we would have nothing now. The Church owes a debt of gratitude right now to Brother Underwood, if it could only see it, that they ought to try and pay. He has stood by its doctrines to his own personal hurt, but never flinched. Those who talk compromise are the ones who do the fault-finding, and are the most rigid and least compromising. Yes, Brother Huggins underscored "Avoid." But they who are so sure they are standing by the Bible, and against Articles of Faith written out, and denounce them as terrible, are the very ones who will not accept of the Bible term "avoid." Let the Church take this Scripture, and try to apply it, and they will see the interpreting begin, and finally "avoid them" will be unable to mean love them and throw a mantle of charity over all error. Now brethren, articles of faith is no agreement to keep and believe the Scriptures, and not to so claim, and then do away with it.

As long as men think more of position than principle, just so long will we have trouble in the world. Human nature caters to everything that satisfies the flesh. "If you will fall down and worship me, I will give you all these kingdoms." This strikes directly at human nature, and we see men on every hand giving evidence of worshipping Mammon, falling down to position and trembling for fear of its loss. A few of us who have the courage of our convictions, are considered radical. Is there a place in the Bible that suggests compromise with error or vice in the least degree? If so tell me where? Yet we are asked to compromise, and if we dare stand by the Bible, we are called radical and even worse. [illegible] the very men who a talking compromise and brotherly love are writing everywhere stirring up strife and misrepresenting. But these things have always been. No one can read Paul's writings and not discover he was defending the truth and himself as well against certain attacks.

Brother Underwood who has stood by the truth and would not compromise and allow all kinds of error to appear in the paper, has brought down wrath upon his head, and been compelled to defend himself.

Now brethren, you perhaps think I with a few others are the only ones who have said anything against the Josephites and law keepers. You are being led to believe that, and I am forced by such action to show you it is not the case. Others have drawn the line tighter and in harsher terms than we ever did. I give you but one quotation as a sample.

Brother Allard, writing to me from Mt. Auburn, June 19, 1910, less than three months before the General Conference, winds up in this way: "That Ohio bunch have written a different letter since I went after them, and they may come yet. But Michigan voted after their President had signed to have nothing to do with it. That it would not amount to any thing. There is no use to argue with Crowe and A. J. All I want them to do is to quit subverting the minds of the brethren, and go where they belong with those Stanberry mugs, and let us alone. If they would only take a stand, then we could write to our churches that we did not endorse them as our preachers. But we can do nothing until we get organized. As long as we pay no money to A. J. we can't keep him from preaching.—O. J. A."

"Let us alone." Who are the "us" he refers to? "If they would only take a stand." It seems to me that I never saw two men take a more decided stand than the two referred to did at the General Conference. I wonder if the brother has "notified the churches that we do not endorse them as our preachers?" I know that the churches have been notified that some others are not endorsed. It is one thing to aid and encourage a thing, and another to stand by it when the supreme test comes.

Yes, we need articles of faith and of discipline, and a paper that stands by the same, to govern vacillating human nature. If God would allow we would have just as many beliefs and actions as there are people. Let us watch that no man deceive us and take our crown.

ALMUS ADAMS.

Sunday School Lesson.

APRIL 30, 1911.

God's Pity for the Heathen. (Foreign Missionary Lesson.) Jonah 3d and 4th chapters.

Golden Text.—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Matt. xxviii. 19.

In preparing this lesson it will be well to take the whole book, and get the connections well in mind. At first Jonah was disobedient, and sought to get out of doing what God told him to do. Later he is brought to see his error and repents, and becomes obedient. The attempt to make this lesson teach "foreign missions" may seem to some far-fetched, but it is well to remember that the Jew thought the kingdom of God was a Jewish kingdom. All of God's favor and his providence was for the Jews, and all victory and triumph of God's plans was meant solely to benefit the Jewish people. Hence we can see that to go to a heathen city and announce its doom, was a task that a prophet of the Jews might not want. To such a people could only imply that if they listened to the call, and were repentant, they would not be overtaken by the calamity. This could only be deliverance by God to the heathen, and this the Jews did not then understand.

The aim of the lesson should be to teach that God is not a respecter of persons, he is not exclusive, but cares for all his creatures no matter what their condition, and will help the repentant sinner, be he high or low, rich or poor, black or white. Nationality does not count with God, but loving service and devotion to him does. The lesson teaches a largeness, a comprehensiveness in the nature of God, that does not sanction meanness and littleness in his disciples.

Too much stress is laid by many on position. Among most people there is a race prejudice. The white thinks himself superior to the black man, and this is resented by the black race. What makes Jews dislike Christians? What causes Christians to dislike the Jews? What is the real basis of social distinction? How far do these things count with God? If we may judge from this lesson they do not count for much.

In the discussion of this lesson, some will make much of the way by which Jonah was made to do the Lord's bidding—the journey that he made in seeking to avoid the task, and how he was brought on his way, and made to do it. But the real important matter is that Jonah did enter Nineveh, and did sound the warning. He gave the reason for the destruction of the city to be for its great wickedness. The people saw that what he said concerning them was true, and from the king down to the animals even there must be evidences of real repentance. In this the king was the leader, and the people followed his direction. Then the Lord spoke again, and for repentance the city was spared. Pardon is won by repentance. The action of Jonah when thus assured that God was favoring this people, borders on petulancy, and is not to be emulated. God gave Jonah a lesson that shows him the foolish position he is in. God has him to see his narrowness, and would lead him out of that exclusiveness that so largely characterized the Hebrew people.

Israel was God's chosen people, and were to be separate from all other people. Their position was distinct. But they were not all that God had in mind. His plan was broader than this one nation. They were, if faithful to God, to be a means of blessing to the world. All nations by repentance and obedience could be blessed of God. This is the main teaching of this lesson. Jonah should have been glad and joyful that he could be the means in God's hand of thus saving thousands of the people of Nineveh, and not display so selfish a disposition. Every man was possessed of value in God's sight, and the plan of salvation embraces all who will come. "Whosoever will" is the plan of God. Whosoever does not spell Hebrews, nor Englishmen, not Americans, not white nor black. It means everyone, and everyone may have the salvation of God who will come to him and be saved. The people of Nineveh were spared because they repented of their sins, and that is the only way God will accept people now-a-days. He demands Faith, Repentance, Obedience, Right Life. "Whosoever will" may come, and none are barred out who come in the way appointed.

If our friends are badly chosen, they will invariably drag us down. If well, they will raise us up.

Daniel 11.

Nebuchadnezzar's dream, the Chaldean empire called the Assyrian in its commencement. This was the first monarchy, begun by Nimrod A. M. 1771 and ending with the death of Belshazzar, the head of gold having lasted nearly seventeen hundred years. Breast and arms of silver, the Medo-Persian Empire, which began under Darius, the Mede, and captured Babylon, terminated the Chaldean empire, which lasted 215 years. Belly and thighs of brass, the Macedonian or Greek empire founded by Alexander, the Great. He subdued Greece, penetrated into Asia, took Tyre, reduced Egypt, overthrew Darius 331 years before Christ, terminated the Persian monarchy he went on and conquered all the country of the world in eight years; and after his death his empire became divided among his four generals, and the rule went on over the whole earth and lasted 281 years.

Legs of iron [illegible] And [illegible] on and clay, the Roman empire, which was continued through a long race of sovereigns till 30 years before Christ when Octavius Cesar took Alexandria, having defeated Anthony and Cleopatra at the battle of Actium and so Egypt became a Roman province, thus ended the kindom of Lagide after it had lasted 247 years and was swallowed up by the barbarous northern nations and thus terminated those four powerful monarchies. A stone cut out of of the mountain without hands strikes the image on the feet and destroys it. This stone is Christ, he is called a stone, a chief corner stone, and he strikes it with the gospels of the kingdom he commanded his disciples to go into all the world and preach the Word of the kingdom and the gospel strike on the feet the foundation of the whole image. Rome was in her strength and glory at this time, but Christ had to sow the seed of the kingdom and the seed is growing, and at the end of the Gentile age we will have the harvest. The stone had to strike the image while the Romans were in power. It could not strike now, it is gone. The riches of these four governments were all carried off by succeeding governments, and were destroyed with the stone and are still crumbling.

If you think this is worth printing I may write on the two thousand three hundred days in the 8th of Daniel. I am writing to you in the hope of getting more light. I would like to hear your view on when the stone struck the image. It is light that I am after.

Editor Restitution:

As the Conference is to be at Troy, Ohio, this year at the Fair grounds, we met the Board at their regular meeting April 1 and the date is fixed to be on the 16th of August and continue over the following Sunday. Please announce the date in the grand old RESTITUTION, so the committee can arrange, and the brethren throughout Ohio and other states can arrange to be with us and enjoy a feast, and hear God's Word proclaimed.

Your Brother looking for the soon coming King.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The 23rd Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Iowa will meet at Waterloo, August 19 to 27 inclusive. Programme will appear later.

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.

WE trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2 00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

PLEASE don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

Notice!

Those desiring Berean Booklets can get them from Alma Roose, Sac City, Iowa, for eleven cents a book, postage prepaid to any address.

LOOK. LOOK.

Here Is a Good Big Chance.

We want a lot of New Subscribers, and with a little effort you can get us one or more. We do not ask you to work for us for nothing, but will pay you for what you do. Here is our offer to you:

For a New Subscriber at the regular rate of $1.50 per year, we will send to any address you name

10 copies of "A Letter to a Friend"
or
One Pound of other Tracts.
or
One-half Pound of Tracts and 5 copies of A Letter to a Friend.

This will enable you to carry a supply of tracts to distribute among your friends, and perhaps start some one on the way to the Kingdom.

LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have a number of copies of "The Word of the Kingdom" which originally sold at $1.50. This is a work gotten out by Brother John O. Woodruff before he died. Only a few copies remain, and they will make excellent presents. While they last we will mail you one Free, if you will send us

Two New Subscribers.

JUST LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have on hand some copies of the Emphatic Diaglott. All of our readers know what it is—a word for word translation of the New Testament, by Brother Benjamin Wilson. There is a column with a line of Greek and beneath it the equivalent English words so the reader may know just the word that is used. A very valuable help in Bible study. We will give you one of these books Free if you will send us

Four New Subscribers.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trust worthy person.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind, or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies post paid, or 12 for $1.00.

Will It Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow ave Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it gives us a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years and is yet full of good for all. Single the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, post paid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be [illegible] Brethren and [illegible] cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The reminder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to call to you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Strange stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance if the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and after awhile when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought into obedience and obedience of the truth by loaning her one of those small tracts entitling "Five hundred dollars reward" for a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

A Lesson in Service.

In the cool of a glad spring morning
The Master came to me;
"My seed of truth must be planted.
Will you help in the work?" asked He.
And I answered, "Wait but a little,
The day is so fair—so fair;
When the mornings are less enchanting,
In the fields I will do my share."

At the dawn of a summer morning
I heard the Master say,
"My truth must be watched and tended,
Will you work in my fields today?"
But I said, "The days are so dreary
And summer has just begun.
I will do my part in Thy labor
When the glory of June is done."

In the due of an autumn morning,
The Master came once more;
"My harvest is white," He whispered,
And reapers are needed sure."
"But this autumn joy," I pleaded,
"I must quaff of, ere it wane;
Just a few more draughts of sunshine,
And I'll help Thee gather the grain."

In the chill of a winter morning,
The Master came to me.
The ice-bound river was silent,
And snow lay white on the lea.
"O Master, now I am ready
To work in Thy fields," I said;
But the Master smiled in pity,
And sadly He shook His head.

"The harvest is over," He answered,
"And winter comes apace;
But some wheat lies all ungarnered,
Because of your vacant place.
You have spent the year in pleasure,
I have pleaded all in vain;
But what of your own reserves,
And what of the wasted grain?"

The Future Doom of Russia.

I will now continue the evidences that we are in "the time of the end." Beginning where I left off in my last article, I repeat as I said before, that the "time of the end" is not the end itself, but a period prior to the end, even the time when kings of the "North" and "South" will engage in their last deadly conflict.

It is a noticeable fact that the great inventions and discoveries which now startle the world, were not gradual developments, coursing down through the centuries, but began within the life time of many people, who are now upon the stage of action, and is confined to the period, known as "the time of the end."

Glance backward for one hundred years, and you will find people moving along in the ordinary course of life, very much as they did one thousand years previous to that; especially as to the "running to and fro," and the "increase of knowledge." The horse being the swiftest means of "running to and fro" upon the earth at that time, and upon the sea, the sail boat was the swiftest means, rather crude at that. Work of every description was accomplished by hard hand labor. About sixty years ago things began to materially change; but a decade later on the change was still more apparent; but within the last thirty-five years, it would almost stagger your mind to keep pace with improvements which seem to border upon the miraculous.

Our young people can hardly conceive, but what these things have always existed; but those who can look backward to the time prior to the existence of many of these things can better appreciate the change, and see with greater force the fulfillment of prophecy.

The swiftest means of "running to and fro" on the earth, that we now have, are the railroad and steamship. I will now briefly trace the first inception of the thought to use the above means as the way to traverse both land and the ocean.

George Stephenson of England established the first railway service between Manchester and Liverpool, with his rather crude locomotive, and Edward Entwistle was the first locomotive engineer. The name of the first engine was called "The Rocket." De Witt Clinton is said to be the first engineer who ran a locomotive and train in New York. The first cars on the train were like a colonial omnibus. I understand that twelve miles an hour was about the limit of speed.

Now in comparison with this, let me quote a description of a modern locomotive made by the American Locomotive Company. Length 80 feet, weight of engine, 265 tons; weight of tender, 81½ tons; boiler, diameter, 8 feet; length, 35½ feet; weight of boiler 50 tons. Heating surface, 5,314 square feet. Steam pressure, 215 pounds. This engine can haul an eight miles an hour, a train two miles long, carrying 10,000 tons of freight, or an amount of wheat, representing the harvest from 25 miles of wheat farms."

I saw a similar engine to this, while on my present trip in Texas. On enquiry, a conductor said the oil tank attached to the engine, had a capacity of 3,500 gallons of oil.

Now as to speed. I have seen a picture of The 20th Century Limited, running between Chicago and New York, and also running within about 100 miles of where De Witt Clinton ran his train. This picture is said to have been taken while the train was moving at the rate of ninety miles an hour. This train makes the trip of 980 miles in 18 hours. Within about five days people can be whirled from ocean to ocean. I was the guest of a brother in Cashmere, Washington, who told me that in the fifties he crossed the plains with an ox team in seven months.

As to the amount of "running to and fro," "The Railway Age," gives in substance the following: "Railroad travel in the United States for the year 1897, was equivalent to thirteen billion persons traveling by rail one mile. Ten years later the number of miles traveled by the people of the United States, were 24,612,462,029, an average of 287 miles each, for the 90,000,000 inhabitants of the United States." While these figures are simply enormous, it is even greater today. In Europe the travel is equal to this, if not greater.

Prior to this people could not mingle together, and confer with each other with regard to matters of mutual interest and advancement, as is the case now. There was no means of transmitting news, or thought, faster than the horse or sailboat could carry it. The intervening space between countries, was seldom bridged over, while intercommunication between neighboring states was quite limited. On this account there could be but little interchange of thought, and importation of knowledge between each other. Hence rapid transit was a necessity in order that "knowledge may be increased," by bringing the people in contact with each other. "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." Prov xvii 17. Contact with each other is an absolute necessity, in the sharpening process. The above Scripture expresses a truth of worldwide recognition. This is evidenced by the fact that there is probably not a single day in the year, but what aggregations of people called conferences, or conventions are in session giving and receiving knowledge upon topics too numerous to mention, and at the same time conferring with each other, and devising ways and means to more rapidly impart information on their specific line to others. Rapid transit has made it possible for people to "run to and fro" to these conventions.

The confusion of tongues has largely hindered the rapid transmission of knowledge, and in these days, ("the time of the end") a new universal language (simple, and easy of acquirement) has been given to the world, by which information can be transmitted to its remotest bounds. Every impediment is being removed which impedes the rapid transit of thought. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the world." The brethren in New Zealand have printed this gospel in Esperanto, ready to be sent into all the world. Why do not the Household of Faith in the United States immediately seize this mighty power, and do their duty in sending "the Gospel of the Kingdom" to earth's remotest bounds.

Another means of rapid transit on the "running to and fro," between nations, is the modern steamship. Compare this with ships of seventy-five or even fifty years ago. A lady who crossed the ocean between Liverpool and New York in the fifties said it took her on the ordinary sailship, seven weeks lacking one day. No large amount of "running to and fro," could be done as then as they only could accommodate a few score to each ship. After awhile Fulton took a step in advance, when he produced his crude steamship; it being about as crude as George Stephenson's locomotive. As it steamed up the Hudson river, the people gazed upon it with feelings of distrust and amazement. When they beheld its long smoke stack, belching forth clouds of black smoke, objection was made to it, saying: it "would blacken the wool on the sheep's back."

I have a picture of the first steamer carrying mail across the ocean. It used to cost twenty four cents to send a letter to England, and ten cents to send a letter from Chicago to San Francisco. The mail facilities were slow and crude, but now its organism is almost perfect, with its railway mail service, and rural delivery, etc. It surely is a mighty factor in the "increase of knowledge," in "the time of the end."

Let me quote to you a description of a modern steam ship called the "Lusitania she is 760 feet between perpendiculars, 785 feet on deck, 88 feet broad, and of 32,500 tons displacement. At her maximum draft of 37 feet six inches, she displaces 45,000 tons. She is the first of the big liners to use the turbine engines, and with her 70,000 horse power, her speed is 25½ knots an hour. Has palatial dining rooms and parlors, fine baths and bed rooms, passenger elevators, printing office for daily papers, news is derived by wireless telegraphy, day by day. In place of carrying a few score passengers, they carry enough to make a fair sized village. Hence, the "running to and fro," between nations, is simply enormous in these days of "the time of the end."

Personally, within the last nine years of my evangelical work, I have seen much of the "increase of knowledge," and "the running to and fro," as I have in that time, "run to and fro" myself from Sturgeon Falls in Canada, to the gulf of Mexico on the south, and from the Atlantic Ocean on the east, to the Pacific on the west. I have also proclaimed the "Gospel of the kingdom of God," in some twenty-four different states, and at this writing am evangelizing in the State of Texas. I also am ambitious enough if others will co-operate, to extend the work, and to assist in sending the "gospel of the kingdom, into all the world," by taking advantage of "The increase of knowledge," in the printer's art, and the new universal language of the world. Let us be alive, and keep pace with the "increase of knowledge" in the glorious work of the Lord.

These articles will be continued in THE RESTITUTION, as I am not near through yet.

Rally as one man, to the support of THE RESTITUTION. It is a medium of communication that I am proud of. It stands solidly for the grand old "Gospel of the kingdom."

Never mind whereabouts your work is. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toils. You are working for eternity. If you cannot see results in the hot working day the cool evening hours are drawing near when you may rest from your labors, and then they will follow you. Reverence for Bible Teaching

The man that respects not his own word, respects not himself, and he that respects not himself, no one will respect. He who in the beginning spoke and it was done, whose Word spoke a fire and a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces, whose Word shall judge the world and never pass away, but shall stand, like its immutable Author, when the heavens and the earth shall be no more, will surely respect and honor his own Word.

"In the name of the Lord, it is said, the righteous run and are safe, but of his Word it is said, Thou hast magnified thy Word above all thy name. The person who can cavil or trifle with the Word of the Great Jehovah to avoid a duty it commands, or to defend a doctrine of his own denomination, is a presumptuous and thoughtless man, little does such a one realize that he will be confronted by the fearful and insulted Author of that Word when the dead, small and great, shall stand before God, and the dispensational books be opened. "To this man will I look, even to him that is of a poor and contrite spirit, and trembleth at my Word." "Hear the Word of the Lord ye that tremble at his Word (Isa. lxvi. 2-5,) a lack of reverence for the Word of God is surely the one great sin of this degenerate age of the world. A certain tyrant of Rome used to wish the Roman people had but one neck, that he might dispatch them all at one blow. All our sin-cursed dear reader have but one neck, namely, disrespect for the Word of God. If we have just reverence for his Word we will commit none of the sins it forbids. My dear reader, if you do not believe what the Bible plainly teaches, that people are begotten through the Truth, are made clean through the Word, are converted by the law of the Lord, you have good reason to doubt whether you have any reverence for the Word of God. It is a truth that the only moral power ordained of God for the conversion of sinners is his Word, and all who have no reverence for that are beyond recovery, when any one arrives at that extreme of wickedness they may prepare for destruction. When the antediluvians had lost all respect for God's Word as preached by Noah, he destroyed them with a terrible overflow. Again when the Jews would not regard the Word of the Lord spoken by Jesus and his apostles, but made void the conditions of salvation by their sectarian doctrines and traditions they met a similar fate, and who, at all acquainted with the facts can doubt that the Gentile church has departed far from the gospel as the Jews did from the law. Professed Christians reverence many things which the Bible teaches, not because God says so, but because the sectarian party to which they have attached themselves teach and practice so, indeed, almost every observing person must have noticed that it is of no more use to quote to a party man the plainest declaration of God's Word against a tradition of his church, than it would be to cite a heathen fable, a man rejects the doctrine of purgatory (as he thinks) because it is not in the Bible, and at the same time practices infant sprinkling for baptism, although that is not in the Bible either. Another rejects infant sprinkling because it is not in the Bible, and still will practice "experience telling" although that is no more to be found in the Bible than infant sprinkling. Another rejects the office of Pope because it is not found in the Good Book, and contends for the office of "Class Leader," hence all such deceive themselves, they think they respect the Word of God, when in fact they only respect the doctrine of their own party. The truth is, they reject these things, not because they are not in God's Book, but because they are not in the creed of their own church. It is most manifest that the revelation of God is of no more use to such persons than it is to the pagan that never heard of it. The pagan follows his own feelings, and so do they, they both profess to be taught by the same spirit, the one, idolatry, the other sectarianism.

Editor Restitution:

Brother O. J. Allard came to Colorado, and beginning March 20th held a series of meetings in the Tuttle School House lasting two weeks. The attendance was very good from the first, but increased, and the last night there were [illegible] present. [illegible] were much interested and [illegible] God will bless the work begun here in Colorado.

Your Sister in Christ,
MINNIE ROGERS.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I will renew my subscription which is due, and send me some tracts for distribution. I have been away at a new place, and the people are anxious to learn, but are not very well advanced in Bible knowledge. They are not very prejudiced as yet, and I have been teaching the doctrine of the kingdom, and life only in Christ. I am not a preacher, but I gave a talk on the kingdom the first Sunday in April in the School House, and had good attention. I think I have done some good in this locality, and send my greeting to all the saints scattered abroad.

Yours waiting for the Christ,
F. P. HATFIELD.

[Brother Hatfield you do not need any commission to be made a preacher. If you know the good news—the glad message—and have the ability to tell it in a pleasing way, your have a right by order of the Lord Jesus Christ himself to go and tell it, and you will be blessed of God for telling the simple gospel story, more than are the learned D. D. lecturers of this day.—ED.]

Concerning Brother C. W. Tomkins, notice of whose death was given last week, we have the following. The clipping is the same that we had:

Editor Restitution:

I enclose a clipping which will tell you of the death of Brother Tomkins. There is not one of the faith in Kennewick, unless his son may be. I have corresponded with this brother for three years, and found him to be a well-informed man. I regret very much that I was not able to visit him. It is only a few weeks since I received his last letter, and he said nothing about being worse. I had intended to go and see him as soon as the weather would permit me to leave home, as I have been in poor health all winter. Brother W. H. Wilson was well acquainted with our Brother Tomkins.

Your Sister in the One Faith,
MRS. CLARK MCCLELLAND.

[Perhaps Brother Wilson can add something concerning Brother Tomkins.—ED.]

Dear Brother Underwood:

I herewith send renewal for THE RESTITUTION. I am a little late, having been short of funds. I sincerely thank you for still sending the paper. I am all alone here in the faith, so I prize THE RESTITUTION very much, as it is about all the preaching I have, and I could not do without it.

Your Brother in hope,
A. B. GRIFFITH.

Editor Restitution:

Sorry I am late with my renewal, and thank you for sending the paper right along. I am alone and would not do without THE RESTITUTION for twice its price. I wish you a happy and prosperous year in publishing the best paper that I ever read,

Your Sister in our Blessed Hope,
SARAH E. SMITH.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Send THE RESTITUTION here for a while yet, as we decided not to start to Oregon till the nights get warmer, as we are intending to travel with a wagon.

Best wishes for your future success, notwithstanding obstacles—these are trials—you will come off conqueror in the end.

Your Sister in Hope,
AZORAH M. SCHOOLS.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION proclaims the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Obituary.

June Ayers was born in Dork Co. O. August 20, 1824, and died at Holbrook, Nebraska, April 13, 1911, aged 86 years 7 months and 24 days.

She was married to Barton Harlan February 8, 1844. To this union were born six sons and six daughters, of whom five sons and four daughters survive her, also forty-six grand-children and [illegible] great grand-children ago.

Early in life she heard the gospel of the kingdom preached by Hornaday, Chase and others in Indiana, and was baptized, and remained a zealous member of the Church of God, and died in a strong hope of the soon coming of Christ and the resurrection from the dead. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. Being endowed with a strong vitality, she possessed her mental faculties to the last, being sick only a few day with pneumonia, followed by a partial paralysis of one side

She was possessed of a strong force of character. No amount of argument or persuasion induced her to swerve to the right or left in her conception of right or wrong. She has lived a consistent life, ever striving to merit the "well done" when Jesus shall come.

We discoursed to the sorrowing relatives and large concourse of friends upon the subject of the resurrection, after which we laid her away in Pleasant View Cemetery, nine miles south of Holbrook, near the home of her daughter Elizabeth Adams, to await the call of the last trump, when we shall be changed to immortality. May her children, grandchildren and great grandchildren seek to emulate her steadfast and holy life, and we all at last permitted to clasp glad hands joyfully in the kingdom of God to share its blessings throughout an endless eternity.

O. J. ALLARD.

The following is clipped from the Nevada, Iowa, Journal, and sent to us by Brother Joseph Fish:

Samuel Dickinson, an aged resident, died at the home of son, J. K. Dickinson, Tuesday evening, after a week's illness of pneumonia. The funeral was held at the home of his son yesterday afternoon, and the body was interred in the Colo Cemetery, Elder Campbell officiating.

The deceased was a native of Indiana, having been born in Brown Co. that state June 19, 1829. He was united in marriage to Mary Ann Fish in Howard Co. Indiana, March 10th, 1851. Of the children born to them, those living are Mrs. A. C. Barrett of Kellerton, Iowa, J. K. Dickinson of southwest of this city, and J. A. Dickinson of Lincoln, Neb.

Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson and children came to Story county in 1864, took up a farm in the Dalton neighborhood and that has since been the family home. He leaves two brothers and two sisters besides his widow and the three children to mourn his death. The brothers are James Dickinson of Walla Walla, Wash. and John Dickinson of Kellerton; the sisters are Mrs. Mary Kenworthy of Walla Walla, and Mrs. Emily Easton of Louisburg, Kansas.

Besides these there are ten grandchildren, and ten great grandchildren. All were with him at the time of his death except the son J. K. who is in a hospital at Iowa City.

The deceased was a member of the Church of God, and faithful in that belief until death called him.

There is a world of practical philosophy in Christ's teachings about losing one's life to save it. Only as a man spends himself in unselfish toil for others does he gain an insight into the true secret of existence. Not until he is lifted up on a cross of sacrifice can he obtain the broad vision of life, the clear understanding of brotherhood, and the full perception of truth that are the richest rewards the human soul can know this side the kingdom. If you would save your life from smallness, meanness, selfishness and death, then lose it by fearless service.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 26, 1911.

DEMANDS by our brethren for space are yielded to and we refrain from saying some things we had contemplated.

WE wish to again call attention to the plan given by Jesus himself for us to follow where there are differences between brethren—Matt xviii. 15-17. Let all of us get the Bible and read this over, and analyze it carefully to see exactly what our Savior wanted to teach us. Perhaps if we would do so, those who go about seeking to stir up strife, foster unrest, and make divisions would soon be checked in their nefarious efforts. Study the subject of busy-bodies, strife-makers, tale-bearers, and see what estimate God's Word holds such persons in. It might be profitable in certain localities.

ANOTHER class of persons who will do well if they do a little heart-searching, are those who listen to the slanderous tale-bearer, repeat the story and forming an opinion, never make the least effort to get "the other side." Are they afraid the "sweet morsel under their tongue" will lose its "sweetness" if exposed to the daylight? Brother, Sister, you who now peddle from ear to ear your libelous story, suppose Jesus Christ came to you this day, do you think he would listen very long to your recital?

Sunday School Lesson.

MAY 7, 1911.

Uzziah, King of Judah, Humbled.
2 Chron xxvi.

Golden Text.—"Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." Prov. xvi. 18.

The simple story of this lesson is that at the age of sixteen Uzziah, who was the son of Amaziah, king of Judah, on the death of his father, succeeded to the throne. He had for an adviser the prophet Zechariah. He followed after God, and was blessed in so doing. He organized the army and defeated the heathen nations round about him, strengthened his own nation, built fortifications, and in every way placed his country in a position to resist attacks from without. He paid much attention to the building of cities, and had a fondness for husbandry, and improved this branch of work. His army was well equipped with special weapons devised by cunning artizans, and engines for shooting arrows, and for hurling great stones were made, and his army became a mighty force, making him respected by the nations round about. God helped him, and was with him in all his undertakings, until one day he thought like many do in our day, that he could improve on what the Lord had mapped out for his service to be acceptable. In the temple services certain men were designated to perform the various functions, and even the king should not presume to perform this service.

One day Uzziah thought he would enter the holy place in the temple, and burn the incense upon the altar. Azariah the priest went in after him with four score priests of the Lord, and protested against this desecration, telling the king that he had no business to do so, as the priests were appointed for the purpose. The king became angry, and was determined to do as he pleased. He had a censer in his hand ready to burn the incense, and while in the very act he was suddenly stricken with leprosy, was put out of the temple, and made to dwell in a separate house, and finally died, his son Jotham becoming king in his stead.

In this lesson we have the sin of pride. Uzziah made a good beginning, the Lord prospered him, and he became great. Then he committed a grievous sin, and the Lord punished him for it with a punishment that shows the righteous indignation of God that one whom he had so helped should treat him so ill.

What led Uzziah to do that which was forbidden? Pride. He was strong the lesson tells us; successful, and his success was what led to that spirit of self-conceit that was his downfall. At the first Uzziah was humble, and while strength is good, and while success is desirable, yet when one becomes so puffed up with pride that he thinks that he is all there is, and no one else counts, not even God, then is when his fall is assured. Many men fall and are cast down by the same spirit that was in Uzziah. He wished to usurp the functions and position of another instead of sticking to his own business. He has a perfect example of that class of persons we can often see today, who seek to "run the whole thing"—who is said to be "stuck on himself." Such need to be reminded of the Golden Text—"Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

Pride alienates us from the good will of others, for no one loves the proud overbearing person. We are blinded to our own condition, and think we are stronger and brighter and better than we really are. We do not feel the need of strength and wisdom—for so much of that is in us already—hence we are shut off from the only real source of strength and wisdom, and we cannot draw supplies for the day as we have need. Pride in the heart of man is like leprosy in his person. There is but one source from which we can look for a cure. By keeping God with us, by cultivating humbleness of spirit, bowing to God's will on all things, we can not only be cured from pride, but kept from it altogether. Sooner or later pride will lead to destruction. If we take Christ for our example through the coming week, we will not be overcome by our pride. We can if we will behold each day his great courage at all times of his life, the lofty nobleness of his nature, his victories over temptation, and his utter forgetfulness of self, in his service to his fellows. If we keep these aspects of his life in mind we shall as we seek to emulate him, be kept away from pride and the destruction that follows in its wake.

Will we look to Jesus, and imitate him, do his command, each hour of this week?

Report of Labor.

In response to a call from the secretary of the Northwest conferences of the Churches of God in Oregon and Washington, we left our home in the Wenatchee Valley in the central part of the State of Washington, and went to Portland, Oregon, where we met Bro. Frank Smalley, President of the Northwest Conference, on Feb. 18th. One word of explanation as to the Northwest Conference, this Conference has been organized somewhere near thirty years and is made up of the churches of western Oregon and Washington. The churches of central Washington are formed into another conference, this was done for geographic reasons. There was at one time some three hundred believers in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God in the territory covered by the Northwest Conference.

On the evening of Feb. 18th, Bro. Smalley took me to Felida, Washington. This is a small place on the Washington side of the Columbia River some twenty miles from Portland. Owing to a misunderstanding there were two preachers here on this date, A. W. Darby of Corvallis, Oregon and myself. But it was arranged that Mr. Darby should speak at the morning meeting on Sunday the 19th, and myself in the evening. There were good audiences and good attention at both meetings.

On Monday morning we took an early train into Portland, from there we went by trolly to Forrest Grove, Oregon, where we went to visit Bro. and Sister Wm. Prosser. This was the first time that I ever met them, and it is truly encouraging to us younger members to find those who have run the full three score and ten years allotted to man, still strong in the faith. Bro. Smalley returned to Portland on the afternoon car, I remained at Bro. Prossers, spent the night at their house, we truly made good use of the time in talking of the blessed hope.

On Tuesday morning I went by car to Hillsboro, from there I took team out to Bro. D. W. Fiske. Sister Fisk notified the brethren that I was there and ready to begin a series of meetings on Wednesday evening Feb. 22. This was accomplished in a few minutes by telephone. The weather was good and the roads in fair condition, but there were only eight present at this meeting. This place is well known to the readers of THE RESTITUTION, for it was in the church house owned by the kingdom believers, and known as "Scholls Ferry Oregon." The records show that this church was organized in June 1867, it has in the past numbered its members at near one hundred, they owned a good comfortable house well furnished. But the doctrine of "fair chance" or "future probation" was introduced among them, and now as far as I was able to learn there are some fifteen believers at this place, the house that was dedicated to the worship of God is now being used by his enemies, that is to say people who preach the "Sky kingdom," even the secretary of the church told me that he had taken his own child to Newberg and had him baptized in the Christian church by the preacher of that faith. On Thursday evening there were eleven of us present; Friday, eighteen; Saturday, a smaller number, but on Sunday morning there was a very good audience and again at night the house was well filled. there was good attention given at all the meetings, and when I announced that that would be the last meeting the people expressed themselves as being sorry that I could not stay longer as they wished to hear more of the good news. But it was planned for me to go to Felida, Washington the following week so I could not stay longer.

On Monday morning Feb. 27th, I went into Hillsboro and took car for Portland, Tuesday went to Felida. As it was announced beforehand that I would be there was greeted with a good audience and good attention. Felida is about a mile and a half from the Lake Shore school house where the Kingdom believers met so many years, there was at this place at one time ninety members or more, as near as I was able to tell there were nine baptized believers attended my meetings, the same conditions and same doctrines that killed the church at Scholls did its deadly work here. There is a nice little white church here at Felida, owned by the kingdom believers, but they like the ones at Scholls have joined hands with the hosts of darkness and their houses being used to teach the doctrine of the immortality of the human soul, when their bell tings out the hour of meeting, instead of calling the people together to listen to the glad tidings of the soon coming King, they hear the doctrine of the enemy instead. I stayed here through the week holding meeting each evening, the people attended good and gave good attention, delivered eight sermons in all at this place. Closed on Sunday night, the people showed good interest and expressed a desire for more of the good news, but as our time was limited and we had other places to visit we closed with the Sunday evening service.

On Monday morning March 6th went back into Portland, remained there the remainder of the day, next morning took train for Corvallis, Oregon, here I found about twenty people who believe in the future reign of Christ on David's throne. They have a small church building, but comfortable, and furnished to their needs. I began Tuesday evening Mar. 7th, and continued through the week until Sunday night which closed the meetings at this place. The attendance was small at first but increased as the week advanced with a fair number out Sunday morning and evening. But it made my heart sad to find that while they had learned the truth of the future reign of Christ, yet many hold to the Christ dishonoring doctrine of his human paternity. Their leader A. W. Darby told me plainly to my face that he did not believe that Christ was the Son of God until after his resurrection from the dead. At the close of the meeting I was urged to stay another week and proclaim the glad tidings, but as it was the wish of the executive board that I should go to Eden, Wash., and our conference at home was set for March 30th, I had to leave at this time.

On Monday morning March 13th, returned to Portland, from there I went to Oregon City, stayed over night and next morning took stage for Molalla, Oregon sixteen miles away to visit with Bro. Hiram Cordill arrived just in time to take dinner with his daughter and son-in-law Mr. and Mrs. Marsh. Found Bro. Cordill in very poor health, as he is a sufferer with brights disease, yet it was a pleasure to look into his face once more and feel the warm hand clasp and hear him say that though he was afflicted bodily yet his faith was strong in the Lord, he is still waiting for the coming kingdom, may the loving Father watch over him and keep him from evil. Next day at stage time I bid good by to Bro. Cordill and returned to the city.

On Thursday evening March 16th, took passage on one of the Columbia River boats for Astoria, Oregon, arrived next morning at 6:30 A. M. Was fortunate in getting a boat that afternoon for the Washington side of the river. Arrived at Eden, Wash., at 6:00 P. M. was welcomed by Bro. Smalley and family. This is a small valley in the coast range of mountains. Notice was given over the telephone, and meetings began in the school house Saturday evening on the 18th, and continued till Thursday evening the 23rd. It began to rain very hard and made the roads very bad, so it was thought best not to try to hold any longer at this time. The attendance and attention at Eden was good at all times, and it was a pleasure to labor in such a field. On Saturday morning I went to Bro. Smalley's boat to Astoria, by traveling all night and the greater part of the next day was able to meet with the household of faith at their meeting in the evening. Of course no one was expecting me home until after Sunday, so it was a joyous surprise that was in store for them as well as myself to come in that evening hour. This is one of the greatest blessings of the Christian life, brotherly love, and by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples because ye love one another.

Brethren, I have given this faithful record of conditions as they now exist in the Northwest Conference, and I give it with sadness, it is truly a sad thing to witness the work of false doctrine, to count the number of the slain. And to think that a few have missed the deadly scourge of "Future probation" to now be attacked by the baneful doctrine of Josephiteism. Will they be able to stand? May God keep them by his power. The Master could surely see the end when he said, "Nevertheless when I come shall I find faith on the earth," and I fear if he delays his coming much longer he will not find many awaiting his coming. In my judgment, if there ever was a people who needed articles of faith to guide them, and a discipline to protect them from wolves in sheep's clothing, it certainly is the believers in the kingdom promises. I have tried to report conditions just as they looked to me at the time, have tried to do justice to all and injury to none. The words spoken and this report given is with the full knowledge that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ and give an account of the deeds done in the body. I fully believe that God has jewels in this field, may they ever prove faithful is my prayer.

Yours in the one hope,
N. D. TITCHENAL.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I have been reading the controversy in THE RESTITUTION about the ministerial association, and you may feel assured you have the sympathy of Mrs. Morron and myself, and I know if the rest of the members of the Salem church were to write you they would tell you the same.

We, or the ones I have talked with, or have heard express an opinion, are for you and the gospel. Human paternity of Jesus and Sabbath keeping, and other isms are not gospel any more than is immortality of the soul. Because a person claims to be a member of the Church of God does not make him so, any more than having been a member of a lodge, and having been expelled for conduct not tolerated by the body he formally belonged to, is a member still of that lodge. Because I believe Jesus is going to establish his kingdom on this earth, and because some other religious bodies believe the same thing, does not make me a member in good standing in that body, or in fact a member of that body, unless it was in my own mind.

Others may say Ohio is self-righteous, but I say no compromise between error and the gospel. Any person that denies Jesus Christ as the Son of God tries to make God out a liar, and is not standing on the foundation upon which the Church of God is built. So far as I have had any business dealings with you they have been very satisfactory. I give you my favorite for a case of your kind, Rom viii 28. We don't know why but we know it is so. Trusting this finds the friends of the truth with you. I remain, Yours very truly.

P. L. MORRON.

The Czar of Russia issued an edict prohibiting the Jews from bearing Christian names. It is no wonder that the Russian Jew is not disposed to Christianity when he comes to America. All that he sees in his native country makes him think of Christians as oppressive tyrants, who do not hesitate at any outrage.

Aversion to reproof is not wise, but is the mark of a little mind. A truly great man can bear reproof for the benefit thereby gained.

An Interesting Remnant.

Amid the world wide activities of the Christian Church no large place is given to the Samaritans, and the reason is obvious. They are perhaps the smallest religious sect that the world contains. They have this advantage, that they are all together, practically confined to the single town of Nablous, the ancient Shechem. Small in numbers, there is yet a deep interest attaching to them because of the prominent place they occupy in Scripture history, and in connection with the life of our Lord.

Modern Shechem is a town of considerable size, with a leading industry that does not seem to receive much support from the inhabitants themselves. That industry is soap-making, made possible by the abundance of olive trees in the neighborhood and the importation of alkali from the Hauran, but in no way noticeable as practically applied among the townspeople.

The Scriptural associations of the place were hardly in keeping with what we actually saw. Abraham and Jacob had been here; here Joshua held his last assembly of the people; here Jereboam led the revolt of the northern tribes from Solomon's successor, and here in later days the pagan colonists from Assyria were settled, from whose union with the remaining Israelites came the Samaritan people who were to abide through all the ages a striking witness to the truth of Scripture history. Today the city is, for the most part, mean and irregular, but still intensely eastern, with some western features strangely mingled here and there. The inhabitants are nearly all Moslems, and of a very fanatical disposition.

Undoubtedly the most interesting feature for an European visitor is the remnant of the Samaritan Church, still to be found here after all the centuries of war and change. Surrounded as the Samaritans have been throughout all these generations by an overwhelming population of hostile people, they have preserved themselves not only in existence but in the exercise of their religious duties.

Their Synagogue is a small white-washed chamber buried in one of the poorest and darkest parts of the town, to be reached only with difficulty and under competent guidance. On the occasion of our visit, a few months ago, we had to thread our way among crowds of scantily clad and unwashed children, and within the precincts of the Synagogue itself among several worshipers. The arrival of visitors from Scotland is not a daily occurrence, and the fact of our visit was quickly communicated to the High Priest, who at once appeared to bid us welcome. He had been a tall man, but was bowed down with the weight of years. He was spare in form, but with a look in his face and a dignity in his mien that was in striking contrasts to the poverty of his surroundings. Nothing could exceed the courtesy of his reception, and as he stood in the patch of sunlight that fell at the entrance of the dark little Synagogue, with a few faithful attendants around him, he seemed a figure from a far-off time. His features and those of his companions were strikingly Jewish, more so even than those of many Jews we met elsewhere in Palestine. He was simply but picturesquely dressed in a white surplice with a red turban, but with no other emblem of his priestly office. We learned that the office is hereditary in the family of the tribe of Levi. They still celebrate the Mosaic Festivals, and pilgrimages are made three times a year—at the Feasts of Unleavened Bread, of Weeks, and of Tabernacles—to the neighboring Mount Gerizim, which they esteem as peculiarly sacred. The Passover is still observed in accordance with the Old Testament ritual, but to this it is very difficult for a stranger to gain admission.

They hold as a priceless possession two copies of the Pentateuch, the only books of the Old Testament which they accept, and these they show with reverence and manifest pride to visitors. The rolls, which are undoubtedly old, but not so old as they are said to be, are placed on a special stand for inspection, and then carefully replaced within their coverings. The texts of these codices differ in several respects from the Jewish copies. Apart from the festival observances their worship is extremely simple, the prayers being repeated in the Samaritan dialect, and not in the colloquial Arabic of the country. As is to be expected, they are strict monotheists, abhorring all images, and the ascription in any way of human attributes to God.

The Samaritan Church is a very small community, numbering perhaps only about one hundred and sixty souls. As the remnant of an ancient people surviving to the present day, they have a public and an interest all their own, while their racial and historical connection with the Jews must always link them together with God's ancient people in the thoughts of Christian men. Their loyalty to what they believe commands our reverence, and we cannot but feel that to win men of such tenacity of character and purpose to the cause of Christ would be a great gain.—George Anderson.

"Without a Sacrifice"

We are writing just as the Jewish feasts are being kept in the autumn season. The Jewish New Year has been celebrated this year on 4th October, and the Day of Atonement falls on 13th October. Thereafter comes the Feast of Tabernacles, which is kept with great rejoicing as a thanksgiving for the vintage and as a memorial of the wilderness wanderings of the chosen people.

The ceremonial of the Day of Atonement, as prescribed in the Book of Leviticus, has been familiar to readers of the Bible. The two he-goats for a sin-offering and one ram for a burnt-offering, the bullock of the sin-offering for the High Priest to make atonement for himself and for his house, are the central objects in the ceremonial. Then the two goats come into prominence, when one is chosen by lot to be the Lord's, and the other for the scapegoat. With the blood of the goat chosen to be the Lord's, appropriately sacrificed, the High Priest enters within the veil, sprinkling it upon the mercy seat and before the mercy-seat, thus making atonement for himself and for his household, and for all the assembly of Israel. When this part of the solemnity was accomplished, atonement was shown in another form. To leave no doubt that sin was put away, the live goat is brought forward and the voice of the High Priest is heard by the gathered people, confessing, with his hands upon its head, their sins and iniquities and transgressions. The goat, thus burdened with the sins confessed, is next led away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness, and is there let go in the uninhabited waste. A niche on the ridge of hills in the Judean wilderness, visible to the naked eye from the temple platform, has been conceived as the spot through which the scapegoat disappeared, bearing the iniquity of the nation. "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all," would be the believing Israelite's glad explanation of this solemn ceremony.

There is nothing now in the observance of the Day of Atonement which speaks of sacrifice. It is true, that, on the day before, the head of the household sacrifices a cock for each male member of the family, an action which reveals the instinct of sacrifice deep in the heart of the nation to this day. But it bears no resemblance to the ritual of the Book of Leviticus, and it is difficult to see what satisfaction the devout heart can derive from it. There is now the fast for four twenty hours to which every Jew submits; there is no doubt, confession and repentance on the part of the believing and devout. It is sad that the Jew, the center and core of whose religious worship was sacrifice, should now be, in terms of Hosea's prophecy, "Without a Sacrifice." Thus it has been for long centuries, and thus he will remain with his deepest yearnings unsatisfied till he is led to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It is to point them to Him, their great Sin-bearer, that our missionaries labor in school, in hospital and dispensary, and in every place of meeting. The consideration of their spiritual necessities should move the hearts of Christian people to prayer and effort on behalf of Israel.

Brother J. B. Lent writes that he would like to see an exposition of Rev. xi. When opportunity offers we want to take up the study of this chapter. It has been suggested to us by several writers recently that the two prophets of Rev. xi. are Enoch and Elijah. When we pointed to the fact that they are to be "killed" (verse 7) and remarked that killing immortal beings did not comport very well with the idea of immortality, their answer was "Could not God keep these prophets alive all these years without giving them immortality?" Undoubtedly. Yes. But brethren, that supposition does not rest upon terra firma. Were we to grant that God has kept these two prophets "alive all these years" in a mortal state, the concession would only serve as a dynamite to destroy the idea that Enoch and Elijah are the two prophets of Rev. xi. I say, granting the absurdity that Enoch and Elijah as mortal beings have survived the ravages of time and disease, and will survive them until the Lord comes, then what? Simply this: They will be among the living believers of whom our Lord says they "shall never die." John xi. 26. They will be among them that "are alive and remain" (alive), instead of being "killed" as the two prophets are in Rev. xi. they will be "caught up together with them (the resurrected ones) in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thess. iv. 17. Wherever the two prophets are of Rev. xi they are not Enoch and Elijah.

Nebraska Berean Lesson. No. 6.

IMPORTANCE OF THE RESURRECTION.

I. Is the resurrection of Christ a part of the gospel which we must believe in order to be saved? 1 Cor. xv.

II. What evidence does Paul give to prove that Christ has been raised? 1 Cor. xv.

III. How does he prove that because Christ has been raised we are to be raised? 1 Cor. xv.

IV. Why does he speak of death as a "sleep?" 1 Cor. xv. John xi. 14.

V. If Christ "died for our sins" (1 Cor. xv. 3.) why is their forgiveness and our justification conditioned on his resurrection and our baptism? 1 Cor. xv. 17; Rom. iv. 22-25; Acts ii. 38.

VI. If saints go to heaven when they die, and are saved, as generally represented at funeral services, how could Paul limit "hope in Christ" to "this life only." If there is no resurrection? 1 Cor. xv 19. If heaven and salvation were possible before and without a resurrection, why would he "eat and drink" like a sinner, and say that the battles he fought with the beasts at Ephesus would not "advantage" him any "if the dead rise not?" Would not heaven and salvation and happiness there forever be an "advantage" big enough to strive for if there never was a resurrection? 1 Cor. xv. 19-32.

VII. Judging from the experience Paul had at Ephesus, as recorded in the book of Acts (which please read), and also from 2 Cor. xi. 23-28 were the "beasts at Ephesus" with which he fought, literal beasts or beastly men? 1 Cor. xv. 32.

VIII. Why is Christ spoken of as "the first fruits of them that slept" when some had been raised before him and others had been raised by him, before his own resurrection? 1 Cor. xv. 20; Heb. xi. 35; John xi. 43.

ANSWERS.

The importance of the Resurrection.

1. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. xv. 1-5 that in order to be saved we must believe the gospel, which he has preached; and a part of that which he preached was the death and resurrection of the Christ.

2. The evidence which Paul gives to prove that Christ has risen is that Christ was first seen after his resurrection by Cephas, by five hundred brethren, James, the apostles, then by Paul himself.

3. Paul has given proof of the resurrection of Christ in 1 Cor. xv 5-8 Death was brought into the world by man, Adam, and by man, Christ, man is to be redeemed, and for this purpose Christ died and was raised again.

4. Death is but a long sleep. We are unconscious in death as in sleep and at the resurrection we shall awaken as from a sleep of rest, to eternal life or to damnation.

5. Our only hope of having our sins forgiven and of being saved is by the baptism in the name of Christ. Baptism is a symbol of the death and resurrection of Christ. Christ was raised to immortality, we to a life of righteousness. If man can be saved without baptism then Christ need not have died for us. I couldn't make out all the references.

7. The beasts which Paul speaks of having fought, 2 Co. xi. 23-28; xv. 32, are not literal beasts, but the trials, hardships and the beastly men he had to contend with.

8. Christ is spoken of as the "first fruits of them that slept" because he was the first to be raised from the dead to immortality.

LILLIAN KING.

1. All the hope we have of ever living again, was begotten by the resurrection of Christ. Paul calls it the gospel, and it must have been among the first things he taught, hence he says "by which ye are saved." We must believe in his resurrection, for if he is not raised, it is all in vain, 1 Cor. xv. 14.

2. Paul says Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried and rose again the third day according to the Scriptures, that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, and then of more than five hundred brethren at once, the greater part of them being alive at the time he wrote. Then by James, then by all the apostles, and last of all by Paul himself, so it was an established fact of history.

3. The words of Jesus in John xiv. 19, because I live ye shall live also, and Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 22, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. It is because he is raised and has the power over death that we will be raised.

4 It seems to me that sleep is the best figure of death we have. When we lie down in natural healthy sleep, we are unconscious of all around us, until morning when we wake to a new day of work. So it is with the dead—they are to all appearances like one asleep, unconscious of everything till the morning of the resurrection when they awake to a new day. In the texts, 1 Cor. xv; John xi. 14, death is spoken of as a sleep.

5. There is no reconciliation by his death apart from his resurrection; for he was raised again for our justification. We are saved by his life. It is by believing the gospel and being baptized into his name, that we are in covenant relationship with Christ. We are the children of God, not by birth yet, but by faith in his Son. Legally his children by adoption, being baptized in his name, and heirs with him, Rom. viii. 17.

6. All we know about going to heaven is what Jesus told the disciples that he was going there, and they could not go. If heaven and salvation were possible without a resurrection, and we obtained both at death, resurrection would be of no use; and I would think that such happiness would be worth striving for. But Paul teaches that our hope is in the resurrection, and it is by the abundant mercy of God that we are begotten to a hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

7. Paul's fight with beasts at Ephesus was undoubtedly beastly men. He was preaching things concerning the kingdom. The Jews had looked for a king, but did not recognize him when he came. Even the apostles lost their hope when they saw him crucified, so what would be the use of Paul suffering, if the dead rise not? We could say, Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.

8. Christ is spoken of as the first fruits of them that slept, because he was the first raised to immortal life. The others were raised only to mortal life. Christ was the first born from the dead to a spiritual life, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18.

CARRIE FREE.

1. The resurrection of Christ is part of the gospel which we must believe in order to be saved. For, in the resurrection of Christ we have an assurance of our own resurrection. Christ is called the first fruits of them that sleep, 1 Cor. xv. 20, because the first fruits is an assurance of the following harvest. This is among the most important articles of the gospel. Paul says in 1 Cor. xv. 14, If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Verse 17, If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. The resurrection of Christ confirms the faith of those that believe on him.

2 Paul gives evidence that Christ has been raised by the Scriptures before this time. He also says that if Christ is not raised there will be no future resurrection of the dead, that we have no future hope and are left buried in our sins.

3. Paul proves that since Christ is the first fruits of the dead, then that sleep shall be raised in the same manner. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, 1 Cor. xv. 22.

4. Paul speaks of death as a sleep, for in death we are in a state of unconsciousness, the same as when we asleep, Job vii. 20; 1 Thess iv. 14; Acts xiii. 36.

5. Baptism is always preceded by the exercise of faith and repentance, and represents the fruits of repentance. It is an act in which the old man of sin is put off and the new man Christ, put on, Rom. vi. 3-6. Baptism is that form or mould of doctrine into which one is cast and made free from sin. This is the act by which, if one becomes united to Christ in the likeness of his death, he has the pledge that he also will be united with him in the likeness of his resurrection. By Jesus it is made absolutely necessary in order to an entrance into the kingdom of God, John iii. 5.

6. If all the hope we have in Christ is what we have in this life we are most miserable, for there is no hope in this life. The preaching of the immortality of the soul occurred first in Gen. iii. 4; it has been preached ever since. But Paul knew Christ was raised from the dead, and he had hope in the future resurrection of the dead. If the dead are not raised the only hope we have is in this life; then we might just as well do as Paul said he would do in the same situation—eat and drink, for tomorrow we die—see verse 33.

7. The beasts with which Paul fought at Ephesus were beastly men, Acts xix. 22-30. It does not speak here of any literal beasts, so it must have been beastly men.

8. Christ is the first fruits of the dead. Christ had immortality by his resurrection. The first fruits were a pledge and assurance of the following harvest. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruit, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming, 1 Cor. xv 23.

OLA CROUCH.

1. The resurrection of Christ is part of the gospel we must believe in order to be saved. Paul says in 1 Cor. xv. 1. Now I make known unto you, brethren, the gospel which I preached unto you, verse 2, by which also ye are saved. In verses 3 and 4 he tells what that gospel is, and that it is the same gospel which he had before received. As he received it from God it must be the true one. He gives three points of the gospel: 1. That Christ died for our sins. 2. That Christ was buried. 3. That he rose the third day. Here we are told the resurrection of Christ is a part of the saving gospel.

2. The evidence given by Paul to prove Christ's resurrection is found in 1 Cor. xv. 5-8. He says that Christ appeared unto Cephas, then to the twelve, then to over five hundred brethren at once, some of whom were alive at that time, then to James, then to all the apostles, and last of all to Paul himself.

3. To prove that we are to be resurrected if Christ is resurrected, Paul first points out the fact that they had believed in the resurrection of Christ. verse 11, "so we preached and so ye believed." In verse 12 he goes on to say "Now if Christ is preached that he hath been raised from the dead (which they believed) how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" He points out the conclusion of such a belief—"if there is no resurrection, neither has Christ been raised." They would be forced to deny that Christ had been raised. If it were true that Christ had not been raised then Paul's preaching and their faith would be vain, they were yet in their sins, and those asleep in Christ were perished. Thus Paul pointed out to the doubters of our resurrection that if they denied its possibility they must also deny that of Christ. If they denied Christ's then they were without hope and yet in their sins. They simply made salvation impossible.

In verses 20-22, he says that as death came by man so the resurrection comes by man. It is not hard to understand that by following our human instincts, the first Adam in us, we bring death to ourselves. We follow the first Adam every step, even into death. Just so by following the Christ, the second man Adam, we pass through the process of the resurrection, for Christ passed through it. One is as simple as the other.

4 Death is spoken of as a sleep in 1 Cor xv. 18, because to those who die in Christ with full assurance that they shall be resurrected, death is nothing more than a deep sleep. There is no fear for there is nothing to fear. We have God's promise for a future. We simply lose consciousness for a short time, and then awake to a more glorious life than this one.

5. The necessity of Christ's resurrection is seen in the meaning of the sentence "Christ died for our sins." This does not mean that Christ's death leaves a man who believes in Christ guiltless no matter what sin he may commit. God saw the world under the curse of sin and death, and sent Christ to actually demonstrate how man may come from under this curse. In this way Christ died for (because of) our sins. He broke the path to eternal life and leads. We must follow but work out our salvation just as Christ did. If Christ had not been resurrected Christ's example would have been no good to man, for we would have no reason to believe that the penalty of sin would be lifted, or that our sins had been forgiven. Forgiving a wrong necessarily precedes the lifting of a penalty for wrong doing. If the penalty was not lifted from Christ, it cannot be lifted from us, and therefore our sins would remain unforgiven. If the penalty was lifted from him it will be from us, providing of course that we follow him, and if the penalty is removed our sins are forgiven, and we stand justified before God, that is pronounced righteous.

In a few words then, the forgiveness of our sins, and our justification depends upon the recalling of the penalty the resurrection; our resurrection depends on Christ's resurrection.

Baptism is necessary to the forgiving of our sins and our justification, because it is one of Christ's commandments. He gave it as a type of the resurrection through which he passed and as the process by which we are adopted into God's family, and thus started on the path leading to righteousness and justification.

6. If saints go to heaven when they die, hope could not be limited to this life and made to depend so entirely on the resurrection, because such a process of gaining salvation does not require a resurrection. If heaven and salvation were possible without a resurrection, Paul would not have given the advice to eat and drink like a sinner if there is no resurrection, because then there would be every chance of losing the salvation. If however, the resurrection was the means of salvation, then he would have reason to say Go on sinning, for there would be nothing to lose or gain.

If salvation can be without a resurrection then Paul could not have said that his fight with beasts was to no advantage. There would be the same advantage that he gained because of resurrection, namely salvation. Paul brings out the point here that if there be no resurrection then it is useless to try to live a righteous life or to defend or prolong our life because there is absolutely no hope.

7. The beasts that Paul fought with at Ephesus were evidently men. The account of this trouble at Ephesus is given in Acts xix. 23-41. The mob attacking Paul was excited and without reason, verse 32. Some therefore cried one thing and some another, for the assembly was in confusion, and the more part knew not wherefore they had come together." In 2 Cor. xi. 23-28 Paul recounts his persecutions and all are persecutions of men.

8. Christ is called the first fruits of those that slept, because he was the first to be resurrected to eternal life. All other resurrections had been to the natural life only. Christ is the first of the human family to be perfected—the first to grow into a perfect fruit.

ALTA KING.

Sunday Morning Address.

Dear Sister, A. Roberta Lang:

We want you to realize the deep interest we take in you. With that end in view we shall endeavor to bring before your mind some of the blessedness that belongs to those who love and obey the truth. Next to the hallowed ordinance you obeyed last week this is the greatest privilege of your life; to sit at the Lord's Table. The good confession you have made rejoices our hearts; and we earnestly desire that this your first meeting at the Lord's Table may be a great blessing to you; that in the days to come you may look back to it with pleasure and delight, and think of it as the place where the love of God and Christ were more fully comprehended. In this ordinance we see Jesus who was made like unto his brethren, a partaker of flesh and blood nature, that through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death. Here we see not only that Jesus was made like unto his brethren but the necessity of it also: that he might "destroy him that hath the power of death," which Paul tells us is sin; and John says, "Sin is the transgression of law." God's law has been transgressed by all but Jesus. He knew no sin, although he was tried under the law which required his death, yet he never flinched; he put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. Oh how we should love him for the great work he accomplished which made it possible for those words of assurance to be written: "Justified freely through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus;" "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ;" "Therefore there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."

My Sister, you can learn by reason of the richness of God's grace in Christ Jesus, but you must search because no man can come to the Son except the Father draw him." John vi. 44. How does the Father draw us? He has made exceeding great and precious promises; and if we love them we are drawn to him. So you see it is necessary to know what promises have been made to us before we can be drawn of the Father. Jesus said the words he spoke were "spirit and life;" and in the last Epistle of John 5th chapter and sixth verse we find it is the "spirit is the truth;" then Paul says, "as many as are led by the spirit of God, are the Sons of God."

After learning of God's promises it is very important that we keep them in memory, as an apostle has told us that memory is a means of salvation. 1 Cor. xv. 2; and I entreat you not to acquire the habit of reading anything trashy—besides being nothing to it, it will unfit you for the study of every thing real and substantial. Paul's advice to the young man Timothy is especially good for our day: "Give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine..... meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all. Take head unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." What wholesome words these are and how they are needed today when we are flooded with light literature of all kinds. By reading the apostle we understand he means the reading of God's Word, for by it we are to obtain salvation. But I would not be understood as saying we ought to read nothing else, there are many valuable helps to the study of God's Word, and much has been written by those who knew the truth that is instructive and as entertaining as many of the works of fiction, therefore I say, surround yourself with literature of the truth; make use of all the helps you can get, then you will be a shining light to those in darkness; a help to your brethren; a joy to your parents; and a partaker of God's salvation in the age to come. Surely this is inducement enough because it includes the glory, honor, immortality—everything that Christ is heir to.

The other great point of the apostle's exhortation to Timothy is "meditation." To meditate is to think of, dwell upon the subject we have in mind. Keep God's promises before your mind; think of them often; be like your Lord and Master, who, for the joy set before him endured the cross and despised the shame. Yes, remember him when called upon to suffer for his name. It will help you over many rough places. You must get thoroughly acquainted with yourself; all your failings so as to watch against them. This applies to us all and especially many we strive for self-control; for one to fly into a passion in a moment shows that the truth has not done much for him yet. Strive to acquire the mind of Christ, then you will be transformed by the enabling influence of the truth. My dear Sister, be out and out for God and truth and righteousness; and the prayers of this church will go with you. That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, that the eyes of your understanding being enlightened you may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of the mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead. We commend you to him who is able to keep you from falling, and present you faultless before the presence of God's glory with exceeding joy." Amen.

"Your fellows have but one way of estimating you, and that is by results. Every one makes mistakes, but if we profit by them as we should, we shall reduce the number. Everybody fails sometimes; but no one has a right to fail all the time. It is a good thing to mean well, but the world has a right to expect us to do well. Get results."

"May we so search, aided by the true Light, that we may not break one of the least of Christ's words, and teaching them to others, may be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

"It is more needful to be able to 'suffer long and be kind,' than it is to preach with the tongue of an angel."

"The Lord's coming will be "in a moment," and if we have become entangled with the affairs of this life, that "moment" will pass by, and we will be among the "left" ones.

When he had Given Thanks.

The following forms of "grace before meat" have been compiled for the use of those who lack words:—

"O God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, teach us, as we live upon thy bounty, to live to thy glory; for Christ's sake. Amen."

"O Lord, our heavenly Father, thy mercies are new every morning and fresh every evening. Give us hearts of gratitude, and let us find acceptance in thy sight, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen."

"Bless this food in our use, and us in thy service."

"We thank thee, O God, for this food; may we spend the strength it gives in service to thee."

"We thank thee, our Father, for thy remembrance of us, and for thy provision for all our needs."

"We recognize in these mercies the hand of the giver, O thou who givest liberally and upbraidest not. May we, in recognition of thy bounty, use the strength it gives in more acceptable service to thee."

"May this food, our heavenly Father, remind us of our need of the true Bread, of which if a man eat he shall live forever."

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and let all that is within me bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."—The Christian Advocate.

Warmth of imagination, ardor of feeling, neatness of reasoning, and fluency of expression can do but little. The true agent is a perfect abandonment before God, in which we do every thing by the light which he gives, and are content with the success which he bestows. This continual death is a blessed life known to few. A single word, uttered from this rest, will do more, even in outward affairs, than all our most eager and officious care. It is the Spirit of God that then speaks the word, and it loses none of its force and authority, but enlightens, persuades, moves and edifies. We have accomplished everything, and have scarce said anything.—Fenelon.

What are we here for? Fashioned in the image of God; endowed with reason and a love for an immortal life; "crowned with glory and honor," why are we here? We are here that the Lord may find fruit. For this we are walled about with privileges, for this we are planted in the garden of the Lord, watered by the dew of his blessing and sunned by the light of his countenance; if we bear no fruit, then everything is vain. All the love of God the Father in vain; all the agony of the blessed Savior in vain; all the work of the Holy Spirit in vain; all the precious promises, all advantage and opportunity in vain. All this given, and yet no fruit—then is our life an utter, awful failure.

Bigness of the Trifling Wrong.

A great deal that is right can be fatally marred by a very little that is wrong. It takes only a little thing to spoil a big thing. An outing in the finest and coolest of country air, with the best of meals, the most luxurious of houses, and the most comfortable and sleep-inviting of beds, may be ruined by the bark of a dog or the hum of a mosquito—if either one keeps faithfully at it through the night. A mere trifle like that unchanged more than one paradise into an inferno. It takes only a single serious trifle in the character of an otherwise strong, attractive man or woman to more than blot out all the attractions which might count for much. It does not pay to overlook the little things in our surroundings or in ourselves. It may seem an unfair principle, but it is inexorably true, that a little that is bad will more than offset a great deal that is good; while a little that is good will not offset the large evil. How it does behoove us to be vigilant against all evil, no matter how tiny and trifling!

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in The Restitution some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question incited in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

A Letter to A Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy to understand, convincing in argument, that it goes as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years it is yet full of good for all. Sixty the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express at lower rate will gladly be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you can not preach a series of sermons to your friend, buy a copy of this letter send to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly resist the little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom." During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the work he and you they should, and to encourage you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

The article on Salvation, What is it? which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. If is printed in full in English so that those who can not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Jaeger, Leon, Barberton, Ohio.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his post office so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Scraps stick together and are useless. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say so—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So simple is it—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve copies for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when he is ready puts up an envelope that has been examined to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, has neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

Our times are in thy hand, O Lord;
Thou knowest where we seek or bleed;
We all trip my feet upon the sward
That slopes toward the fowly to-de.

If so soon the time may be
But bring to earth eternal light,
No change may come to me
Death shall drown the shades of night.

Thing Thy love my soul is led
O sweet pastures, kind that so

COVENANTS.

God's purposes are eternal. Hence the constant care over his children. His laws are binding. Hence the current giving of them. His promises are sure. Therefore they may be depended upon. His covenants are steadfast. Hence the necessity of keeping them. All through the ages God has covenanted with his people. Sometimes with individuals, sometimes with nations. When God covenanted with Noah, it was necessary for him to do just as the Lord told him in order that he and his family with a specified number of animals be carried over the flood.

When he covenanted with Abraham, Abraham did not understand all, and tried to work in his own way, but it was made plain to him that the Lord knew best and that he must be governed accordingly. Consequently Abraham was willing and anxious to do as the Lord bade him, for he believed God and it was imputed to him "for righteousness." So with Isaac and Jacob, they each were anxious to do as the Lord directed for they knew that through them (as the seed of Abraham) the blessing of the nations would come.

The promise was renewed to the Israelites. Ex vi 4. Here we have the covenant with a nation. One promise to them was, Ex xix 5, "If you will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people."

In all these we see the necessity of obeying; not our will, but God's will must be done.

Coming again to the covenant with Abraham we read Gen xvii 7 and 9, "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after." "And said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou and thy seed after thee in their generations."

Notice the "Thou shalt" in this last verse. Not, that Abraham could do as he pleased but he must do as he was commanded. So with us, we must do as the Lord directs.

Gal iii 27 and 29, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Let us see to it that we do as the Lord directs, and not think that our way is just as good. Let us be willing to say as did Christ in the Garden, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." Matt xxvi 39.

LYDIA RAILSBACK.

ELIJAH.

Elijah was a Tishbite, who was one of the inhabitant of Gilead. His early life was spent among the mountainous part of the country. He said unto Ahab there shall be no dew nor rain these years. Elijah went to the brook Cherith. Then the Lord commanded the ravens to feed him. He went and did according to the words of the Lord. The ravens brought him bread and flesh. Elijah was furnished with water by the brook. Then the brook dried up, and he was furnished with water in an ordinary manner. Then the Lord told him to arise and go unto Zarephath, and when he came to the gate of the city he saw the widow woman gathering sticks. And he called unto her and said, "Fetch me a little water in a vessel, that I may drink. As she was going after the water he called unto her to bring him a morsel of bread. And she said, I have not a cake, but a handful of meal, and a little oil in a cruse. And Elijah said unto her, Fear not but do as thou hath said, but make me a little cake first, and bring it unto me. She did as he had said and there was always meal in the jar, and never became empty. After the disappearance of Elijah there was a great famine. Ahab searched the kingdom to find him. At the expiration of the three years the king sent Obadiah in search of pasturage for his starving mules and horses. While performing this duty Elijah appeared unto him. Ahab charged the prophet with troubling Israel. But Elijah told him that he and his father's house were those who brought trouble and sorrow to Israel. Then he proposed a test between himself and his false prophet, to see who was worshiping the true God. Elijah prepared an altar, and the prophet of Baal prepared an altar. The prophet of Baal called on their God to set fire to their sacrifice. But there was no fire. Then Elijah called unto his God, and the fire came and devoured the sacrifice. When the people saw it they said, "The Lord, he is the God." Then Elijah destroyed all the prophets of Baal. This made Jezebel angry. She sent a message to Elijah saying, So let the gods do to me and more also if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by tomorrow about this time. When he heard this he arose and fled to Beersheba. He went a day's journey into the wilderness and sat down under a juniper tree and requested that he might die. As he lay and slept under the tree an angel touched him, and said, Arise and eat, and he did eat, and laid down again. Then the angel came again, and said unto him, Arise and eat because the journey is too great for thee. And he arose and did eat and went with the strength of the meat forty days and forty nights. Then he went unto Horeb, the mount of God. There he came to a cave and lodged there, and the Lord came unto him and said, "What doest thou here Elijah." And he said I have been very zealous for the Lord God of hosts. For the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altar and slain thy prophets with a sword, and even I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away. And God told him to stand upon the mount before the Lord, and behold the Lord passed by, and then there was a strong wind, then there was an earthquake, and after the earthquake a fire. Then there was a still small voice, and when Elijah heard it he wrapped his in face in his mantle and went out and stood in the entering of the cave. And the Lord said unto him, Go return to the wilderness of Damascus, and anoint Hazael to be king over Syria. Hazael becomes one of the most powerful kings of Syria. Then he anointed Jehu king over Israel. And this king destroyed Baal worship out of Israel. Jezebel said unto Ahab, Why is thy spirit so sad that thou eatest no bread? And Ahab said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth, the Jezreelite and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money, or if it please thee I will give thee another vineyard for it, and he answered I will not give thee my vineyard. Jezebel said, Unto him dost thou not govern the kingdom of Israel, Arise and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry. I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth, the Jezreelite. Then she made a plot to take Naboth's life and then Ahab took the vineyard. God was now to take a hand in this wicked affair and pronounce swift judgment upon them. When Elijah met Ahab he prophesied an unnatural death and stated that dogs would eat the blood of the king who contemplated a death of an innocent that he might possess his property. On this day, the last of Elijah on earth he went by divine direction from Gilgal in the direction of Bethel, accompanied by his servant Elisha. Elisha had been associated with Elijah for several years. Elijah requested to Elisha to remain behind while he pursued his journey alone. But Elisha said unto him, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth I will not leave thee. The two went on to Jericho, and there he repeated his same message. Then they went on to Jordan. Elijah said, What shall I do for thee, before I am taken from thee? The asked for a double portion of his spirit to be upon him. And Elijah said unto him, Thou hast asked a hard thing, but if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee, but if not it shall not be so. Then there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both, and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

ETHEL CORDAY.

2 John Verse 10.

The text reads, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed."

In the last six months I have noticed the above verse quoted at least half a dozen times; and by its connection in the articles in which it is given I have not been able to know what doctrine is here referred to.

I will now make an attempt to show by the Scriptures what the doctrine is that John warns us not to receive.

In Isa. xi. we read of the Spirit that was to rest upon our Lord, "The spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord." These are all good spirits; but John writes, "Beloved, believe not every spirit... hereby know ye the spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of antiChrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." The true spirit here is that Jesus was born of Mary—came in the flesh of our common humanity, and was anointed by or with the Holy Spirit and therefore—the Christ of God. Now it is well known that in John's day there was a different spirit in the world, that John says, is the Spirit of antichrist. Now if we can discover what is the spirit, the most prominent spirit of antichrist we have found the spirit John warns us against. Paul gives us the key: in 2 Thes. ii. 4, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple, shewing himself that he is God." There is but one church from the days of the apostles until now, that manifest this lordly, exalting spirit, and it teaches Christ's pre-existence; therefore virtually denying that Christ came in the flesh. John again, in the foregoing context to our text call attention to the same spirit of error. "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist." It is plain that the truth is, that Christ came in the flesh." 2 John v. 7, again v. 9, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." The moment we antichrist-like leave the truth and adopt trinitarianism we lose God and Christ.

GEO. FRANCIS.

Whom Say Ye That I Am?

In Matt. xvi. 13, Jesus says, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and Jeremias or one of the prophets. Christ then says unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter—the spokesman answers—"Thou art the Son of the living God"—not A Son the (only) Son—the only Begotten Son. After commending their answer—Christ affirms—"upon this Rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

It has seem to me for some that the gates of hell have been making a terrible fight against this rock, on which Christ's Church—our Church is founded. Only now, instead of "Elias or Jeremias," it is—a son of Joseph they call him.

Isaiah said (Isa. vii. 14,) "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son and they shall call his name Immanuel." Stop and think! Born of a virgin! that requires a sin, or a miracle. Do you for dare to say, that God's plan of salvation required a sin, to carry it out?

If there were no other evidence that should settle the question—when you throw out Matthew and Luke, you must add the grand old prophet Isaiah.

Of all the terrible errors that have crept into the Church there is none so terrible in its blasphemy as this one. There is no doctrine in orthodoxy so poisonous and deadly as this one, for it strikes at the very foundation of Christ's Church. We are not surprised to find it rampant in the Universalist and Unitarian Churches, for they throw out all miracles,—but you will find it more or less in every Church.

In this town in the Presbyterian Church the minister is a Josephite, though he does not preach it, as there are some who would object—and he avoids everything that could in any way bring discussion. But do not you, my brothers over the disrupted Christ's church—he will see to that. No mere man or group of men can disrupt his Church. If there are eruptions, and breakings away, it is only that the Truth and the true servants of God, may be made manifest. Watch and listen—from whom come the Words of truth and soberness; but meanwhile speak with no uncertain sound yourselves, whether you will stand by the Bible—the Word of God—and the Rock on which his Church is founded—or listen to men who would push these one side and give us instead their opinions. But do not lose courage like Elijah, and think there none left to serve the Lord. He has now, as he had then, seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal.

F. M. CHAPMAN.

Dear Brother Underwood,

I just want to send a word of greeting to the household of faith scattered abroad, to let them know that we are still strong in the faith of the gospel. And that we have been favored with another visit from our much esteemed brother, W. H. Wilson. We were glad as we always are to see Bro. Wilson and to see him looking so well, and enjoying such good health.

On Sunday evening at our home, he gave us a very interesting and instructive lesson from one of his charts, subject, "Russia and Prophecy as a sign of the Times." Now I want to say that this is a feast of good things, and an opportunity that we seldom have to enjoy. And especially those who are isolated, as we are, will know how to rejoice with us, on such an occasion. Several of our neighbors were present, and all seemed to be interested, and several expressed themselves as being benefitted, and it may be that the good seed was sown. Bro. Wilson is an excellent teacher, and he presents the truth in such a manner that no one could become offended, no matter how much they might differ in their opinion from him.

We always appreciate a visit from Brother Wilson, it is so kind of him to come to see us. As it is many miles out of his way to come to Brownwood, but Bro. Wilson is in sympathy with the isolated ones, he knows it is a comfort to us to have some one to talk with, on that theme of themes which is above every other to us, he knows his coming is for our good, it strengthens and encourages us to fight on. Oh, how we long for communion and fellowship with those of like precious faith, but even if we can never enjoy this blessed privilege, we are thankful to have such a good paper as THE RESTITUTION which comes to us every week. We have just today been reading our paper of April 12, in which appears an article from the pen of Brother W. H. Wilson, in answer to some one searching for light. While we understand what is meant by the "Commonwealth of Israel," the subject never grows old to us. O how we do enjoy and appreciate such articles as this one, so plain and beautiful. Surely every one who reads our paper who have not heretofore understood this subject will be convinced after reading Brother Wilson's letter, that it is a vital one.

Before closing, we wish to say to Brother Underwood that we like THE RESTITUTION as well as ever, and we want every Brother and Sister who write for the paper to know that we appreciate their every effort to carry on such a grand work. We appreciate too, the good exhortations from Brother Underwood to stay close to what is written. Paul thought it necessary in his day to exhort certain ones to, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." 2 Cor. xiii. 5. And to Titus he says, "Rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith." Titus i. 13. "For there are many vain talkers and deceivers teaching things they ought not to teach," verses 10, 11. Could not we err concerning the faith now as then? Most assuredly, for we all well know that we are living in "perilous times" which Paul said would come in the last days, when people would be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." He says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," but he says, "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of." 2 Tim. iii.

We trust none of these things apply to the readers of THE RESTITUTION. Let us all be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. xv. 58.

We remain, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

MRS. A. J. MARTIN,
MRS. ERNEST CRUNDWELL.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Find inclosed $2.00 for THE RESTITUTION for last year. I am sorry I have been so late in sending it. I pray that this may not happen again. I could not get along without the paper for next to the Bible it is dearest to my heart. I could not get another paper so dear. I think some times I am too careful of them. I loan them and give them to whom I am sure will read them; but they are too precious to throw in the scrap basket and destroy otherwise, so I exercise care somewhat before I give them and loan them. I would spare them all but I know so many homes I might put them into would never look at them at all. I have loaned them to ministers to read an article and they have returned them without making any reply whatever unless I have asked them. Why do not the people love the truth? They do not listen nor will they take heed. I dont think all localities are as hard to receive the Word of God as they are here, and yet it is a city of churches, but they are perfectly satisfied with the faith they already possess. We will wait the coming of the Lord and he will make it all right. We will trust in him.

Your Sister in Christ.

MRS. J. F. MILLER.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find $1.50 to renew my subscription which runs out this month. We are well pleased with the articles on the Signs of the Times, for the signs certainly do speak the near approach of our dear Savior. We see more and more the failure of human government. So we should certainly earnestly continue to pray Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. We hope for more articles like Brother Wilson's and Moyer's. We would like to write often for your paper, but age, infirmity and disability will not permit.

Yours, in the Blessed Hope.

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 3, 1911. NUMBER 17.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

They Say.

"They say" that Brother Underwood has been guilty of receiving money from brethren and giving nothing in return.

"They say" that he has systematically done this kind of business for years.

"They say" that brethren everywhere have been thus victimized.

"They say" that reports and complaints of this nature are coming in from all parts of the country, in short "They say" that Brother Underwood whom we have loved and respected all these years is a thief. Who says so? THEY!

Certain individuals who hope to profit by Brother Underwood's downfall have circulated these reports broadcast wherever he is known giving as evidence of their truthfulness only this "THEY SAY."

No man can defend himself until a specific charge has been made. "They say" is a coward's weapon. An individual who will stoop to use such a means to destroy the standing and reputation of another that he himself may profit thereby, is in no sense a brother, and should not be recognized or addressed as such. In view of the fact that in the absence of any specific charge Brother Underwood is utterly powerless to defend himself, I suggest that the membership of the Church of God come to his rescue in the following manner.

The writer has been a subscriber for THE RESTITUTION for many years and during that time have paid Brother Underwood considerable money for various purposes in connection with the truth, and always with complete and perfect satisfaction. I have implicit confidence in his honesty and integrity and denounce the efforts of certain individuals to injure his character and reputation as base and cowardly in the extreme.

Let every brother and sister from Maine to California who can truthfully add a similar testimony do so at once. This is in the writer's opinion the shortest route to peace and a restored confidence in the Church of God and THE RESTITUTION as its chief organ and a duty devolving upon every brother and sister who have the love of God and his blessed truth at heart.

S. H. THOMAS.

Editor Restitution:

With the greatest of pleasure I send you my dues for the dear old RESTITUTION. I pray God to save his messengers of his Word, and I also pray that they may have more of the spirit of Christ and less of the spirit of the tempter. "This is my commandment that ye love one another as I have loved you." O what love he had for us poor week dying mortals, that he gave his life that we could rise from the dead.

MRS. AMY JOHNSON.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find draft for $2.50 for renewal of my subscription to the paper for one year; and $1.00 for the Helping Fund.

Will you please have explained through the columns of THE RESTITUTION, what is meant by "These are the two Anointed ones," Zechariah iv. 14,—and oblige, your Sister in Christ.

MRS. C. B. EVERETT.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, OFFICE EDITOR

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 3, 1911.

A MEETING was held in the City of Plymouth, Indiana, on last Thursday, report of which is given in this paper. Those called to attend were the State Conference Board, the Bible School Board, Elders of several of the Churches, with the Committee on the June meeting at Antioch.

During their deliberations they saw fit to pass some resolutions concerning THE RESTITUTION. They had been informed that there was a "demand" that the management of the paper be changed, and they proposed to put on record their ideas regarding such change. Their resolutions are based on the "if such change be made" they, the Conference Board of Indiana, and the others whose names are signed, "recommend" certain things set out by them.

The first point is that the paper be purchased by the "Church"—a "stock company" does this mean? It is not real clear, as it further says "by stock subscribed by the Church." We take it they wish the Church of God to own and control its organ, and not one man, or a set of men, to own and control it. They want the Church of God to be owner of it, and to be able to dictate its policy in every way.

This strikes the present manager just exactly. It has been the dream of his life that some sweet day the Church of God would rouse up, take to herself her sovereign rights, and define her policy definitely. Make herself so strong and settled that she could deal with those placed in charge of her literature who did not meet her requirements; and also deal with her teachers—her "ministers"— who did not teach—preach—in accord with her declared policy. In short, that she might have the power to "discipline" and call to a halt those who went contrary to her in acts or words. Several years ago a General Conference was called in Philadelphia, and it was thought that this might be accomplished, but the attempt ended in failure, one reason being that those in attendance did not fully agree regarding what the doctrinal policy of the Church should be. Another General Conference was held the year after in Chicago, and that likewise failed. A sort of general understanding as to what the Church stood for was formulated, and that brief outline has ever since been at the head of THE RESTITUTION. However, any attempt to work in any sort of "discipline" to regulate the teaching of the Church's ministers or writers was frowned down, and nothing came of it.

Last summer another General Conference was called to meet at Waterloo, Iowa. The question arose at the Indiana June Conference whether or not Indiana should be represented there. The matter was referred back to the Indiana Churches to severally inform the President of their wishes. The Plymouth Church took action, and the manager of THE RESTITUTION was the person who wrote the resolution that was passed by the Plymouth Church. It provided that if the Conference to be held at Waterloo, was for the purpose of creating better literature—paper, hymn book, Sunday School lesson papers—give the Church workers more and better things to work with—then the Plymouth Church favored Indiana being represented. On the other hand, if the end and aim was to discuss certain questions that were in dispute, and which could only tend to further disrupt and annoy, then the Plymouth Church did not favor Indiana being represented. The history of that last General Conference is fresh.

The two questions that the Church at Plymouth by its action did not favor going out to Waterloo to discuss were the human paternity of Jesus and the Sabbath. The reason for this was, that the Indiana Conference saw fit to pass resolutions defining its stand on these points, and so far as Indiana was concerned they were settled. Hence discussion on them was ended. They were not open questions before Indiana.

The fifth resolution passed on last Thursday by those who assembled at Plymouth (and be it known to you that the manager of THE RESTITUTION was not even told that such a meeting was called till it was right on, and had not one thing to do with influencing a single person who was there) the fifth item passed by those at this meeting, shows that they stand exactly where the present Editor has ever stood, and where the Indiana Conference stands by its own declarations. With these brethren we are in perfect accord—that the Church of God should own her own organ, dictate its policy in every respect, and have power to remove whoever does contrary to her wish.

May the Lord's blessing attend all efforts to make the Church of God a united and strong force for good in these last days.

WE give place to a few only of the many letters of sympathy and loving affection that come to us daily. Dear Brothers and Sisters, we cannot write letters expressive of our gratitude, but take this means of thanking you each, and may the dear Church of God and each one of us come through the refining fire purified from all the dross.

Editor Restitution:

Referring to my article in your issue of April 19, on the "Signs of the Last Days," in justice to the parties referred to, please say that I have received information assuring me that the paper deliberately lied about the matter of a certain clubbing. Giving the exact quotation—"I want to say that if what you published you got from a newspaper or from any other source, it makes no difference. They misrepresented and lied." This shows to me that a newspaper report is not to be relied upon at all, and let me say brethren, don't ever rely on such a report in the future.

Yours in the work,
O. J. ALLARD.

Many reporters, especially those writing up "Society" events, draw on their imagination to color up and give "tone" to their department of a journal. This is often done to please those interested, and it is easy to see how a very simple and harmless gathering of ladies for a hours' visit may by a "smart" reporter be made into "quite an affair." Then again, the reporter may not be to blame so much. In most cases he is not present and must depend on some one to give him information, and here comes a chance for a practical joker to have some "fun," or perhaps a jealous one to "get even." So we learn to take such reports with a large "grain of salt." Perhaps, too, we can learn the truth that to all stories there are two sides, and no man is EVER justified in forming an opinion from hearing one side only of any matter. Next time, Brother Allard, ask the persons most interested, and get the facts, and thus we will avoid ill feelings.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I want to write you a word of encouragement, as I know you are sorely tried, and the burden of our dearly beloved paper, THE RESTITUTION, on you besides. We know what it is to be persecuted, and when it comes from one whom we had loved, it seems all the harder to bear. But the Father above allows nothing to come to us only what is for our good, and we are told in his blessed Word that when we are persecuted for righteousness sake, great is our reward. On the other hand, him that offends one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. We must know these trials are only to refine us and make us more pure. But my brother, you do not suffer alone, for we all suffer together. If it came from outside of the Church it would not hurt the cause we love near so bad. However, we are not surprised, for Paul said that after his departing grievous wolves should enter in among them, not sparing the flock, and we see this right now, for every false teacher will get some to follow him. If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him.

May the Lord bless you in your trials, and give you grace in every time of need, and spare you to take care of our dear old paper for many years yet to come, or till the blessed Master comes and calls you to a higher position, is the prayer of your Sister waiting for eternal life when Jesus our Savior comes.

MRS. M——— S———.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I enclose $2.00 for the Helping Fund or for whatever use you wish to put it. My faith in you and THE RESTITUTION has never wavered, and I want you to continue to guide its course as in the past.

May you receive a reward in God's kingdom commensurate with your duty to God well done in this life.

Your Sister in the One Hope,
MRS. J. E. HATCH.

Sunday School Lesson.

MAY 14, 1911.

Isaiah's Vision and Call to Service.—Isaiah vi.

(Home Missionary Lesson.)

Golden Text.—"I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." Isa. vi. 8.

In the study of this lesson it is well to go over the writings of the prophet Isaiah, and get a knowledge of his whole life, as in this way we can better comprehend the part relating to the lesson proper. Isaiah was one of the major prophets, and while some of our higher critics seem to think that the evidence is conclusive that Isaiah did not write the whole book that bears his name, the fact remains that nine several quotations are made from the disputed parts in the New Testament writings, and the [illegible] that can be made of the attacks on the prophet Isaiah is that if not the book was not written by him, then there must have been two Isaiahs and that leaves the critics as lost as ever—perhaps worse.

The most important feature of the writings of Isaiah is found in his universal genius. Excellence is the one word that comes to all his writings. One writer says "All kinds of writings appear equally easy to him. He is equally at home in pathos and scorn: he can paint natural scenery with ravishing beauty, or sing an ode of triumph with ravishing power. He is lyrical and dramatic. In depth and breadth of sympathy he is unrivalled." Professor Moulton says "Even in literary form the world has produced nothing greater than Isaiah. Nowhere in the literature of the world have so many colossally great ideas been brought together within the compass of a single book."

While Isaiah was a prophet and a writer, he was also a politician, and took a prominent part in the affairs of the nation. He lived in the troublous times that saw the Assyrians come, and the national conscience of the whole of Israel and Judah was paralyzed, as was also the national religion. While Samaria was destroyed, Judah was left for a time, but her independence was gone, and it was during this period that in every department of national, social and religious life Isaiah was an important factor.

Coming to our lesson we have Isaiah's vision. What was this vision? "In the year that king Uzziah died." That is to say that in the time when the crowned monarch of the earth, he whom the Lord had so greatly helped and blessed, was brought low, and became a loathsome outcast, dying in disgrace, and all the pomp and show of worldly power which had surrounded him was brought to nothingness—then, under this condition, "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne." Within the Holy Place where Uzziah had dared to come, Isaiah now saw the curtains drawn aside and a lofty throne, with the Lord in all his glory seated thereon, and his train of attendants filling the place. The seraphim were there, and proclaimed in responsive service the glory and the grandeur of him who sat upon the throne. Never could Isaiah doubt the being and the glory and the power of God. One part of the seraphim sang "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts," and the response from the other side came "The whole earth is full of his glory." With the force of the mighty proclamation the foundation of the house was shaken, and the smoke of incense filled the place.

Why was Isaiah so affected by this vision? The answer is clear. He was a Hebrew, and they believed that no man could see God and live. Here he was, and the very presence of God was manifest to him, so he felt himself undone, unclean, unworthy to be in such a presence. Then what happened? One of the seraphim, a messenger from near the throne of Jehovah, came and by a process made him clean—purged him of his sins.

A message must be delivered to the people, and it required a person who could be trusted to do this without fear, and who was fitted by his natural ability for the service. The Lord will not coerce or drive any one into his service, but calls for volunteers. At this call Isaiah offers himself. He says, "Here am I, send me." His cleansing made him fit for such a service, and perhaps he would thus show his gratitude to God for so honoring him. There was no questioning as to what the service should be. Whether to kings and rulers, or to the lowly. Whatever was required he was willing to do.

It was not a pleasant message the prophet was to take. It comprehended that they would not accept the warning. That they would hear and not understand. See, and yet not perceive. That the eyes would be blind, and the ears deaf. Wickedness should grow in spite of what the prophet told them. The land should be desolate and the people should be removed.

By a vivid form of speech the result of Isaiah's message is put for its purpose. We have an instance of this where God is said to have hardened Pharoah's heart, but we must remember that Pharoah had repeatedly hard ened his own heart. We are not to take this as teaching that God will prevent any one from repentance and salvation. He is "not willing that any should perish," but desires that all come to him, and he has made the blood of Jesus Christ sufficient for all who will come to him, even to the uttermost.

Isaiah had one longing desire—he would know how long this was to be. Would it be an utter end of the kingdom of God? He is given a hope. He is made to see that there will be a remnant. Even as with Elijah God had other seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, so would there be a remnant, a springing up as the sprout of an oak tree after it is cut down and seemingly lost.

This lesson teaches us that one man heard God's call to service, looked up and beheld Jehovah, and answered "Here am I, send me." The question for each of us is, Do we hear the call? Do we heed the call? When Isaiah saw the glory and the holiness of God, his own sinfulness was manifest. He must "get right with God" first of all. This is accomplished when his lips and his very heart are touched with a live "coal from off the altar."

Have we seen God? have we realized our sinfulness? have we been cleansed from our sin? have we heard the call to God's service? Have we heeded the call, and gone forth in response earnestly seeking to do all we can? Are we spending money, strength and time in this service?

Dear Brother Underwood:

Sister Thompson and myself desire to extend our sympathy to you on account of the recent attack made by designing persons on the management of THE RESTITUTION. We believe that you are honest and sincere, and hope that you will continue to manage the paper.

While these persons have made Bro. Underwood a target, their real reason for so doing is apparent, to get the patrons of THE RESTITUTION dissatisfied with the management, and by so doing, get control if possible. They desire to dictate the policy of the entire Church of God, and if they were successful we know what the result would be. All kinds of error would be taught, which would be disastrous to the Church. We pray the Lord will bless you in your work, guide you in all things. You hold an extremely important position, that of being manager of the medium whereby God's Word is sent broadcast through this country, and we hope you will be successful in combatting all your enemies.

We were glad to read your recent article explaining your position. Some things in it which we did not know we were glad to learn; other things that we did know we are glad for others to know as well.

Yours for the Truth,
J. C. THOMPSON.

Editor Restitution:

I will send you money for the paper. I have been sick with rheumatism all winter, and am hardly able to get around.

I am overjoyed to know you are taking the right stand in defence of the truth, and have kept the good old RESTITUTION held up to the proper standard. I have been a reader of it in all its phases, and it is better at the present time than ever before. I hope it will be kept as it is now. I am glad to hear of the movements of the Jews. I hope to see the return of our Lord, for the wickedness of the people is very great.

Yours waiting for the coming of the Master,
DAVID RENNER.

Dear Brother & Sister Underwood:

You have my sympathy, confidence and respect and love in your trials. He that sayeth he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

INDIANA CONFERENCE NOTICE.

To the brethren of the Church at large, Greeting:

Through the benificence of God we are brought through another cycle of time, and to announce again the call to a Conference of the Churches at old Antioch, beginning Friday morning at 10:30, June 9th, continuing over Sunday.

Let love pervade your hearts, and in thankfulness for the health and strength and prosperity given you during the year just past, lay aside worldly strifes for a brief season of praise and song to God, who gives us all things. Let us pattern more closely after our blessed Savior than ever before, and come in the spirit of gentleness and childlike confidence to labor in the Master's vineyard.

With all the work of the master-minds that have wrought at this place before us, let us come again with willing hands and determined spirit to place this year's work in credible place among the annals of old Antioch.

As usual come to Conference prepared to stay for Bible School the following week.

Those coming to Plymouth please write Brother F. M. McCrory, 214 Sophia Street, Plymouth, so that arrangements can be made for conveyance to the Church. Those coming to Argos notify Brother Frank Boggs or Sister Jane Taber, both of Argos, and you will be cared for.

Program will appear later.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, June 1-4 inclusive. It is hoped there will be a large attendance at this meeting, as there is important business to come before the Conference at this time. Then, too, we all need the spiritual uplift and the encouragement that we get at such meetings. Many of us are isolated ones that seldom hear a gospel sermon, and let us all put forth an effort to meet at this time, praying that God may richly bless us.

Incitement of Environment.

"I well remember two lathesmen in the old machine shop in which I worked for eight years. Miller had charge of the speed-lathe gang. He was almost as big as an elephant, and to look at him one would suppose that his movements must be slow and ponderous; but the swift little machine that he had been operating for years had so influenced him that it set the pace for his every movement.

"Thompson ran a six-foot lathe down in the basement, where the heavy machinery was installed. He was a typical American—tall, muscular, alert. But young Thompson had also come under the control of his machine. His lathe made only one revolution to that of hundreds of the 'Dutchman's,' and he moved with all the deliberateness of his slow-moving iron monitor. Both men were unconscious victims of their own environments.

"Every mechanic can recall how the rhythmic sounding of a hammer's blows seems to set pace for the movements of the entire shop. Whether that young fellow whistles a merry tune, or one that is heard most frequently at funerals, means either profit or loss to the employer."

Report of Conference Board Meeting.

At a meeting of the Conference Board, Bible School Board, Program Committee for June Conference, and others, including Elders of Churches, held at Plymouth, Indiana, April 27, the following was adopted:

Inasmuch as it is demanded by a portion of the Church of God that the management of THE RESTITUTION—the official organ of the Church be changed from that of the present time, then if such change be made, we, the Conference Board of Indiana in Conference assembled, recommend the following:

1st, That the paper be purchased by stock subscribed by the Church.

2nd, That the Editorial and Financial policy be in the hands of the stockholders through their duly elected Board of Directors of five brethren.

3d, That the stock shall be so distributed that a controlling interest shall not be held by less than five persons.

4th, That the Editorial policy shall not be left to any single person, but aside from an Associate Editor they each and severally shall be amenable to the Board of Directors who may have power to remove each or both Editors and appoint others in their stead.

5th, We not only recommend, but we demand that the policy of the paper on doctrinal lines be in direct line with that of the present.

Those present at the meeting were:
F. M. McCrory, 1st Vice President.
Samuel Osborn, 2nd Vice President.
William Huffer, Treasurer.

Obituary.

Mary Ann Taber Shirley was born July 10, 1835, in Marshall County, Indiana, on the old Taber homestead on Michigan road south from Plymouth. She was the daughter of Samuel D. and Jane Taber, and was the last survivor of a family of eight children. She grew to womanhood under the parental roof, sharing the strenuous burdens of the pioneer life. She availed herself of all the educational advantages of the community, and afterward attended college at Logansport, gaining a good education for that day.

She was united in marriage to Philemen Shirley in 1857. To them was born one daughter, Sarah Frances. Her husband died in 1861, since which time she lived a widow, residing with her daughter until her death in 1889, and then made her home most of the time with her nephew, Herman Taber, where she died April 27, 1911, at the age of 75 years, nine months and 17 days.

She united with the Church of God at old Antioch in 1856, [probably this date should be 1865, as Antioch was not built till the 60s.—ED.] where she remained a member in good standing until death.

She has been a great sufferer from physical disability for a great many years, and has not been able to walk for the past 16 years, making it a burden, but her great natural strength of constitution carried her in years beyond the allotted time of three score years and ten. At last she has fallen asleep in peaceful rest.

She leaves as her nearest relative and friend, Herman Taber, to whom she had been a foster-mother. She leaves four other nephews, two neices and other relatives to lament her loss.

Funeral services were held April 30, 1911, from the Church of God in Plymouth, conducted by the writer, and she was laid to rest in Oak Hill Cemetery to await the resurrection morning.

The Promised Land.

The land of promise has lain waste,
And that throughout the ages;
But God has ever watched o'er it
In all its various stages.

He promised it to Abraham,
For he was the friend of God;
Because he took God at his Word,
And did just what he was told.

God will raise Abram up again,
He is sleeping in the dust;
And all the faithful rise with him,
For in this grand hope we trust.

The heathen has possessed that land,
And laid all its cities waste;
They trampled down its fertile plains,
Fulfilling God's Word in haste.

But God will sweep them out of that;
It will cleanse that land from sin;
Christ will then sit on David's throne,
And reign all the righteous in.

The First Resurrection.

REV. XX. 5.

"This is the first resurrection." On the strength of this statement it is contended by some that the unworthy will not come out of the grave when the "blessed and holy" emerge from the tomb. This idea results from giving the word "resurrection" too limited a meaning. Primarily the word anastasis, resurrection, means that the dead are to stand up again in life; but the resurrection of the righteous means infinitely more than the mere act of rising from the dead. While "resurrection" involves the rising out of the tomb it comprehends more than this. Since the coming forth of the righteous is a coming forth to life (John v 29), immortality (1 Cor xv 42 46) and to "thrones" (Rev xx 4) in the kingdom of God, it is clear that resurrection is but introductory to kingdom glory, and therefore in its fullest meaning comprehends within itself the whole post-resurrectional state. Thus, "In the resurrection, whose wife shall she be" (Matt xxii 28); that is, in the state, the immortal state, to which the dead will rise. Paul preached Jesus and the resurrection. Acts xvii 18. Certainly his message was not confined to the mere act of rising from the grave. To merely emerge from the tomb is not necessarily a good thing. Lazarus and others were brought to life, and they emerged from their tombs; but they did not attain to the resurrection (state) preached by Paul and Jesus. They only received a renewal of mortal life. Now when Jesus comes again the wicked amenable to God's law emerge from the tomb; but the act of rising will not be to them a gladsome event; they would prefer to be left forever in the oblivion of hades, for they pray for rocks and mountains to cover them and hide them from the face of the Lord their Judge. "They that have done good (shall come forth) to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation" (Jno v. 29); that is, one class come out of the grave to one resurrection-state or condition of things, and the other to another resurrection-state or condition of things. Everything depends upon the state to which the rising from the dead is the introduction. Paul and Jesus preached the resurrection state of incorruption and immortality. Emerging from the grave but introduces into this state. The act of rising is involved; it is a part of the resurrection, but as employed in Scripture it requires the life, glory, and kingdom of the righteous, the shame, punishment, and death of the wicked, to complete their resurrection.

The "first resurrection" spoken of in Rev. xx. 5 then is not the first ones to emerge from the grave. There is no mention of the act of coming out of the tomb; for they had already emerged from hades when John saw them. What is the first resurrection, John? "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them * * * they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection." John sees certain persons on "thrones," immortal rulers in "judgment" for a thousand years; and in describing this scene he calls it the first resurrection. Many will participate in this resurrection who will never go into the grave or emerge from it, viz: "those who are alive and remain." Resurrection is a work of such broad significance that it comprehends a state and time to which the persons seen are introduced by rising from the dead, whether they are entombed in graves or living on the earth in mortality.

To this interpretation of Rev xx 5 only one objection can be raised. It is claimed that "first" implies a second; and therefore the righteous are raised "first" and then after the 1000 years the wicked are raised. But this objection only has weight when it is assumed that "first" is used in the sense of time. Protos, here translated first is elsewhere translated "chief," and means according to Young, "foremost." I repeat then, that John does not say the act of rising is the first resurrection, for no such act is shown, but the resurrection state to which they had already attained. It is first then, not in order of the dead emerging from the grave; but of rank and blessedness, just as the uppermost rooms at feasts were the first rooms; the best robe for the prodigal was the first robe; Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, was the first city; Paul, the chief of sinners, was the first of sinners. Read Matt xx 27; Mark vi 21; xx 44; Luke xix 47; Acts xiii 50; xxv 2; xxviii 7, 17. Protos is translated chief as well as first, which shows the word refers to dignity and rank and not time. See Acts xvi 12; xvii 4; xxv 2; 1 Tim i 15; 1 Cor xv 3. In this sense Christ is declared to be the "first" raised from the dead. Rom viii 29; Rev xx 9; Col i 18; Acts xxvi 23; 2 Cor xv 23. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection" (the chiefest and highest resurrection). Every one who is the subject of this "better resurrection" (Heb xi 35) will be seated on a throne as judge with Christ during his reign; he will be immortal and have kingly honors; while the unworthy will only emerge from the grave to be "ashamed before him at his coming," and be enveloped again in death—the second death from which there is no deliverance.

The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship. No. 2.

Three important facts are to be noted concerning the events of the fifth seal. First, that the action of the Traditors "was productive of much present scandal and of much future discord;" and third, that the attempt to "destroy every copy of the Holy Scriptures served to endear these writings to the faithful."

History often repeats itself; the same principles produce like results in whatever age they operate. Too low an estimate of the Holy Scriptures is as certain to produce "scandal" and "discord" in the nineteenth century, as it did in the fourth, and the effort to impair their authority will "endear these writings to the faithful and stir them up to a more diligent study of their contents."

Behold, then, a warning and a consolation; a warning to the Apologists of a fallible authorship, and a consolation to the uncompromising defenders of an infallible Bible. It cannot be denied that the former contention come from those of the apostacy who do not rightly appreciate the Word of God, and that, however it may for a time deceive some earnest brethren, it has been welcomed by many who, in some respects, had already departed from the truth, not to speak of others who had previously stumbled and subsequently recovered from their fall. Facts such as these, although no basis for argument, more than counterbalance the weight of those who claim to be "the most intelligent brethren," and "of largest and most matured experience in the truth." Intelligence is useful when regulated by divine wisdom, but without such control, it becomes a snare instead of a guide. It is necessary to remember that the Scriptures have, in all ages, been suppressed or perverted by "a highly educated and learned few." From whom does false teaching nearly always arise? Is it from those whose mental endowments are below the average, or from such as have been highly gifted with natural talents and specially favored with the means of cultivating them? History and experience point to the latter. There is far less to fear from some obscure brother whose knowledge of his mother tongue is so defective that he cannot put together a dozen consecutive sentences than there is from one who is able to use either tongue or pen in an attractive manner. Ability is no guarantee of stability; neither do learning and intelligence ensure skill in the elucidation of divine truths. Both human and divine knowledge may have the effect of puffing up (1 Cor. xiii. 4.) The greatest desiderata are love for God and faith in his Word, combined with a reverent and childlike humility toward the voice of wisdom. When these exist, either in learned or unlearned minds, they produce men of God, "Thoroughly furnished unto all good works." "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I (Jesus Christ) speak of myself" (John vii. 17;) "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant" (Ps. xxv. 14;) "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding" (Job xxviii. 28."

Ye "most intelligent" and "matured brethren" describe our action "in the matter of fellowship" as a "mere mechanical test." If by this ye mean that it is wholly confined to a mechanical act, ye are laboring under a delusion. If ye mean that fellowship has nothing to do with a "mechanical test" ye are equally in the wrong.

What action is there in this life which has not its "mechanical" or physical aspect? Is there one? If ye meet a friend, ye make use of the mechanism of your hand and arm to greet him if he does likewise, your intercourse is agreeable; if he refuses, the result is the reverse; the attitude ye take towards each other is thus dependent on a "mechanical test." And has not fellowship in the truth a mechanical aspect? The bread and the wine cannot be partaken without bringing into play some part of the bodily mechanism. Neither can the mind express itself by speech or pen without mechanical action of some kind. When, by this means, two or more minds are found to be in harmony in their scriptural belief, they go through the mechanical process of eating bread and drinking wine, and this becomes to them a test of fellowship. If such a course be right concerning that which the Bible teaches, how can it be wrong when applied to the authorship of that which is taught? If it be permissable to say that some parts are of erring authorship, on what ground can ye refuse fellowship to any who describe it as embracing a foolish authorship? If God permitted error in the work of inspiration, what guarantee have ye that he excluded folly? Or malice? Or injustice? Or falsehood? Or any of the positive or negative defects of sinful flesh? If the control of the Spirit of God was inefficient in one thing, why not in another? If it allowed man's ignorance to prevail, why not his passions? They both "alienate from the life of God" (Eph. iv. 18; Rom. viii. 13,) and they are equally obstructive to the light which comes from him. To describe the contention for infallible inspiration as a "wrangle over its mechanical construction," and fellowship action in connection therewith, as a "mere mechanical test," is to adopt misleading phrases, which obscure the vital issues involved.

I remember twelve years ago a brother, of no small intelligence, declare on one occasion, in connection with the agitation about Christ's nature and sacrifice, that he did not fellowship doctrines, and on another, that he did not fellowship bodies. When asked what there was left to fellowship, he was non-plussed. That brother has since then so logically applied this principle of negation that he is now in the condition of believing and fellowshipping "nothing and nobody." A similar end may await some of those who slightingly use the word "mechanical" in reference to the character of inspiration, and the fellowship arising from it. If so, it will be but the logical and consistent outcome of such a mode of treating a question of vital import.

When the rules or regulations of any society have once been made, it is recognized that they cannot be abrogated, except in the prescribed way, by the organization which brought them into operation. Thus the articles of association of a public company cannot be rescinded or enlarged unless the shareholders in meeting assembled so decide. But if there be no flaw in the process, neither the original nor altered clauses can be disputed; they are often found fault with, but their authority is not questioned; and the infraction of some of them is attended with legal penalties. If man-made regulations require such safeguards, how immensely more important that those of divine origin should be jealously protected by the individuals for whose benefit they have been enacted.

The legal profession is related to the laws of the country in a similar way to that which exists between the sons of God and statutes from heaven. The members of that profession deal with the laws as they find them. Though taking antagonistic views as to their meaning they do not question the authorship or authority. Imagine the dismay of a judge on the bench if a barrister not only discussed the meaning, but disputed the authorship of any Act. If human rulers are so justly sensitive to the treatment of their administrative acts, how much more jealous must be the Ruler of heaven and earth respecting all writing in which his statutes are embodied. Those statutes are not confined to simple commands and interdicts; the principles on which they are based are presented in great variety of form that may be interesting to, and comprehended by, every kind of mental organization; that which is not appreciated by one mind is highly valued by another. To allow any one section to be taken away is to mar the perfection of the whole, and interfere with the object for which it was given.

Ye "most intelligent" and "matured brethren" define the truth to be "a natural fortress whose defences are impregnable." What mean ye by this? And where did ye learn it? By what "natural" forces has the truth been elaborated? Is it by some kind of Darwinian process? Have ye discovered in reference to the truth some new theory of evolution? Know ye that one of the latest Bible-nullifying pamphlets issued from the press—whose author prefixes "Rev. Dr." to his name—is entitled, "The Evolution of Revelation?" It teaches that "the Old Testament Revelation is specifically a revelation of hope in God's redeeming grace," and theorises of "revelation by a development, in which divine truth is certified to us as such, not by mere documentary statements, sometimes fallacious, but by our moral consciousness, contemplating both the historical process of its progressive disengagement from the errors sometimes confounded with it, and the historical outcome of its evolution in the manifestation of the divine Christ." To identify "the moral energy of inspiration with an intellective accuracy that is exempt from error," is described as a fallacy, and the Bible is defined to be "not really a written revelation, but a revelation that has been written about."

These statements are cordially approved by a religious newspaper whose editorial intelligence cannot be questioned, and whose numerical circulation has probably no equal. Some of them read very much like the resolutions and reasonings of the Church of God who countenances fallible authorship, and others are but a fuller application of the false principles recently enunciated. Beware, ye "most intelligent" and "matured brethren," that ye be not driven from your present unsafe moorings on to a quicksand where no anchor can secure you. Or, if ye succeed in holding fast in spite of a broken chain, take heed lest your bad example does not cause others to make "shipwreck" of the faith (1 Tim. i. 19,) and their ruin be ascribed to you.

How is it that some of you "intelligent" and "matured brethren" are willing to "resist evil," contrary to Christ's command (Matt. v. 39,) when directed against yourselves, but refuse to resist an evil attack on the Word of God? Have ye forgotten that your Father hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5?) And is your faith in his protection so small that you cannot, indeed as well as in word, say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me?" (v. 6.) How is that ye are so ready to excuse yourselves from defending God's Inspired Word, on the ground of your superior faith in him? Do ye not recognize that ye, like the apostles, are "stewards of the mysteries of God" (1 Cor. iv. 1,) as revealed through holy men? that your stewardship requires you to protect the Book which is the only divine revelation of those "mysteries?" and that "it is required in stewards" that they be found faithful," (ver. 2?) See ye not that ye relegate to God a duty which has been specially assigned to you, and that ye take upon yourselves that which God has expressly reserved for his Fatherly "care" (1 Pet. v. 7?) See ye not that faith is misapplied in leaving God to defend the authorship or teaching of his Word, and that it is defective faith which leads you to set aside the divine law of protection and resort to human powers for deliverance?

An illustration of stewardship pertinent to the subject is seen in the office of Librarian, whose duty it is to protect from mutilation the books under his care. The Bible is a series of books by one Author, but different penmen, a library, in fact, of divine inspiration. It has been given by God to his stewards:—"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and unto our children forever" (Deut. xxix. 29.) That which is true of outward Jews is no less true of inward Jews. Those revealed "secrets" or "mysteries," "the wise" only can "understand" (Dan. xii. 10.) They have all been given like the Apocalypse, "to shew unto God's servants" the divine mind concerning everything which they comprise, whether facts or predictions, doctrines or commands. What is the duty of "God's servants" in reference to a revealed Word given for their special benefit? To protect it from corruption (2 Cor. ii. 17.) This is admitted as to the teaching. Why not as to the authorship? Is not the latter equally important, may more so, than the former?

The "good stewards of the manifold grace of God" (1 Peter iv. 10,) will, from their appreciation of the divine favor, carefully guard everything relating to its gradual development from the first announcement in Eden (Gen. iii. 15,) to the closing invitation, "Let him that is athirst come" (Rev. xxii. 17.) They will object to additions or erasures by uninspired man. They will not, for instance, allow the word sky to be inserted before "kingdom;" the word immortal before "soul;" the word Triune before "God;" the word impersonal before "coming of Christ," the word superhuman before "Devil;" neither will they knowingly permit sprinkling to be substituted for "baptism," heaven for "earth," torment for "punishment," nor happiness for "life," and they will object to the pen being drawn through the promises to Abraham, the offer of immortality, the predictions of Israel's restoration, or the descriptions of the millennial age. Any one of these alterations would seriously impair the character of God's "manifold grace" or revealed favor. Is not the title-page as much within the scope of their protection as are the pages which follow? If so, how can they be faithful to their trust if they allow the word human to be coupled with "divine," uninspired to be associated with the word "inspired," or fallible to be joined to "infallible" before the word "authorship?" The library of which they are the custodians has written over its entrance, All these books have been given by inspiration of God (1 Tim. iii. 16;) they are not the word of man but the Word of God (1 Thess. ii. 13;) and woe be to him who adds to (Prov. xxx. 6,) or takes away what is written therein" (Rev. xxii. 19.) Of this lamentable collection of books the sons of God are all librarians, and it depends on their fidelity to this trust whether their names continue in, or are blotted "out of the book of life" (Rev. iii. 5.) Addressing the rich Pharisees, Christ says, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" (Luke xvi. 10, 11.) This principle is of wider application. Faithfulness in dealing with God's revealed Word, in all its aspects, will be the test of our acceptance in the day of judgment; if unfaithful in our treatment of "the Word of life," how can we expect to receive the "life" itself? (Phil. ii. 16.)

Confidence

HEB. X 35.

Cast not away therefore your confidence which hath great recompense of reward. Brothers and sisters, in the study of this subject of "confidence" I find that I could start at Genesis and follow on to Revelations and quote nearly every verse—I never realized how full the Bible was of it although I have read most of the quotations I have selected many, many times yet they never impressed me as they do now—I find that we are nothing without confidence in God—because in Lamentations we are told that "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness." What creatures are we that we can trust in our own strength and when that and all earthly help fails us turn to God as one last resort—does he not say in Isaiah xl 6, "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is a flower of the field—The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand forever"—do we realize how entirely dependent we are on God's mercy—yet he not only entreats us to trust in him and cast not away our confidence but he confirms it by an oath. Heb vi 17. He wants us to come to him as little children to their natural father—trusting, confiding, resting secure in the knowledge as feeling that whatever he decides is absolutely sure and true depending on him for guidance and protection. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes." So you see a man's station or standing in life goes for nothing, because all flesh is as grass which today is and tomorrow is not." All is vanity—nothing endures. This is strikingly illustrated at Westminster Abbey in London where so many kings and queens have received their crown; the coronation chair is so close to the tombs of former kings that it seems but a step from the pinnacle of earthly glory to dust, ashes and oblivion. King Edward was reigning when we visited Westminster six years ago, and now he is but a memory. This is the life we cling to brothers and sisters, so uncertain, when we lay down our earthly burden will we remain but a memory or will God remember us. It says he knoweth them that trust him and the memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. He begs us to hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence and his children shall have a place of refuge. How often we need that refuge.

This is the confidence we have in him that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us, if he hears us we know that we have the petitions desired of him. What things so ever ye desire when ye pray believe that ye receive them and ye shall have them. Isa l 7, says, For the Lord God will help me, therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know I shall not be ashamed.

Brother and sister, in the face of all the testimony in the Bible, how can we lack confidence—we cannot even say with certainty that we shall see the light of another day—our strength is but labor and sorrow so soon passeth it away and we are gone. But we can say with certainty that God is ever mindful of his children, he will help them who truly trust in him, his ears are ever open to the prayers of the righteous. He is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee—he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. Psa. xxiii. He that endures to the end shall be saved.

A Boy I Can Trust.

"I once visited," said a gentleman, "a large public school. At recess a little fellow came up and spoke to the master; and as he turned to go down the platform, the master said, 'There is a boy I can trust; he never failed me.' I followed him with my eye, and looked at him when he took his seat at recess. He had a fine, open, manly face. I thought a great deal about the master's remark. What a character had that little boy earned! He already had gotten what would be worth more to him than a fortune. It would be a passport to the best office in the city, and what is better, to the confidence of the whole community.

I wonder if the boys know how soon an opinion of them is formed by older people. Every boy in the neighborhood is known, and opinions formed of him; he has a character either favorable or unfavorable. A boy of whom his master can say, 'I can trust him; he never failed me,' will never want employment. The fidelity, promptness and industry which he has shown at school are prized everywhere. He who is faithful in little will be faithful in much."

The Inner Life.

It is impossible for us to make the duties of our lot minister to our sanctification without a habit of devout fellowship with God. This is the strength of it. It is prayer, meditation and converse with God that refreshes, restores and renews the temper of our minds at all times, under all trials, after all conflicts with the world. By this contact with the world unseen we receive continual accesses of strength. As our days, so is our strength. Without this healing and refreshing of spirit, duties grow to be burdens, the events of life chafe our temper, employments lower the tone of our minds, and we become fretful, irritable and impatient.—H. E. Manning.

This is reasonable. "Would you like to be a judge?" said a gentleman to a little boy. The child, after thinking a minute, replied, "I think I should like better still to teach children about Jesus dying to save them. That will make them love and obey him; and if they loved and obeyed him they would not need a judge."

Report of Meeting.

We, the Church of God at Moriah, Clark County, Illinois, hereby report the series of meetings held at this place April 2-16th, by Bro. S. J. Lindsay. There was very good attendance considering that the weather was unfavorable throughout the meeting. Much interest was manifested altho' none submitted to baptism in the all-saving name, yet several we believe could truly say, like king Agrippa, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

We believe the seed sown may germinate in honest hearts, and e'er long bear fruit to life eternal. We had service each favorable evening at the Church, and Bible lessons each afternoon meeting at the homes. We had some excellent sermons and admonitions both for doctrine and reproof given in the spirit of love and sincerity as is characteristic of Brother Lindsay. He does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, closely adhering to the essentials of the gospel.

We feel that the meeting was not in vain, but that much good was accomplished in various ways. Brother Lindsay portrays the beauties of the Word in a plain concise way, and by type and shadow, making it attractive for study as well as our first duty to ourselves and to God.

Our meeting together was an agency of strength to our body here, making us more zealous in the Lord's work, and more watchful for the soon-coming King.

May all be prepared to meet him, is our hope and prayer.

Controversy was the life of Paul's work—polite controversy—brotherly controversy; but strong in exposing error and building up truth. The epistles are full of controversy. Moreover, many of Christ's sayings were strictly controversial. It is more than a fine art to combine in one sermon the forcible overthrow of an error and a heartfelt appeal; but it is possible to attain unto it."—Dr. Buckley.

Goodness comes from within—from thoughts, feelings, desires, resulting in life and action. Greatness is the consequence of bold action, ambition, large energy, enterprise, perseverance.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. The letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good to all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will be made. Brothers and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom." During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address sq they will know where to write—address 185 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan White, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the first issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be examined to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and all of these essential for final salvation.

The Vision of the Ages.

[The following verses are by H. J. Prosser, except those referring to Michael and the dragon, the rise of Mohamet and the papacy, the crusades, and the rise of democracy, which are added by the writer.]

On Patmos, desolate lonely isle,
In the wild Ægean Sea,
Wandered an old man in exile—
The last of the twelve was he.

His brow was pale, and his step was slow,
And his beard was long and white,
As his hair like a fleece of drifting snow,
Was tossed by the winds in night.

And there, in that dim dark solitude,
Alone in his wild despair,
Where the steps of a foe might not intrude,
An angel found him there.

And he said to him, "Write down for me
A message, and send it afar;
The things thou hast seen, and hereafter to be,
And the wonderful things that are."

Then he carried him away through regions vast,
Where never a man had trod,
And showed him the river of years glide past,
On the marvelous scroll of God.

And Rome with her iron sceptre and crown,
Drifted along on the current's flood;
He saw her battlements crumble down,
And her banner was red with blood.

He saw her marshalled legions,
As they fought on that fateful field
Where Jehovah triumphed over Jove,
And Michael beat the dragon

He saw the barbarian's sword unsheath,
Where Gothic arrows sped;
He felt the earth as it shook in death,
The Vandals fearless tread.

He saw myriads of fantastic warriors,
Emerging from the desert:
Their battlecry, Our God is One
And Mahomet is his prophet.

He saw the papacy arise
To vast and mighty power,
Claiming dominion universal,
Above all kings and priests.

He saw the dark ages succeeding on,
As tyrants strove for power,
And superstition's cruel hand,
Banished light from every land.

He saw the armies of crusaders,
As they gathered for the fray,
To drive the hated Moslems
From Jerusalem the holy.

He heard the shouts of gallant knights,
And the footsteps of millions of men,
Engaged in mortal combat,
The Crescent and the Cross.

He heard the cry of the wounded,
And the groans of dying men;
With pestilence and famine
Filling up their cup of woe.

He heard the cry for reformation,
Like a lion's mighty roar;
It echoed through the Vatican,
And shook the papal throne.

He heard the answering thunders,
Roll out from the seven hills;
But in the shining light from heaven,
The thunder lost its power.

He saw democracy arising in the west—
Its flag unfurled for liberty,
Drew freedom's sons from many lands,
To fair Columbia's shores.

He saw the mind of man unchained
From darkest superstition;
With leaps and bounds it climbed the Heights of scientific wonders.

He saw Ben. Franklin with his kite
Draw lightning from the cloud;
The spirit of the great "I Am"
Devouring time and space.

He saw proud monarchs play with thrones,
In dark and fearful fray;
And heard the nations answering groans
As empires passed away.

And mingling with that mournful wail,
That warfare's wild release,
He heard unnumbered voices hail
The coming Prince of Peace.

Then from the east and far-off west,
From ice fields of the north,
From southern bowers, and ocean's crest,
He saw the cloud come forth.

He heard the rustle of garments white,
And saw each radiant face,
As they hurried away to pavilions of light,
In that glorious age to come.

He saw the city where they were to dwell,
Descend through a vapory mist;
Each mansion shone like a citadel,
And its walls were of amethyst.

Its glistening towers pierced the sky,
Its gates were of pearly white,
And the sheen of its splendor arose on high,
In tremulous billows of light.

No tears were there in immortal eyes,
Not a sigh was breathed on the air;
No storms swept over those glorious skies;
Death could not enter there.

And when the vision had passed away,
And he stood alone once more,
And felt the chill of the salt sea spray,
Flung up from the rocky shore—

He bowed his head and prayed as he went
For his Master to come again;
While the wailing winds around him swept,
And a voice replied—"Amen."

A Marvelous Prophecy.

Speaking of the prophecy of Dan ix 24 to 27; Sir Isaac Newton said that it was "the foundation of the Christian religion," and surely it must be when it reveals the time in which "to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness." It is the aim and purpose of true Biblical religion to bring to pass the above happy result, and this prophecy names the time in which all this will become an established fact. See Dan ix 20 to 27.

"And while I was speaking, and confessing my sin and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the Lord my God for the holy mountain of my God; Yea, while I was speaking in my prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

This prophecy alone establishes the fact of the Divine inspiration of the Holy Scripture.

Verse 24 makes the statement that seventy weeks (of years) are determined upon thy people (Daniel's people) and upon the holy city, (the city of Jerusalem), to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness." This must become an established fact within the seventy weeks, as far as the first fruits are concerned. All things up to the end of the 69th week, are now history past. We must now ascertain when the "seventy weeks" begin, and then we can find when the end of those weeks will come.

See verse 25: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks (69 weeks); the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." We now lack one week to make up the seventy.

We must notice that this prophecy has to do with Daniel's people and city only. After the Messiah was "cut off" Israel's clock from that time ceased to measure time, until the clock of the Gentiles shall measure off "the times of the Gentiles," when Israel's clock will again begin to tick, and measure off the seventieth week.

The first week was to commence with the commandment "to restore and build Jerusalem." Previous to this, Cyrus issued a decree to restore and build the temple B. C. 536.

See Ezra i 1 to 3, you will find the proclamation as follows: "Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, (that the Word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled) the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem."

The enemies of Israel hindered the building, and the work was finally suspended.

In the year 519, Darius, the king, commanded Tatnai governor beyond the river and others, to let the house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build the house of God. "They built and finished it according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes, king of Persia." Ezra vi 6-15.

The "seventy weeks," however, according to Dan ix 25, was to commence with "the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem." The temple was built but the walls were still broken down and gates burned with fire, which became the scoff and derision of their enemies.

As to when the commandment was issued "to restore and build Jerusalem," See Neh ii 1-15: "And it came to pass in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and I took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been before time sad in his presence. Wherefore the king said unto me, Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid. And said unto the king, Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my father's sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire? Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven. And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favor in thy sight, that thou wouldst send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it. And the king said unto me, (the queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him a time. Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah; And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me. Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me. When Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel. So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days. And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me: neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon. And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well, and to the dung port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down and the gates thereof were consumed with fire. Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass. Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and enter by the gate of the valley, and so returned."

The 20th year of Artaxerxes, king of Persia, is the time then to begin the 70 weeks of Daniel which will terminate in bringing in "everlasting righteousness," as far as the "people of his name," is concerned. All prophetic students, as far as I know, agree that the 20th year of Artaxerxes, is the only time that can be fixed to start the "seventy weeks" from.

On this line I quote from Elpis Israel, as follows: "Two years after Cyrus revealed the vision, Daniel's heart was rejoiced by the proclamation of Cyrus in the first year of his reign, for the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem. But had he reckoned the 490 years from this date, they would have terminated 13 years before Messiah was born. The seventy weeks, however, were not to commence with a decree for rebuilding the temple but the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem? in other words, to restore the wastes of the city, by setting up the wall and the gates thereof, that Israel's reproach might cease. This was issued by Artaxerxes on the first day of Nisan, in the twentieth year of his reign, which was exactly 490 years, (or 69 weeks) to the crucifixion. No date or any other device can meet the demand of the matter. Therefore, there is no option but to receive it as a demonstration by fact. Exactly to the month, he was cut off, but not for himself," 490 years (69 weeks) after the decree of Artaxerxes, the twentieth of his reign."

Having a clear and satisfactory beginning for the "seventy weeks," how can we mistake its ending?

As an identification, Daniel says in chapter ix 25: "the street shall be built again and the wall even in troublous times." Let us see what kind of time they had building under the decree of Artaxerxes. See Neh iv 1-10: "But it came to pass, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews. And he spake before his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble Jews? will they fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned? Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall. The Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth and conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and to hinder it. And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah. They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon. For the builders every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me."

Can any one doubt but that wall was built in "troublous times," proving without a shadow of a doubt that this fits Dan ix 25.

Another remarkable historical confirmation is found in Dan ix 25, 26: "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks (in all 69 weeks) the street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times, and after three score and two weeks (adding the seven previous weeks makes 69 weeks) shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince (army of the king of Rome,) that shall come, shall destroy the city (of Jerusalem) and the sanctuary (temple)

By reading this prophecy concerning himself Jesus could have known only approximately to his death as to Matt xxiv 1, 2: "And Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to show him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down."

See also Luke xxi 20-24: "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled. But wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days! for there shall be distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

When the Messiah was "cut off," at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, the Jewish clock ceased to measure time, until the clock of the Gentiles shall measure off the times of the Gentiles, then Israel's clock will measure the last week of the seventy weeks determined upon Daniel's people and city. "The times of the Gentiles" is a parenthesis between the ending of the 69 weeks, and the commencement of the 70th weeks.

The period of time called "the seventy weeks," relates exclusively to Daniel's people and their city. "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." This is a very important point to recollect in the study of this remarkable prophesy.

Jewish time came temporarily to an end, when the Messiah was "cut off," after the close of the 69th week. At the close of that week, "the city and sanctuary," was destroyed, and Israel died as a nation, and are now buried in the hades of all Gentile nations, and are no longer recognized as a nation among other nations. They are without a home, country, city, temple, or sacrifice, and must remain so, until they shall regain some national shape, or organization as a government, at the conclusion of the "times of the Gentiles," then the seventieth week will run its course upon Daniel's people and city. Before the conclusion of the 70th week a certain work must be accomplished, which Israel failed to do. See Dan ix 24: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity and to bring in everlasting righteousness."

The close of the Seventieth week is to culminate in bringing in "everlasting righteousness," and will do so. Israel refused the only means by and through which such a happy result could only be brought about by and through their own Messiah. But they cried out, "We will not have this man to reign over us," "crucify him, crucify him." The offer was first made to Israel. Jesus said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." He sent his disciples out with the Gospel of the kingdom, and said, "Go not in the way of the Gentiles," but they refused the message, and killed him.

Acts xv 14 says that God is now visiting the "Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." These will be used as instruments in bringing about "everlasting righteousness," at the conclusion of "the seventieth week." Acts xxviii 28: "Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it."

When the last week shall terminate "transgression," will be finished, sins made an end of, a means to make "reconciliation for iniquity," provided, that "everlasting righteousness" can be brought in. It required the cutting off of Messiah to make "reconciliation for iniquity" in order "to make an end of sins," as in no other people "for his name," is sins ever put away. When the seventieth week shall terminate, God ceased to deal with Israel exclusively when they "cut off" the Messiah, after the end of the sixty-ninth week. "The salvation of God is (now) sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it."

During the "times of the Gentiles," Jew and Gentile alike can make "reconciliation for iniquity," through the Messiah the Jews "cut off."

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Gentile).

The "cutting off" of the Messiah and not occur during any part of the "seventy weeks" determined upon Daniel's people but "after" the sixty-ninth week; and from that time the way was open to all to make "reconciliation for iniquity," through the "cutting off" of the Messiah. 2 Cor v 18, 19: "Who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." See also Rom v 10: "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son."

This is now being done, during the "times of the Gentiles," and during no part of the time (seventy weeks) allotted to Daniel's people and "city." After the "cutting off" of the Messiah, the Word of reconciliation was no longer exclusive to Daniel's people. "Be it known unto you (Daniel's people) that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles." Paul said, "these words," occasioned "great reasoning among themselves" (the Jews.) Any one must see that the seventy weeks determined upon thy (Daniel's) people, and upon the holy city, and the times of the Gentiles, are not the same time, but entirely distinct. I have reference specially to that portion of the times of the Gentiles after the close of the 69th week, as referred to by our Lord in Luke xxi. 23 24. "There shall be great distress in the land (of Israel) and wrath upon this (Daniel's) people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." When so fulfilled the clock of Israel will begin again to measure time, and tick off the last week of the seventy.

How will we know when that week shall begin? Dan. ix. 27 indicates this "And he shall confirm the covenant with many (Jews, i. e. the seventy weeks has reference to Daniel's people only) for one week (the last week of the seventy) and in the midst of the week (three and a half years) he shall cause the (re-established) sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate even unto the consummation (of the seventieth week), and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

Now, when any one nation, with the consent of other nations, shall make a compact, or a covenant with Daniel's people to protect them as a reorganized nation in the peaceable possession of their fatherland, that will be a recognition of Israel as a nation among other nations, and the beginning again of their national life. "He shall confirm the covenant." This may relate to some man set over

The Restitution.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Office Editor

Editorial Committee:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 10, 1911.

We learn through Sister Willey who is now at SanDiego, California, that Brother H. V. Reed of Chicago, who spent the winter at that place, has been preaching at Book-Lovers Hall, 3d and B Streets, and may arrange to stay there some months yet. There are a number of good brethren in that city, and Brother Reed seems to have lost none of his old time power to interest and instruct.

The following from Sister McDonald largely explains itself. It should be borne in mind that the action of this meeting was based on "If such change be made," then they recommend the things mentioned. Sister McDonald simply wants it understood that she don't want any change made.

Dear Brother Underwood:

You have my sympathy in your trials. I heartily recommend the present management of The Restitution and hope it may continue the same. Although my name appears as one who was present at the meeting of the Conference Board at F. M. McCrory's, I do not endorse its proceedings.

Yours, in the hope.

Mrs. Jennie McDonald.

Brother Blessing writes to renew his subscription, and wishes us to say the following:—

"I have been a reader of and a subscriber to The Restitution continuously since 1877, and it has been very helpful in elucidating Scripture truth, and in enforcing godly walk, and is well worthy of the confidence and support of all lovers of the truth. From time to time I have had financial transactions with the present management, and have never had cause for complaint. On the contrary I well remember one transaction, when I sent in a list of more than fifty names to have The Restitution sent to for a year, the present Publisher deducted voluntarily one-third from subscription price.

S. T. Blessing."

Communicated.

The Lord's Coming.

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. 16-18.

These words were to comfort the members of the Church of God in Thessalonica also the members of the Church of God in Ohio, in fact every brother and sister of the Faith. If they do not there is something wrong. Only those of the Faith can comfort one another with these words, only those who know what he is coming for can be comforted by them.

A person belonging to one of the popular churches attending one of our meeting did not like the speaker's remarks in regard to the Lord's coming, and his earnest desire that the Lord might come soon.

The person had some idea what would take place when the Lord comes. That it would be a time of Judgment and destruction and therefore a day to be put off as long as possible. True he is coming to execute judgment upon all. Jude 15; Rom. iii. 3-6. He is to purify the earth and bless the remnant of the nations that are saved. Rev. xxi. 24; xxii. 2.

Before this takes place there will be great destruction of life and property, but the brethren of Christ shall be taken away and escape the wrath that is to come.

If we desire to appreciate the Lord's coming, we must know what he is coming for, wherein we shall be blessed. Be of the Body of Christ, then can we comfort one another with these words.

Song of the Vineyard. Isaiah v. 1-12. Temperance Lesson.

Golden Text.—"Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink."—Isaiah v. 22.

Here we have in this lesson a sort of picture of how God had planted his people in a good land and cared for them, and how they had turned right against him. It is as if a man planted a vineyard of the choicest vines. Cultivated them to perfection, protection by means of a wall, with a watch tower, and a wine press, every thing complete. When the time came for the harvest, it was found that only wild grapes were there. The fruit that was expected and hoped for was not there. A figure of the way God's chosen people had treated his laws and commands, and how their base conduct would only end in disaster such as befalls a man who is overcome by liquor.

The children of Israel had been preserved in many dark times. They were taken from Egyptian bondage, the Red Sea and the Jordan were passed through, and the walls of Jericho fell down. In conflicts with Philistines, Midianites, Ammorites, Egyptians, Syrians, and Assyrians, God had brought them off victors. They had great leaders given them, such as Abraham, Moses, Joshua, Gideon, Samuel, David, Solomon, and they had Elijah, Elisha, Amos and others. Besides all these, God had given them his law, and the temple, and the only pure religion and service. They were favored above all others, and should have been obedient to God commandments.

From a vineyard so well set with vines, and with such cultivation, we would expect to get good grapes, that would make rich wine. From such care as the people of Israel had received at God's hands, he would have a right to expect obedience and love, gratitude and worship. He had a right to expect they would be lawkeepers, but instead they were lawbreakers.

They were to be punished. The vineyard was to go without care. No pruning or cultivation, the wall of protection broken down, the tower of safety and refuge should fall, and desolation complete was to reign. The land was finally over run by the Assyrians, the people led away captives, and the nation destroyed.

Isaiah uttered a warning against drunken revelers, and shows how intemperence is a curse to any nation. Also that irreligion goes with intemperance.

The aim of this lesson is to make the use of strong drink so offensive to us that we will avoid it. The prophet pronounces woes upon those who oppress their fellows, who work injustice, and who greedily grab all they can get, and force the poor down. Judah has sadly disappointed God, he had watched over them zealously, but now they were to pay the penalty of their evil deeds. It is the same today. We must answer for the wrong we do to others, and if we persist in doing wrong as did these people, we will as surely suffer dire punishment as did they. God does not change. As he did with them in that day, so will he do with us now. Wine, strong drink, is the same now as then, and when "wine inflames" us, we shall sink to the same condition the prophet shows here. Woe comes surely.

If the young could only be brought to realize fully the sure returns for a life of revelry and debauch, it does seem they would take heed to their ways while they can. A drunkard's will has been summed up in these five items:—

I leave to the world a ruinous example.

I leave to my parents all sorrow possible to bear.

I leave to my brothers and sisters shame and dishonor.

I leave to my wife a broken heart and a disgraced life.

I leave to my children wretchedness, poverty, and the memory of a father in a drunkard's grave.

In all conditions and times it has been and is true, that strong drink drags down. How can we avoid this? That is the question that is being asked universally, and various ways are devised, only to fail when tried. After all is said that can be said, we come back to the individual. Salvation is an individual matter. You cannot make my life, and I cannot yours. We each influence the other to an extent; but we must each work out our own case individually. Likewise we see that no plan will be devised that will take in numbers of men and save them from the drink habit. It must be picking out individuals here and there that can be saved from the burning.

Will you help to rescue one? Try and see what you can do this week. Perhaps you can in some way aid one. Will you try?

Daniel viii. 14.

These two thousand three hundred days, though literally to be two thousand three hundred years as in other parts of this prophet and must signify so many years. If we date these years from the vision of the be goat. Alexandria invading Asia, A. M. 3670 B. C. 334, and two thousand three hundred years from that time will reach to A. D. 1966. This will bring it near to the time mentioned, chapter vii. 25. I think this is the proper place to count from. There was no power in the ram to stand before him. Alexander's victory over the Persians was as easy as they were rapid and decisive. It was not owing to the skill, courage, or valor of Alexander and his troops that he made those wondrous conquests. The nations were given to him, for as Bishop Newton says, "had he not been assisted by the mighty power of God, how could he with only thirty thousand, and in so short a time overcome Darius with six hundred thousand and have brought the countries from Greece as far as India into subjection. There has been two thousand years from the creation without any written revelation from God. This was called the patriarchal dispensation. There has been a written revelation, a succession of prophets and a divine ecclesiastical establishment, this has been termed the Mosaic dispensation. Will the present dispensation last two thousand years? There remains a rest to the people of God. Will it be a type of the eternal Sabbath? But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever, and may the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God and the patient waiting for Christ, and then we will have Paradise.

Yours, in hope.

R. B Mitchell.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Wife and I sympathize with you in your troubles and trials. We believe you have always tried to keep the dear old Restitution free from damaging heresies, such as human paternity of Jesus, Universalism and Sabbath observance or keeping the law.

If Christ isn't the seed of the woman (yes the child that was born in Bethlehem of the virgin Mary) where is the promised seed? If people are to be resurrected and given a better chance in the next age, why trouble them with the gospel now. Paul says "If ye be under the law Christ availeth you nothing."

We think the Ministerial Association came far short of treating you as a worldly man would treat another, and it was very far from brotherly. They seem to have forgotten the position they occupy—servants instead of masters.

We will stand by you and the dear old Restitution as long as you keep it in the doctrines and principles it now advocates.

Your Sister and Brother in the One Faith,

M. E. & E. F. Randolph.

Beauty for Ashes

"To give unto them beauty for ashes." Isa lxi 3.

If we would apprehend the significance of this promise, we should realize that we are not merely to get beauty instead of ashes; but that the beauty is to spring out of the ashes themselves.

In the world of Nature God gives us beauty from ashes. Nature is a great alchemist. What a vast rubbish heap of ugliness the earth would become if all things which decay and moulder on its surface were allowed to accumulate. But Nature's way with the waste and garbage is to take them into her laboratory, and transmute them into food for flowers and living organisms. All beauty has its roots in ashes. If you know how to co-operate with Nature, you will get her to take all the wastage and refuse of your work and turn it into gain. She will give you, for dead things, living things; for dungbills, gardens; for ashes, beauty.

Nature's working is a parable of the spiritual world. The God of Nature is the God of grace. To mortal man it must ever be a cheering gospel that God can give him beauty for ashes. For we are to much inclined to let our thoughts dwell on the ashes of our experience, and we too easily forget the beauty that may spring from them.

There are always cynics, after the manner of Omar Khayyam, ready to utter their dreary creed, and to tell us how man's fairest hopes are inevitably reduced to ashes in his grasp. What is old age, they say, but the ashes left from youth's burnt-out fires, beside which the aged soul sits shivering? Or when the grave covers the mouldering bones of our friend, we are only left to feel that our dearest love has become ashes! That theory of ashes may seem plausible, but it is no gospel. It is a cruel suppression of the best half of the truth. What would you think of a man who should remind you of the seeds that are rotting in the soil without pointing you to the million green blades that are springing from these seeds, and shooting up into the golden-eared corn?

No, the cycle is not the best interpreter of life. Over against his dreary creed let us place the Gospel of Christ. Doubtless there are ashes in earthly experience. But even the ashes need not be wasted. God, if we allow him, will help us to get beauty out of them, and to find in "every loss some gain to match."

1. God can give us beauty from the ashes of suffering. From the pain of the flesh may come gain to the spirit. "Who are these which are arrayed in white robes?.....These are they which came out of great tribulation." Sometimes the fires of a great trial pass over a man and they leave in his heart nothing but ashes. Yet very different may be the result. Just as on a hillside we have seen the grass this year springing up with a tenderer and more vital green from the ashes left by a fire that swept over it last year, consuming the scrub and heather, so have we seen a human soul springing up into a diviner loveliness from the ashes of the fires of trial. Here is a man who is strangely attractive in our eyes today, just because we see that in him suffering has been transfigured into rich and shining character by the secret workings of the Spirit. The heart of Job's wife was reduced to a winter of despair by suffering, yet out of the ashes of the same calamity Job himself rose, a nobler and more beautiful soul.

You say you will bear your trial. But a stoic would say that. You must do more than bear your trial; you must allow God to help you to get beauty out of the bearing of it. There is a sacred legend to the effect that, long after the crucifixion of our Lord, his crown of thorns was found in a sepulchre, and that presently it blossomed forth into a circle of fragrant flowers. The legend is a parable. Bear your trials in the love of Christ, and then not only in the grave, but on your very brow, the crown of thorns will be changed into a diadem of beauty.

2. God can give us beauty from the ashes of sin and moral failure. The memory of our wrongdoing may be as ashes. Yet it need not be wasted. God can make even that dismal fact work towards the beauty of our soul. In these days we know how, by chemical processes, substances of use and beauty are extracted from the slag cast on the rubbish heap. They say radium can be got out of slag. It is a bold but true faith, that even the waste of sin can yield beauty. Many of the best men have been those who were "moulded out of faults." It would be wrong indeed to say that it is better for a man to have sinned, and afterwards repented, than never to have sinned at all. It would have been better for the prodigal never to have wandered, yet who shall say that from the shame and ashes of his repentance, and with loving light upon him from his father's eyes, there did not spring up a character more flint, more tender, more true than if he had never known the misery of feeling swine in a strange land? In all wrong doing something precious is irretrievably lost, yet the pain of it may lead to gain. In the light of the Gospel there is no room for remorse. God's eternal miracle is that he can renew the heart. We cannot get back a guilty past, yet out of its seemingly ruinous results we can get a blessed future—even beauty from ashes. "Where sin abounded, grace may much more abound."

3. God can give beauty in physical decay. Certain facts challenge the pessimist who would fain see only ashes in old age. True enough, there are miserable old people who wail, "All is ashes with us now." Yet how many aged ones are ready to say, with Browning's "Rabbi Ben Ezra"—

> Grow old along with me,
> The best is yet to be.

Beauty in old age is not such a rare sight. Nor is it merely the pathetic autumnal beauty of the withering leaf. It is the divine glow of the spirit lighting up the fading flesh. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," said the aged St. John. As he looked forward into the untravelled eternities he felt the promise and potency of immortal progress throbbing in his soul. There was no agedness in his spirit. He could say with his brother apostle, "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Let Christ abide in us and we in him, and then out of all our experiences—out of suffering, failure, and decay, we shall get "beauty for ashes."—Thomas Martin.

The Little Light.

A little boy was visiting at a light house. He had come with his mother that morning in a rowboat, and all day been delighted with the strange and new things in the new home on the rock. "But the night will be the interesting time of all," he said to his mother.

When the darkness began to gather, his uncle stood at the foot of the narrow, winding stairs and said: "Come up with me." Freddy was surprised, for in his uncle's hand there was no big, blazing light—just a candle burning away with its tiny flame.

"Why are you going into the glass room?" asked the little fellow. "I'm going to show the ships out at sea where the harbor is," answered his uncle. "No ship could see such a little light," said the disappointed boy.

But by that time they were in the glass room, and a great light streaming across the sea. The little candle had lighted the big lamp. You cannot shine very far for Jesus, perhaps; but keep your little light bright, and trust him to make use of it.—Jewels.

The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him; and the Lord shall cover him all the day long, and he shall dwell between his shoulders.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide The Restitution to you. A Marvelous Prophecy.

them as a governor, like Herod, for instance.

In another paper I may quote Scripture to show who that governor may be as it would make this article too long to consider it at this time.

In the midst of the week (three and a half years) he will break the covenant, and take away "the sacrifice and oblation," which he permitted the Jews to re-establish.

"Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" Daniel xii. 5-6.

Remember when the covenant was broken, three and a half years of the last week of seven years was in the past, so now the question is asked, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?—or the end of the week of seven years?

In answer see verse 7: "And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever that it shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

"Time, times, and an half" is three years and a half. This completes the seventieth week of years. The first half ceased when the sacrifice was taken away (midst of the week) and the last half "time, times, and a half"—three and a half years, when "these things shall be finished." How plain and simple!

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Place Where We All Go.

Ruth is a few years old and is a faithful attendant at a Christian Science Sunday School. When Lincoln's birthday was celebrated she was much disturbed.

"He didn't send me any 'vite to his birthday," she complained to her grandmother, and she had scarcely been consoled for this neglect when she received similar treatment from George Washington.

"He didn't send me any 'vite to his birthday, too," she wailed, and, not satisfied with her grandmother's remarks on the subject, she took her grievance to the maid. Lizzie proved less satisfactory, however, for she told Ruth that both of these great men dead.

"Grandma," Ruth expostulated privately, after her conversation with the maid, "you'll have to talk to Lizzie. She told me Lincoln and Washington is dead, and, of course, they is not, for there is no death. You must tell Lizzie there is no death." Grandma was not very definite in her promises, and the next day Ruth inquired if Lizzie had been instructed. On being told that she had not, Ruth said firmly: "Then I shall have to tell her myself," and a little later she was heard in the kitchen carefully expounding to the erring Lizzie: "Lincoln and Washington is not dead, because there is no death. Nobody dies. They just pass over to New Jersey."—New York Press.

Be Ready.

Let no day pass without some words of secret prayer.

Begin each day with some portion of God's Word for your counsel, if but one verse while you dress.

Put away every bitter thought, and all brooding over slights or wrongs, no matter from whom received.

Remember that Christ will surely and suddenly come. Perhaps this very day may reveal his sign in the heavens. We cannot know just how near his warning, "at the doors" may mean. The last day of grace will seem no more momentous to us than does this day. "In such an hour as ye think not" your Lord doth come. Be ready.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship No. 3.

Ye "most intelligent" and "matured brethren" deem the our propositions about the Bible as "artificial buttresses." Have you not heard of the theses of Martin Luther? Know ye not that by his propositions the Monk of Erfurth shook religious Europe to its foundations and rescued the Bible from its long-buried obscurity? And with what result? Was it not that of establishing in the hands of many an infallible Book for an "infallible Church?" And did not the like result through similar action on the part of the Russito-a Bohemia, the Waldenses in the Cottian Valleys, the Wycliffites, Lollards, and Puritans in England, and the Covenanters in Scotland? Was not the basis of their necessary strong conviction in the infallibility of the Bible? The fact that all of them went a step too far in the use of physical force, in no way detracts from the principle for which they contended. History shows that previous to their appearance on the scene, the world was enwrapped in intense darkness; that they brought forth from under the ecclesiastical lock of Papacy the only light which could lead men to God; that they held the light up about us as a beacon on a hill, for all to see; that through their action we now enjoy unprecedented religious liberty, together with all the enthusing influences which have sprung from a wide circulation of the Bible; and that we are indebted to them for having prepared the way for the revival of the unadulterated truth in the present century. Had they reasoned as ye "matured brethren" do, they would have said: "Why need we trouble ourselves to defend the Bible? It is God's Book; if he wishes it to occupy a more prominent position in the world, he will see to it. If we interfere we shall take upon ourselves a duty not imposed upon us, and show a want of faith in God. The Bible has been hidden by the 'Mother of Harlots;' God foresaw this for he predicted it through the Apostle John: the time for her supremacy to end has not yet come; when it arrives, God will take care that the Bible appoints the Church now dominating the world. In the meantime, we will content ourselves with the knowledge we have obtained of its contents, and let other people remain in that state of darkness which is evidently attributable to the fact that God has taken no action to enlighten them."

It is not too much to say that if reasoning such as this had prevailed during the past five centuries we should have been groping *in the dark*ness of Romish superstition "and in the shadow of death." To what conclusion do these facts lead? That the principle of action by which the Bible has been rescued from oblivion is required to maintain its ascendancy. The establishment of a powerful antagonist to the Papacy, and the universal circulation of the Bible by means of the printing press, do not in the slightest degree lessen this duty. The Bible is now hidden, not by being suppressed, but by perversion of its teaching. Human reasoning has disannulled ecclesiastical decrees; diversified interpreters have superseded Papal councils; and individual presumption has taken the place of an arrogant church. Imaginary ideas assail the Book from every quarter, to pervert both to its origin and its meaning, and if not refuted and rejected, the truth cannot be preserved pure. There is such a strong dislike in the human mind to the restrictions and obligations imposed by God's Word, that the most ingenious efforts are made to lessen its authority even by those who exhibit a deferential regard for it. From these false reasonings, it is impossible for the brotherhood of Christ to be kept free. Hence the necessity for occasional conflicts to eliminate elements of corruption. The wave of scepticism which, since the publication of the Essays and Reviews, has for twenty-five years been gradually washing away the foundations of even Church and Dissent, appears to have made some inroad among the only community which can claim to be built upon the Rock of the Truth. In such circumstances "buttresses," whether "artificial" or otherwise, become both useful and necessary to cover the structure being completely undermined not the open pants transferred to a watery grave.

Ye "most intelligent" and "matured brethren," contend that no theory should be made a test of fellowship. Know ye not that ye have already done this? What is immortal-soulism but a mere theory? Is not an immortal devil a mere theory? The belief in heaven-going is the result of a mere theory. Eternal torment is nought but a theory. And is there not very much theory in the teaching concerning a Triune God? Each and all of these theories ye have already refused to fellowship. And why? Is it not because they militate against a vital element of God's Word? And do ye not act thus, because ye believe the teaching of that Word to be infallible? On what evidence is this belief based? Where is your proof? Have ye any? If so, produce it. If not, on what ground do ye reject the theories in question? If the teaching which they subvert be not infallible, ye have made a great mistake. Ye cannot in that case be certain that what he believe is true; for ye have merely selected one set of theories in preference to another. And with what confidence can ye appear before the public, and expound your belief? If unable with full assurance to affirm that it is founded on infallible documents, your hearers would be justified in describing what ye hold as mere opinions, and rejecting them, they would act quite consistently with your untenable position. If what God hath spoken be fallible, we are fools to stake our eternal destiny upon it; but, if infallible, as it must be, it is at our peril that we reject any part of it.

If ye admit that God's Word is infallible in regard to the way of salvation, by what extraordinary process of reasoning do ye arrive at the conclusion that in other matters it is fallible? Where is your evidence of this distinction? Ye make an assertion; where is your proof? See ye not that ye oppose what ye call a theory by what, if consistent, ye must admit to be but another theory? And, moreover, a dangerous theory. For if ye once allow any part of God's Word to be described as fallible, ye will be unable to erect a barrier to the whole being brought within the same category. If the record of things within human knowledge be erroneous, what guarantee have we that those things outside human knowledge are even true? If that which may be not be false, how can we be sure that that which is beyond sight is a reality? Is it reasonable to say the least, that God would jeopardise the acceptance of his proffered mercy by allowing the men through whom it came to state things which the intelligence of his own creatures could demonstrate to be erroneous? If so, ye unfortunately possess a very low estimate of the love which induced him to put forth "the arm of salvation," and to send "his messengers, rising up betimes, because he had compassion on his people" (2 Chron. xxxvi. 15.) See ye not that ye are but imitating the house of Israel when it said "The way of the Lord is not equal" (Ezek. xviii. 25.) The degenerate Jews ascribed inequality to God's judgments, and ye attribute inequality to the authorship of the Word which records them. The divine reply in the one case is applicable to the other: "Is not my way equal? Are not your ways unequal?" Do ye judge God by yourselves? "To whom will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him? (Isa. xl. 18.) Think ye that because human historians make mistakes in names, dates, &c., that the divine historian does likewise? Are ye so addicted to finding fault with the work of man that ye cannot lay aside the habit when ye deal with the work of God? And how is it that ye are so censorious about minor flaws in human expositions of the truth, and so tolerant of the contention that there are errors in the inspired Word of truth? "Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see" (Isa. xlii. 18.)

Ye recognise, by your past actions, that certain false doctrines should be excluded from fellowship; but object to do likewise with a false theory. On what ground do ye make this distinction? When any false theory is the subject of teaching, does it not thereby become as false doctrine? Does it not, whether taught or believed, nullify the truth to which it is opposed? And does not action depend on the nature of the thing believed and its effects; not on that by which it may be accidentally called? What's in a name? Sometimes much, sometimes nothing. Men of intelligence and maturity of mind are not generally satisfied with the outside appearance of things; they look below the surface, and endeavor to get at the roots—especially of words, phrases, principles, &c. If ye decline to fight on the right side in this conflict, on the ground that the point in dispute relates to a mere theory, ye are entrenching yourselves behind a "fortress" of your own devising, and bolstering up a false position by means of "buttresses" of the most flimsy description. O ye "most intelligent brethren.....of largest and most matured experience in the truth," and ye who plume yourselves on your knowledge of Greek or Hebrew, despising the illiterate of Christ's flock—is it thus that ye beguile yourselves by the misuse of your native tongue? Is this the result of your "aim to acquire exact knowledge of the truth?" Take heed that ye be not among those whom the apostle described as "deceiving and being deceived" (2 Tim. iii. 13.) "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool that he may be wise" (1 Cor. iii. 18.) When ye stand before the Lord at his coming your intelligence, experience, and maturity will be of no avail unless they have been completely sanctified to the service of God. Know ye not that "When the righteous turneth from his righteousness . . all his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die" (Ezek. xviii. 24.) "Examine yourselves;" "Prove your own selves" (2 Cor. xiii. 5.) Test whether your attitude be the result of intelligence or feeling. Are ye quite sure that ye have not been governed by partiality for one brother, and prejudice against another? Imperceptible influences such as these often blind the intellect and warp the judgment. Will ye allow yourselves to be "taken captive" by such deadly snares? (2 Tim. ii. 26.) If so, "when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat" (Heb. v. 12.) Those "first principles" teach us "not to respect persons in judgment" (Deut. i. 17.) To do so is to "commit sin" (Jas. ii. 9.) It matters not by what human instrumentality this controversy has been brought about, our duty in relation to it is the same. If all were angels or all were devils, it would still impose upon us the individual obligation of weighing calmly and deliberately the evidence presented, and of taking that side which has the preponderance. Will ye allow human mistakes and failings to interfere with your duty to God? Will ye allow yourselves to be frightened by the bugbear of "consistency" falsely so called? Because ye have not previously done that which ye are now invited to do, will ye refuse, that ye may maintain a consistent career? Know ye not that we are called upon to increase in knowledge and wisdom? That, if we do this, the actions of early life are not in accord with those of riper years? And that if we do it not, the mind becomes a fossil, and unable to fully grasp "the breadth, and length, and depth, and height" of divine things? Be consistent by all means; but let your consistency be on the right basis. Let it take for its starting point your divine sonship. Ye would defend the character, writings, or heirlooms of an earthly father: will ye dare to act otherwise toward your Father in heaven? If ye do, ye are chargeable with the grossest inconsistency, your practice being out of harmony with the highest.

If your self-searching does not result in the discovery of any wrong influences connected with [illegible] ye would do well to turn your [illegible] in another direction. Ye may find it in a deficiency of faith. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief" (Heb. iii. 12.) Remember that "the heart is deceitful above all things" (Jer. xvii. 9,) and that "it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace" to prevent being "carried about with divers and strange doctrines"—Heb. xiii. 9.) That "grace" comes through humility towards our heavenly Father:—"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble" (Jas. iv. 7.) When Israel's "heart was lifted up" he forgot God (Deut. viii. 14;) "When Ephraim spoke trembling, he exalted himself in Israel: but when he offended in Baal, he died" (Hos. xiii. 1.) The unbelief of Israel has been a standing warning to all subsequent generations, and there is apparently still necessary to call attention to it. The Psalmist refers to it thus: "They rebelled against the words of God, and contemned the counsel of the Most High" (Psa. x. 7, 11;) "they believed not his Word, but murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord" (Ps. cvi. 24, 25.) On this account God "gave them up unto their own heart's lust, and they walked in their own counsels" (Ps. lxxxi. 12.) They followed one device after another until they became confirmed idolators. And what is idolatry? "An idol is nothing in the world," says Paul (1 Cor. viii. 4.) It is the offspring of the imagination, a pure human invention. When the Israelites "joined themselves unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead, they provoked God to anger with their inventions" (Ps. cvi. 28, 29.) It matters not whether the "many inventions" which men have "sought out"—(Eccl. vii. 29)—are transferred from the realm of mind to the world of matter, they are idols. Thus "covetousness is idolatry" (Col. iii. 5.) Yet is not that also forbidden practices the Apostle John doubtless had Israel when he said, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols" (1 John v. 21.)

The statement implying that our propositions and resolutions concerning the Bible are "idols," is a charge which, if carefully examined, will rebound upon those who originate and endorse it. In effect, it says that the divine author-ship and consequent infallibility of the whole Bible is a myth, a thing of nought; "partisans to the end!" That those who contend for it are substituting an invention of their own for that which God has designed; or that they are asserting the divinity of that which is purely human; that they are ascribing to God that of which he is not the author; or that they are attributing to that of which he is not the author a quality not imparted to it.

If these assumptions be granted, the charge founded on them is a correct one: and as false principles always work out a bad result, they must have the effect of leading their supporters further away from God and his word. Could a more glaring anomaly than this be propounded by unintelligent, inexperienced, or immature minds?

On the other hand, if these assumptions be refuted, what follows? That they who adhere to them describe as human that which is divine; that they attribute to man that which has come from God; or that they deprive God's word of one of its essential characteristics; that in fact, they "rob God," Mal. iii. 8, "steal Jehovah's words," Jer. xxiii. 29, and substitute the flesh for the spirit.

The issue before us is thus a very distinct one. It affects our relationship to God in its most intimate aspect. It is written, "Them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." 1 Sam. ii. 30. In no other way can we honor God than by upholding and obeying his word; and to lightly esteem it is to despise its Author. Israel's disobedience is attributable to their having "despised Jehovah's judgments," and "abhorred his statutes" Lev. xxvi. 43. "Thou hast despised" says he "mine holy things," Ezek xxii. 8. Of him who "doeth ought presumptuously" it is said "he hath despised the word of the Lord," Num. xv. 30-31. What can be more presumptuous than to say that an inspired writing is not inspired, or that divine inspiration does not involve infallibility? When Christ commissioned the seventy he said to them "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me," Luke x. 16. To despise the Spirit-endowed disciples is to despise Christ, and to despise Christ is to despise God. The same is true of the apostles. Hence we find Paul saying in connection with his declaration that "God hath not called us unto uncleanness but unto holiness," "He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit." 1 Thes. iv. 8. That which is affirmed of the apostles must also be true of the prophets, for all spake by the same authority. We are called to holiness by means of the Holy Spirit in them, and all that we think and do must be in harmony with our holy calling, 2 Tim. i. 9. To deny any portion of the Spirit's teaching to be the writing of man, is the first step in despising it; it degrades to our own level that which is of God. It is written, "Whoso despiseth the Word shall be destroyed," Prov. xiii. 13.

When the Jews charged Christ with having a devil, John viii. 48, they judged "after the flesh," verse 15. In like manner those who attribute error to the word of God judge after the flesh; they either transfer to God that which is a characteristic of diabolos, or they ascribe to diabolos that of which God is the Author. The reply of Christ when denying the charge brought against him, is equally applicable to the indictment of fallibility against the word of God: "Ye do dishonor me," John viii. 49. The command has been given that "all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father," John v. 23. To dishonor the Son is to dishonor Father; and in like manner, to dishonor God's word is to dishonor God. "Give unto the Lord the glory (honor—margin) due unto his name," Psalm xxix. 2

Honor (—) the less requires honor to the greater; God's word has been "magnified above" that name, Psa. cxxxviii. 2. We are called upon, not merely to refrain from anything that dishonors God's word, but to do those things which tend to its exaltation. "A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master; if then I be a father, where is mine honor? And if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests that despise my name," Mal. i. 6. Can there be any question as to which side of the present contention fulfills this requirement as far as it relates to the authorship of God's word?

The issue placed upon us is, whom will ye honor—God or man? If God be the author of the Scriptures, give him the honor; but if man be the author of any part, give the honor to man. It is a parallel to that presented to Israel by Elijah in the reign of King Ahab: "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him" 1 Kings xviii. 21. The worshippers of Baal attributed to their idol the power belonging to the God of Abraham, and they denied that God was the author of the actions which he had performed. Believers in infallible Bible authorship do precisely the same, substituting the work of revelation for works of creation and preservation. It is the same false principle in both cases, but differently applied. If its existence in fleshly Israel needed to be checked by an inspired prophet of fire, why should not its toleration (to use no stronger word) in spiritual Israel be corrected by an uninspired brother of fire?

"A madman," you say. The meaning of this charge is dependent on the character of the accuser. From a divine point of view the world is a huge lunatic asylum. Insane minds think they see the substance, whereas they see only the shadow. God, who is the substance, is unseen: the material world, which is the shadow, is the only object visible to the natural eye. "Out of God are all things." 1 Cor. viii. 6. The Spirit is incorruptible, but that which has been elaborated by the Spirit is corruptible. Of human nature it is said "The world passeth away and the lust thereof," 1 John ii. 18. The natural man does not perceive this. He therefore ignores the unseen and deals only with the seen. He thinks he is a reality following a reality; whereas he is but a shadow pursuing a shadow. In consequence of this delusion, those who give to the substance the energy which he bestows on the shadow are looked upon as mad.

But who is the real madman? The man whose pursuits end in death, or he whose labors lead to everlasting life with God? In the present state the latter appears a fool, but when the day of reckoning arrives his madness will be shown to have been highest wisdom.

The apostle Paul is an illustration. Festus said "Thou art beside thyself, much learning doth make thee mad," Acts xxvi. 24. According to modern ideas of propriety, Nehemiah would appear to be insane when he "contended with" the Jews who had married strange wives "and plucked off their hair," Neh. xiii. 25.

To the "cold" and "lukewarm" brethren the "hot" ones, Rev. iii. 15-16, sometimes appear as mad as do the brethren of Christ in the eyes of unbelievers. The reason is the same in both cases; those who claim to be "wise in Christ" act on principles totally different from those which animate such as are content to be "fools for Christ's sake," 1 Cor. iv. 10. One class is influenced by human approbation, but the other seeks only the divine. In looking almost exclusively to God, the latter class is at times liable to act in a way that seems very strange. It would be well if both objects could always be harmoniously blended; but alas, the weakness of the flesh precludes it. Even he whose speech and action were perfect was described by the Jews as mad, John x. 20. How then can his disciples, especially the "hot" ones, escape a similar charge? A quick thinking executive mind is especially liable to do mad things; when to this is added a wholesome godly fear, with a corresponding disregard for man, it is no wonder that our conduct has sometimes presented the appearance of madness. These idiosyncracies have, on some occasions, been of inestimable value in the service of truth.

Brother J. B. Lent writes: "You say that it is after the coming of Christ that the two witnesses are killed. Please inform me where you get that information. It is before the seventh trumpet sounds that they do their work and are killed." His remarks refer to our editorial of April 26th. The editorial is non-committal on the question of the two witnesses, and the time of their prophecy, and intimates that when "opportunity offers" we would say something in the way of exposition. In passing we give the inquirer a nut to crack. We are fully convinced as a result of perusing history and the Bible that the two witnesses, their life, work, death and resurrection, are all historic. When clamoring duties become quieter we will give this portion of Revelation an exhaustive examination.

Obituary.

Delia Martin Odell was born Aug. 29, 1881, at Rockport, Ohio. Later she moved with her parents to Lakewood where most of her life was spent. Through her acquaintance with Bro. Charles Sanford she gained a knowledge of the gospel of the coming kingdom, and in Nov. 1902, she was baptized into it by our beloved Bro. Joblin. On the 25th of June, 1903, Delia Odell and Charles Sanford were united in marriage. Our Sister took an active part in the Sunday School and Sister's Society of the Church of God up to the time of her illness, one year and eight months ago. Her place was always filled in the church and her presence was felt by those around her. She loved to be with those of like precious faith and to hear the news of the great salvation promised. Whatever she found to do to help those about her, she did earnestly and well; even in her long illness, she leaves us an example of patient endurance.

Sister Delia fell asleep in Jesus Sunday afternoon April 16, 1911. A mother, father, two sisters and a brother, besides her husband and infant daughter (of five months), many relatives and friends, are left to mourn her loss. She was an affectionate daughter, a loving and devoted wife and mother. Our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, but there is this assurance, if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

Dear Brother Sanford, let us look forward to the time when we shall see our sister again as we knew her in life, only glorified with immortal bloom. Though we are now but strangers and pilgrims in this world of sin, we look for a city whose builder and maker is God; there shall all dwell safely; sorrow and parting shall forever flee away, and the earth shall be filled with the knowledge and glory of God as waters cover the sea. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

Brother Huggins spoke to a large number of relatives and friends, taking as his text the ninetieth Psalm. His remarks were full of God's mercy to the living and the dead; he showed our utter dependence on him. Each one was impressed with the thought, "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Our sister was laid to rest in the West Park cemetery to await the glorious resurrection morn that we are assured is soon coming for all who love Christ's appearing.

HATTIE SANFORD.

Since above obituary was written, Brother Sanford's infant daughter has died. Her death on the 27th of April ended a life of five months. Our dear brother is bearing up nobly under his double affliction. He can now read the book of Job experimentally. My brother, look through the darkness of your present distress, penetrate the mists of your affliction, and you will be unable to see the "end of the Lord" as Job did, "that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." Jas v 11, "We count them happy which endure." Reader, pray that our brother may endure his present bereavement with resignation to the divine will.

Through the benificence of God we are brought through another cycle of time, and to announce again the call to a Conference of the Churches at old Antioch, beginning Friday morning at 10:30, June 9th, continuing over Sunday.

Let love pervade your hearts, and in thankfulness for the health and strength and prosperity given you during the year just past, lay aside worldly strifes for a brief season of praise and song to God, who gives us all things. Let us pattern more closely after our blessed Savior than ever before, and come in the spirit of gentleness and childlike confidence to labor in the Master's vineyard.

With all the work of the masterminds that have wrought at this place before us, let us come again with willing hands and determined spirit to place this year's work in credible place among the annals of old Antioch.

As usual come to Conference prepared to stay for Bible School the following week.

Those coming to Plymouth please write Brother F. M. McCrory, 214 Sophia Street, Plymouth, so that arrangements can be made for conveyance to the Church. Those coming to Argos notify Brother Frank Boggs or Sister Jane Taber, both of Argos, and you will be cared for.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, June 1-4 inclusive. It is hoped there will be a large attendance at this meeting, as there is important business to come before the Conference at this time. Then, too, we all need the spiritual uplift and the encouragement that we get at such meetings. Many of us are isolated ones that seldom hear a gospel sermon, and let us all put forth an effort to meet at this time, praying that God may richly bless us.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L. Wince, Fierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

It is a splendid book for the home, and for Indiana Students it is of priceless value. No library is complete without it. If your book dealer cannot supply it send as above and get a copy. There is pleasure in reading it, for every Indianan is proud of his State, and besides enjoyment there is real profit in this work.

PLEASE don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

Those desiring Berean Booklets can get them from Alma Rooks, Sac City, Iowa, for eleven cents a book, postage prepaid to any address.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good fruit. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will gladly be made. Brethren and Sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barbertion, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 185 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets it money order to his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends a considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, has neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

It Is More Blessed

Give! as the morning flows out of heaven;
Give! as the waves when their channel is riven,
Give! as the free air and sunshine are given;
Lavishly, utterly, carelessly give.
Not the waste drops of thy cup overflowing,
Not the faint sparks of thy hearth ever glowing,
Not a pale bud from the June rose's blowing;
Give as He gave thee, who gave thee to live.

Pour out thy love like the rush of a river
Wasting its waters for ever and ever,
Through the burnt sands that reward not the giver;
Silent or songful, thou nearest the sea.
Scatter thy life as the summer shower's pouring!
What if no bird through the heart rain is soaring?
What if no blossom looks upward adoring?
Look to the life that was lavished for thee!

Notes by the Way.

My last "Notes" were written from Brownwood, Texas. This is where Sisters Martin and Crundwell live. I found them both sound in the faith, and rejoicing greatly in the Blessed Hope. Sister Martin's health is still poor, and unable to care for herself. Her zeal and enthusiasm, and desire to work in the Lord's vineyard, remain the same, she and Sister Crundwell never lost their first love. Neither of them have any use for man-made hobbies.

A little incident occurred at the close of our Sunday evening meeting. We had a nice attendance of interested hearers. Among them was a man whom I noticed was paying close attention. I was speaking on the subject of the "Last Sign," illustrated by chart. My proof texts were drawn largely from the Old Testament. After the meeting he said to me: "I have learned something." I said "that is good, what have you learned?" he replied, "I have learned what to read." I said, "that is a good to learn. What is it that you have learned that you should read?" He replied, the Old Testament; I have been taught from boyhood, not to read the Old Testament, as it has been fulfilled, and was of no further use than last year's almanack would be to us." I said, "that is a great mistake. you can never understand the New Testament, apart from the Old." I see, he replied, you quoted Old Testament prophecies that have never been fulfilled. I have never read a half dozen chapters in the Old Testament in all my life." I left the man in a frame of mind to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly. I know our sisters will aid him. I sent them a few copies of "Will it Pay to Become a Christian?" It is a good thing to use for beginners.

The time came that I should move forward. I bid these dear sisters farewell, and started for Buffalo, Texas, a trip of about 250 miles, which took twenty-four hours to make, a wearisome journey indeed. I had to lay over at Temple for two hours, and at Milano some twelve hours. Milano is nothing but a lonely country railroad junction. I had to sit around that lonely uncomfortable station from four o'clock in the afternoon until four o'clock in the early morning, most of the time all alone, in that dimly lighted station. These are some of the incidents that a traveling evangelist has to meet. I arrived at Buffalo, at about six o'clock A. M. I was glad to meet Bro. Watt at the station. He then took me to his hospitable home, about eight miles in the country. This part of the country is all oak timber. Bro. Watt has a farm which he cleared out of this timber. Oh, my! what a large amount of work that means. When the trees and stumps in sight are removed, then you have wood unseen to remove in the shape of roots.

Arriving at the home, I was heartily welcomed by Sister Watt and family. Meetings were held in the school house, about one mile distant. At the close of the Sunday morning address a gentleman present invited myself and Bro. Watt to go home with him to dinner. We accepted the invitation. Of course our conversation naturally drifted on Biblical themes. He noticed that I used the Old Testament in my address. "Well," he says, "I don't have as much for the Old Testament as I do for a hill of beans. I can get some good from a hill of beans, but nothing from the Old Testament."

I informed him that it was not possible to understand the New Testament without the Old Testament. I said, "Don't you know that the New Testament quotes either directly or indirectly from the Old Testament, over eight hundred times? Now, sir: if you wipe out all the Old Testament and over 800 passages from the Old Testament in the New, how much of a Bible have you left?" He said if we had only the third chapter of the gospel of John, that would be sufficient; especially that part which said, "Verily I say unto you, ye must be born again." I soon found out that he believed in a birth which never had a prior begettal. It is amazing that in this age so remarkable for culture and education, that heathen darkness with regard to Bible teaching should exist. Truly we need to teach the heathen at home before we spend money to send missionaries to so-called heathen lands.

On the following Sunday morning I had to give up the morning meeting on account of a previous appointment of a Baptist preacher. He was conscious that he failed to move his hearers and so he quoted to them Isa xxxiii 14: "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Of course this was designed to awaken fear. He did not notice that two questions were asked as follows:

1. "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire?"

2. "Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?"

As to question No. 1, No person could dwell very long in a "devouring fire."

As to the second question, the three verses following it show who can "dwell with everlasting burnings?" They read as follows: "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from the hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing of evil; he shall dwell on high; his place of defense shall be the munition of rocks; his bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure. Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off."

The above are the characters who can "dwell with everlasting burnings." A very different kind of "burnings" this preacher had in mind. How superficial the teachings of such preachers are, and very little to be relied upon.

Hell fire preaching has lost its effect, the people are very skeptical about the existence of the infernal regions. In former years people were scared with the preaching of what was called the "gospel of damnation" but today it affects mainly the ignorant and superstitious.

I enjoyed a visit with our sister Sara Ezell and husband. I baptized this sister on one of my previous visits, and she remains steadfast in the Blessed Hope, looking earnestly for the coming of the King in his glory.

I missed Sister Beatrice Ezell, who with her husband has moved to another part of Texas. Sister Jessie Watt was teaching school on the Western border of Texas.

Frank and Beulah remain at home, and I sincerely hope that they also will soon obey the blessed gospel. The mother, Sister Kitty Watts has brought up her children in the love of the Lord, and all dearly love their little mother. Yes, she is little and amiable enough to be called by the pet name of "Kitty."

The time came that we should part for the present, and so Brother Watt drove me over to the city Teague, some sixteen miles distant, where I took the train for Blackwell, Oklahoma, by way of Fort Worth.

On a day and a night trip I arrived at Blackwell. I made my home with Sisters Rahe and Chambers. I also visited Brother and Sister Butcher. Sister Cramer met a painful accident while I was at Blackwell. She had been cooking meat, and it boiled dry, and commenced to burn, as she lifted it up from the fire, it ignited, and the flame flashed up over her hand and one side of her face, it was burned red as a beef steak. The brave little woman never missed a single meeting on that account; she was just hungry to hear the Word of God preached. She has endured persecution for the gospel's sake. Her husband objected to her putting on Christ in baptism, and he said he would leave her if she did so. She concluded that her duty was to obey God rather than man, and was baptized. He then deserted her, and left her to provide for her own temporal necessities. She toils hard, and holds on to the faith with a firm grip. She is a courageous woman worthy of admiration.

"Give to the wind thy fears;
Hope and be undismayed;
God hears thy sighs, and counts thy tears;
He shall lift up thy head.

Through waves, and clouds, and storms,
He gently clears the way:
Wait thou his time, till brightly dawns
The morn of Joyous Day."

I was glad to meet again with our dear young Sister Mabel Chaplin, whom I baptized on a previous trip.

I preached here on Saturday night, Sunday morning, and Sunday night, closing up with the communion service.

I next made a brief visit at Arkansas City, Kansas, with Bro. and Sister Chaplin, and Bro. and Sister Reed. I was much interested in the case of Bro. Reed, whom some of you know, completely lost his eyesight, and for one year and a half sat in mid-night darkness. He was operated on by two doctors here, which was successful and completely restored his sight. He is very happy over it, and well may he be. From his experience he has learned to value the blessing of seeing. Blindness is a lonesome monotony.

During his affliction his faith and hope was his stay and consolation by day and by night. What a precious hope it is, it meets every condition of life. He loved to have THE RESTITUTION read to him. That paper I find is a comfort in many homes; it is doing a blessed work in the Lord's vineyard. I find on my trip the almost general wish and desire is for THE RESTITUTION to remain as it is. They don't wish to have it pass into the hands of some who have an ambition to control our publication enterprise. Then extend its circulation and lend aid to sustain and build it up, and thus repair what damage its enemies may inflict which I apprehend will be small.

On arriving home I found my family as well as usual. I feel impressed my trip will be for the advancement of the Master's cause.

I am now ready to respond to other calls to work in the Master's vineyard.

I have plenty of publications for sale, such as Pine Woods Bible Class, Students Text Book, Will it Pay to Become a Christian? etc. They ought to be out in the field doing some work. They are doing no good boxed up. Who will respond?

In the Blessed Hope.

THE FALL AND THE PROMISED REMEDY.

In Eden's pleasant garden
God placed a perfect pair;
Their surroundings were delightful,
Their eternal prospects fair.

But soon they disobeyed him
In the only thing denied;
Forbidden fruit they tasted,
So in course of time they died.

Not even with this sentence,
God's mercy was declared,
In a promise of redemption,
Through the woman's Seed prepared.

For, one of Eve's descendants
Should bring to all the test,
In food of life thus provided,
And all through him be blest.

He should indeed be son of Eve,
But Son of God as well:
And being a full salvation,
The Holy Scriptures tell.

Thus as a new creation,
The Son of God by Eve,
No trace of condemnation
Would be from man receive.

Thus escaping condemnation
That fell on Adam's race,
As a suitable oblation
He'd take the sinner's place,

He did not come of sinful blood,
Though by a human mother;
His spotless life was but transferred
When he became our Brother.

And thus for us was he made poor,
He once in glory reigned;
Left not riches to secure
For man—to live again.

"By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world," and death as a result of sin; and so death passed upon all because all are sinners. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one (Christ) shall many be made righteous." Rom. v. 12-19.

PEARLE WOOD.

THE OVERCOMERS.

Dear Bereans:

Has it ever occurred to you, my dear young co-workers in the vineyard of the Lord, that the only partakers of the divine nature will be the overcomers. To make our calling and election sure we must give all diligence to add to our faith the virtues enumerated in 2 Pet i 5-7. We are told of some who through faith yield obedience to Christ but fail to so transform their lives both to will and to do those things well-pleasing in God's sight. If we ever become shining lights in the coming kingdom, self must be crucified.

Jesus triumphed over temptation and overcame the world. When John the Baptist in humility felt that he was unworthy to baptize Jesus, the Master said to him, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." By this act Jesus entered into covenant relationship with the Father of Light without which he would have violated the purpose and plan of God in requiring all to render obedience. When tempted in the wilderness he conquered the flesh, the world and the devil and finally triumphed over the arch enemy of mankind when he was nailed to the cross, and after three days God raised him up. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief so that we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Heb iv 15. If Jesus yielded not to the evil in the world and overcame the agonies in Gethsemane is it asking too much of us to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarine? If we wish to reign with him we must also suffer with him and even as he overcame the world so must we. Read carefully the messages to the churches as recorded in Rev ii 7, 11, 17, 26 and iii 6 12, 29. The individual members of these churches were admonished to be overcomers and threatened with destruction if they failed to maintain the standard set for them by the Lord of the harvest Jesus told his apostles that, "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer I have overcome the world." John xvi 33, and Paul later asks the Corinthian brethren to, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ." 1 Cor xi 1, and he writes to the Roman church to, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Rom xii 21. But some well meaning brother or sister may think that this is an impossible standard to be attained by mortal beings. Without Christ it would be a hopeless task, but with him all we need is an humble, receptive attitude of mind. The blood of bulls and goats could only purify the flesh, then how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Heb ix 14. We are of God, little children, and have overcome them, greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." 1 John iv 4. Paul is very explicit in unfolding the secret of his power to conquer self for he says in Gal ii 20, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Again in the same letter the apostle says that Jesus gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God (i 4). Hence you see we are not left alone to battle with all the contending powers of evil. Thus we have the assurance that the blessed Redeemer at the right hand of the Father will help us if we will only place ourselves in a submissive attitude toward the will of him "who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus ii 14. Such being the avowed purpose and intent of the Savior, my dear Bereans, can we not be strong and of good courage and let the Word of God abide in us, for in so doing we can overcome the wicked one. See 1 John ii 12-17. Beside the pleading power of our great Intercessor before the throne of God and the overwhelming influence of a Savior's love, we have the further assurance of the help of angels. "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Heb i 14. Seeing that we are not left alone to fight the good fight of faith, is it not an easy problem after all to be an overcomer? If we can only awaken to a full comprehension of these things and let the will of Christ dominate our weak and erring minds the conquest of self is within the possible accomplishment of each of us—shall we let the Christ-like spirit of love abide in our lives? Surely it will be wisdom on our part, for he will carry us safely over the thorny pathway of life into the fields of light.

Your Sister trusting in the Savior's help.

Obituary.

Hugh S. Clifton, son of Nathan and Mary Clifton, was born Jan. 15, 1850, near Poplar Grove, Marshall County, Ind. Here he grew to manhood, enjoying only the educational advantages of the common schools.

He was married to Sarah J. Lewis Oct. 8, 1872. To them were born two sons, Lewis and Everett, who have grown to sturdy manhood to the honor and support of their parents in their declining years. Brother Clifton has spent his entire life in this community. He had a firm character with strong conviction in regard to the duties of life.

He united with the Church of God at Burr Oak, Aug. 3, 1902, and lived a life in harmony with his faith and profession. He has been afflicted physically for over ten years, rendering him unable to perform manual labor. His last sickness was of short duration, taking entirely to his bed but last Sunday, and passed away at his home in Hibbard, Ind., Tuesday evening May 2, 1911, at the age of 61 years, 3 months and 17 days. Bro. Clifton was patient through all his suffering and affliction, and while he had many burdens to bear he possessed the blessing of having a kind, faithful companion, loyal children and many warm friends to cheer his pathway and lighten the heavy hand of disease. He was a kind and loving husband and father, and a good friend and neighbor.

He leaves a loving wife, two children, Lewis and Everett, one grandchild and three sisters, Mrs. Nancy Mitchell of Iowa, Mrs. E. Hibray of Culve——, Mrs. Rebecca Brooke of Plymouth, Ind., to lament his death.

Funeral services were held from the Poplar Grove M. E. Church May 5, 1911 at 11 o'clock A. M., conducted by D. E. Vanvactor, and interment made in the I. O. O. F. cemetery near by to await the coming of the Lord and his resurrection.

D. E. VANVACTOR.

The Old Shoemaker and the Infidel.

In our neighborhood lived an old shoemaker on a little farm, and on rainy days and in bad weather he mended shoes. He was one of the most devout members of church, and though he could neither read nor write, yet no one, even the minister, could make a stronger prayer or get "nearer to God" than he. And he lived his religion every day in the week, so that no one could doubt his sincerity.

We had also in our community an avowed infidel, a man who never missed an opportunity to get a crowd gathered around him and to try to prove to them that the Bible and its teachings were false. He made his boast that "some day he was going to take all the religion out of the old shoemaker." One day he wanted his shoes half-soled, so he went over, and soon brought up his favorite subject. As he talked, the old man pegged away at the shoes, and said nothing. After a while the infidel wanted to know if the old man didn't think he was about right and that "the Bible was a humbug."

The old shoemaker stopped his pegging and looked up. "'Well now,' he said quietly, 'If the Bible is not true, when we both come to die, I am in just as good a fix as you are. But if the Bible is true, and Christ is a reality, then when we both come to die, I am saved and you are lost.' And he smiled, and resumed his work.

When I heard of it, I said to myself that until I heard some argument that would answer the old shoemaker, I would never read an infidel book of any kind, nor go and hear an infidel talk. Many a time during the last thirty years, when I have heard some one ridicule religion and the Bible, the old shoemaker's answer would come to my mind, and I would think "what a poor consolation infidelity has, where its all to lose and really nothing to gain."

A Christian will find it cheaper to pardon than to resent. Forgiveness saves the expense of anger, the cost of hatred, the waste of spirits. It also puts one in a frame of mind that makes the practice of other virtues easy.

You cannot keep the straight path with a crooked heart. Never.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

The Restitution:

A. R. UNDERWOOD, OFFICE EDITOR

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 17, 1911.

We have received an extra call for some money. The case is extremely urgent; and we want hem. Brethren, Friends, can you help a little to "hold up" our hands in this emergency? If you can and will, please do so very quickly.

As will be evident to all, our paper is late this week. The reason we have to give will we know be accepted by every one. On Sunday evening word came of the death of Sister Chaplin, as will be seen from another column, and some personal letter of both wife and self made it necessary for the funeral, which took place on Tuesday, Brother in attendance. As [illegible] no complaint, we [illegible] on Sunday evening a man who is our nearest neighbor was taken very sick, and Mrs. Underwood was glad to be able to render some little assistance there. Then on Monday morning we learned of the illness of a brother of Miss Maggie Woodbury, the young lady who has been with us at other work for a number of years. The young man died on Tuesday morning. Consequently we were a little under the work with mind troubled with the sorrows of those who are dear to our hearts, and we feel assured all will excuse the delay.

We had the pleasure on Tuesday evening, of entertaining over the supper hour, Sister S. Roxana Wines and her Sister, Mrs. Henrietta Clover, who attended the funeral of Sister Chaplin. We hope they will visit us again, as they are always welcome.

Again we say to any person who has not been properly credited, or has not received what he has ordered, let us hear from you, and we will endeavor to rectify the matter to your satisfaction. One thing we would have clear in the mind of each—It is with those who deem themselves wronged by the management of this office in a financial way that we wish to communicate. Trouble makers and busy bodies outside receive us little personally. We are not conscious of having beat any one out of money, if we have done so it is new and low, and we will use our best endeavor to right it. Those who accuse us falsely will answer to God at The Judgment Day.

Lest some get a wrong impression from Brother Allard's article where he speaks of the "resurrection of the old General Conference of years ago," and form the idea that THE RESTITUTION was once owned by a "General Conference" we will say, the paper in its origin was owned by individuals Benjamin Wilson published the "Gospel Banner" at Geneva, Illinois. Wilson, St. Clair & Co., published the "Herald of the Coming Kingdom," at Chicago. The two were consolidated, or rather the "Gospel Banner" was bought out, and soon after the form was changed from a magazine to a paper, and given the name of "THE RESTITUTION." In the year 1874, an organization called "The Christian Publishing Association" was formed, with headquarters at Plymouth, Ind. This organization bought the paper from its then owner, Thomas Wilson, and this organization now owns it. The condition of this organization is understood from previous writings. It will be plain to all that the Church never had a "Sixteen Organization" that could own property. It is such an organization that we understand Brother Allard wishes to see formed. He says "its up to you brethren." It is yours to answer his question—"Do you want it?"

To the Brethren Scattered abroad:

You have read Brother Underwood's editorial in THE RESTITUTION of May 3d, and by this time you have read the minutes of the Ministerial Association. Everything has now been so plainly set forth, and both sides are so well satisfied with what has been said, let's draw a curtain over the past eight months, and do the very thing both Brother Underwood wants to do, and also the Association. According to Brother Underwood's editorial in May 3 he is perfectly willing to turn the paper over to the Church. The Association declares that's all they want. Here is the opportunity to have it done decently and in order, without further consent from either side.

Now, brethren of the Association, are you satisfied with what he offers? If not, why not? You claim all you want is a change. Now as you both can see, you have made a heavenly other the resurrection, of the old General Conference of years ago, or else the organization of a new one—or I ask What "Church" will you turn the paper over to? The conditions now seem to make it imperative that we have some kind of a general organization. Shall we have it or not? If the paper is turned over to the Church, it must be the one to say how it shall be run—whether by a Stock Company or as a Church paper.

Now brethren, let's stop all this paper controversy at once, and proceed to do things decently and in order, and place THE RESTITUTION in the hands of the Church where it belongs, as all seem to agree. Let's work with this understanding.

Now Brother Underwood, do I understand you are willing to turn the paper over to the Church for management, and have been for some time—or have I misunderstood you all along? May I ask the Association is this not all you have claimed for? If so, your duty as well as Brother Underwood's is before you, namely, urge every Church to send a delegate to the General Conference at Winterboro, August 29, and let's do something to stop the vain jangling, and end error to manifest a better spirit toward one another. Shall we see the foe now united divided? It's up to you brethren. Pray, pray with determined power. Do you want it? Now is the opportunity. If any brother or sister knows of any other way to treat the situation other than the formation of a general organization, I will be pleased to hear from you.

Yours for Harmony.

O. J. ALLARD

Brother Allard, there is no use for any one to misunderstand my meaning as expressed in issue of May 3d. I stated as plainly as I can find words to use, what the "dream of my life" had ever been. I have time and time again told that my sentiments have ever been and are now, for a definite faith founded on the Word of God. I would have a foundation under the Church of God that is rock-ribbed and iron-bound. Then a Church so founded and grounded could and would say to any man—preacher or layman—keep in the path. Failure to do so would result in separation. I firmly believe that God's Word is a safe and sure guide for his people, and that no man in these days ever can suggest a better plan for any event in our lives. I have deep reverence for the Bible, for I believe it is God's Word, and was given through inspiration and is kept by the power of God so that it may guide me and all I will follow its directions. To a Church organization so strong and well-fed that she could deal with those placed in charge of her literature who did not meet her requirements; and also deal with her teachers—her "ministers"—who did not teach—preach—in accord with her declared policy," to such an organization I should like to see THE RESTITUTION turned over to, and you have my prayer that God's "blessing attend all efforts to make the Church of God a united and strong force for good in these last days."

Obituary.

Sarah Crum Logan, was the youngest daughter of Elder Henry Logan and wife, who came to Marshall Co., Indiana, July 26, 1836, a few days after the County was organized. The subject of this sketch was born in Rush County, Indiana, August 3, 1833, and was therefore not three years old at the time she reached this county. The country was wild, the Indians were here, and amid such conditions as fall to pioneer life, she was brought up.

She is the last of the family of Uncle Henry Logan, who was a pioneer preacher of that day. He had a brother, Thomas Logan, who came with his family at the same time, and only two of that company who then bore the name Logan, nee Ish, viz: Mrs. Amanda Thompson of Plymouth, and Mrs. Rachel Partridge of Tiosa, each of whom are over 80 years of age at this time.

In the year 1854, Sarah Logan was married to Elder S. A. Chaplin, whose history is familiar to all our readers. Brother Chaplin died in 1892, and in 1897, Sister Chaplin was married to James M. Wickizer of Argos, with whom she lived until his death. Since then she lived alone with a Miss Myrtle Conner, whom she adopted as a companion. For the last few years of her life she has been cared for by her step-daughters, Mrs. Henrietta Clover, and Sister S. Roxana Wines. Three weeks ago she was taken to the Hospital at Fort Wayne, where she could be better cared for. She died at 6:15 Sunday evening, May 14, 1911, aged 77 years.

The body was brought to Plymouth on Monday afternoon, and from the home of her niece, Mrs. [illegible] A. Logan, was conducted the funeral services by the Church of God, services being conducted by Bro. D. E. Vanvactor, who was [illegible] Cemetery.

"Hath Part In."

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Rev. xx. 6.

These words are urged against the idea that the wicked can and must be raised at the coming of the Lord. Understanding that the first resurrection is "first" in rank and dignity (which indeed is the meaning of protos, first, as we showed last week); that while the "blessed and holy" emerge immortal, and occupy "thrones" and reign with Christ a thousand years, they emerge from the tomb morally fitted after just retribution, return to the conditions of death forever, the "second death" in Rev. xx. 6, can have no bearing in a Chronological sense on the time when the wicked are raised. When John said, "This is the first resurrection," he was not speaking of righteous dead in the act of coming out of their graves; but "I saw," says he, "and they that sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them.....they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection." Emergence from the grave is not mentioned, and therefore by John only implied. He sees the "thrones" they occupy are enthroned, the reign they are privileged to exercise are manifested, in a word he sees them in immortality in their resurrection state. "Blessed and holy," he says, "is the [one having part in] the first resurrection." It is not, "Blessed and holy is he that emerges from the grave when Christ comes, for only a few come out of the ground then," No! The inspired words are, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." What is it to "have part" in the resurrection John saw? Meros, translated "part" here means a piece, part, portion, fellowship, lot, etc. (Parkhurst.)

Then to "have part" in the resurrection John saw would be to have a piece, part, portion, fellowship, or share in the "thrones," "judgment," and reign of John's chief resurrection state. Many will emerge from the graves when Christ comes who will have no "portion" or "lot" whatever in the "thrones," "judgment" and reign" of Christ; he will refuse to own them. Only the "blessed and holy" have "part" in these things. Being the subjects of an immortal resurrection, the second death can have no power over them; the unjust condemned mortal, have no "part" in the kingdom glory. This we have proven by one of the strongest arguments of inferential character that the unjust have already been raised and have perished under the "power" (Rev. xx. 6) of the second death, before the reign of Christ begins.

That in Rev. xx. 6, is quoted by some against the resurrection of the wicked at Christ's coming if properly understood it proves by all the force of an inferential argument that they are raised then. "Hath part in the first resurrection" stands in contrast with the wicked who have "their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Rev. xxi. 8. Now to "have part" is an expression the force of which depends upon its application. If it were two persons, who were fighting for a kingdom, conquered and reigned, while the other was vanquished and executed, it might be said that the former had his "part" or "lot" on a "throne," the latter on a scaffold; in which case all would understand that the victor lived and reigned while the vanquished was put to death. Why? Because a throne is a place upon; a scaffold a place upon. Then when John represents persons as having part in the (or highest) resurrection" as we have been told is to "overcome" (Rev. xii. 2,) we understand that they will live forever when he says that other have "their part" in a lake of fire alone, we understand as that they will not live forever, because we know it is impossible for human beings to live in a lake of fire. To condemn a man to be burned to death; to cast him into a lake of fire, is to inflict a doom which necessarily involves, not merely death, but eternal destruction. This is so obvious that the explanatory word of John is the second death," is considered as asserting the thing wholly unnecessary. Moses: "This is the first resurrection" means that the vision just described represented that resurrection to life formerly foretold (John v. 29:) "This is the second death" means that the lake of fire represents total destruction of the whole man—that eternal forfeiture of immortality which had been, from first to last, declared to be the doom of the ungodly. When John saw men who had been "beheaded for the witness of Jesus" (Rev. xx. 4) on thrones reigning with Christ, he implies that they had formerly been raised from the dead. So when he affirms that they "lived" and the second death had "no power" over them, and then directs our attention to the wicked whose "part" is in the lake of fire, he implies that they had been raised from the dead and that the second death did have "power" over them. In other words there is the same evidence in Rev. xx. to prove the resurrection of the wicked prior to the reign of Christ as there is to prove the resurrection of the righteous: precisely the same.

The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship No. 4.

The fellowship aspect of the question is summarily rejected by some because they do not find a passage which says in so many words, "Withdraw from those who disbelieve the inspiration of any part of the Scriptures, or who deny that inspiration involves infallibility." To commence with any such idea is a mistake, and it is in itself sufficient to disqualify the mind for considering the testimony available. If applied to other doctrines, it will be found that very few first principles of the truth can form part of the basis of fellowship. The reason for this is obvious; the apostolic epistles originated in circumstances peculiar to the time in which they were written. For the most part, they treat of erroneous doctrines then propagated; only occasionally, as in 2 Tim. iv. 1-3, are undeveloped heresies specified. We are shown how the first century Christians were admonished to deal with false teachers, and this by implication is a command for us to do likewise. The principles on which they acted can be applied to the innumerable false doctrines which have been advocated during the last eighteen centuries. Any theory or dogma which negatives a vital element of God's revealed Word is a ground for disfellowship. This, it will be said, leaves scope for discussion as to what is included in the word "vital." True; but hitherto it has been possible to arrive at a tolerable amount of unanimity on this point; and there should be no insuperable difficulty in a continuance. Anomalous, indeed, will it be if those who are in harmony on the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the things of Christ's name, cannot agree that the authorship of the book by which they have been enlightened is a vital element of fellowship.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them" (Rom. xvi. 17.) Part of the "doctrine" or teaching "learned" by the Roman Christians was the divine authorship of the Old Testament Scriptures. They were taught that "unto the Jews were committed the oracles of God" (chap. iii. 1;) that to them pertained "the covenants, and the giving of the law.....and the promises" (chap. ix. 4;) that "the law" was "holy" (chap. vii. 12,) that it contained "the form of knowledge and of the truth" (chap. ii. 20,) and that its "end" for "righteousness" was Christ (chap. x. 4;) that the righteousness of God was in apostolic days, "witnessed by the law and the prophets" (chap. iii. 21;) that the writings of the "prophets" were "holy Scriptures" (chap. i. 2;) that the record of the faith of Abraham, in Genesis was part of "the Scripture" (chap. iv. 3;) that the account of Pharaoh's stubbornness in Exodus, was part of "the Scripture" (chap. ix. 17;) and that the narrative about Elias, in Kings, was also part of "the Scripture" (chap. xi. 2;) that "faith," by which man can alone "please God" (Hebrew xi. 6;) cometh by hearing the Word of God" (ch. x. 17,) and that, notwithstanding Israelitish Apostacy, the preaching of "the Word of God" to Abraham's fleshly seed had not been altogether of "none effect" (ix. 7;) that "the revelation of the mystery" which was made manifest" in apostolic days, was "made known to all nations for the obedience of faith," "according to the commandment of the everlasting God" "by the scriptures of the prophets" (ch. xvi. 26;) and lastly, that "whatsoever things were written aforetime," in "the Scriptures," "were written for" the "learning" of Apostolic believers, that they "might have hope" through the "patience and comfort" derived from those "scriptures" (ch. xv. 4.)

The advocacy of anything contrary to this teaching would cause a divided state in the Roman ecclesia, which, like other ecclesias, contained those who sowed "to the "flesh" and those who sowed "to the spirit" (Gal. vi. 8.) What, for instance, would be the consequence if any were to teach that the Jews were no more the custodians of the "oracles of God" than any other nation; that the law had no connection with Christ; that though both the law and the Scriptures were called "holy," the holiness of the Scriptures was much inferior to the holiness of the law; that the narratives of Abraham, Pharaoh, and Elijah were not a part of the Word of God;" that the offer of salvation was not made to Israel under the law; that "the oracles of God" were only the two tables of stone given to Moses; that the "holy Scriptures" were not identical with "the Word of God;" that faith comes by hearing that which is partly God's Word and partly man's; that some of the things written in "the Scriptures" under Spirit guidance were erroneous; or that "the Word of God" was in some parts written without divine control? That portion of the ecclesia which gave heed to "the Spirit of Truth" in the apostles (1 John iv. 6) would oppose these elements of the "spirit of error," and if unable to change the minds of the advocates thereof, they would find it necessary to withdraw or ask the teachers of the error to do so that they might peaceably pursue the object for which they had been constituted "saints" (ch. i. 7.) And in so doing they would but obey the apostolic command to "avoid them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine they had learned."

The inspired statement in Rom. xv. 4, when combined with 2 Tim. iii. 15 16, affirms that "Whatsoever things were written aforetime in the Holy Scriptures were written by inspiration of God for our learning, that we might through them be made wise unto salvation, and receive instruction in all things necessary for righteousness." To teach that some parts of the Old Testament Scriptures were not given by inspiration is subversive of this truth; it is "contrary to the doctrine which" the early Christians "learned" from the apostles; it causes a divided state of mind concerning a matter on which there ought to be unity; and it introduces an "offence" or stumbling-block in a pathway which requires to be made "straight" or "even" (Marg. Heb. xii. 13.) It, therefore, imposes upon us the obligation to "avoid them" who so teach.

The introduction of a theory about inspired writings which lessen their divine character and authority is likewise opposed to apostolic doctrine; thus to say that they partake of the deficient knowledge or sinful thoughts inseparable from human penmen, is to affirm that they are defective as a means of "instruction," and that the "learning" derived from them is, in some things, misleading. A "man of God" cannot be effectively reproved if there be any doubt as to the divine authorship of the admonitions or any question as to the divine guarantee of the Spirit-recorded illustrations; he cannot be correctly instructed if the means of "instruction" be faulty; neither can he be made "perfect" in godliness by writings which do not partake of the perfection of God.

The character of God embraces "love" (1 Jno. iv. 8,) omnipotence (Gen. xvii. 1,) omniscience (Ps. cxxxix. 1 6) wisdom (Rom. xvi. 27,) justice, (Isa. xiv. 21,) truthfulness (Tit. i. 2,) righteousness (Ps. cxlv. 17,) holiness (Ps. xcix. 9,) mercy (Ps. lxxxvi. 5,) immutability (Jas. i. 17,) and incorruptibility (Rom. i. 23;) in all of which he is "perfect" (Matt. v. 48,) and therefore, without error or defect—another mode of saying that he is infallible.

There would be no hesitation in saying that the inspired word is an expression of God's love, wisdom, and mercy (Ps. xl. 10; 1 Cor. ii. 7; Ps. cxix. 58,) that it is an embodiment of his holiness, justice and righteousness (2 Pet. ii. 21; Lot. xix. 36; Ps. xl. 9) that is "incorruptible" (1 Pet. i. 25,) "faithful" (Tit. i. 9,) and unchangeable (Ps. lxxxix. 34,) that it is endowed with "power" (Rom. i. 16,) and that it is "truth" (Jno. xvii. 17; Ps. cxix. 160.) On what ground can the other features of the divine character be divorced from it? Where is the evidence that the knowledge which omniscience has caused to be written for man's instruction does not partake of perfect accuracy? And have been absurd, and would have de scribed as the earth standing still, it would have been meaningless to those to whom the record was first given,

and, being contrary to their observa

recognition of its divine origin.

In Joshua x. 12, it is Israel's leader who says "Sun, stand thou still upon

Joshua's words that the inspired rec ord says in the next verse "And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed."
The main point to be narrated was that a miracle took place which had the effect of prolonging the daylight.
This was an indisputable fact, and the authorship by which it was re corded was unerring. The mode of expression adopted is quite a different question. The words used were in harmony with the human view of the occurrence, and with the style of lan guage then in vogue—a form of ex pression which has descended to the present time. It is an everyday event for even scientific people, who know that the earth goes round the sun, to speak of the sun rising and setting, and yet no one thinks of charging them with erroneous statements. And why? Because the meaning is well understood. Language is relative in its signification. In colloquial speech, a form of expression is adopted differ ent from that used in a scientific treatise.

The Bible, although in harmony with science, was not given for the purpose of teaching it, and hence, its references to scientific matters are frequently expressed in words which represent the human aspect of the facts. Neither the infallibility of the authorship, nor the accuracy of the record is thereby vitiated. In consid ering the character and contents of the inspired writings, there are three features, each distinct from the other, which require remembering, viz: First,
the authorship; second, the transla tion; third, the interpretation. It is

2 TIMOTHY ii. 15.

"Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers; and to shun profane and vain babblings, for, he says, they will increase unto more ungodliness, and their word will eat as doth a cancer. For an example he mentions Hymeneus and Philetus, who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, which has overthrown the faith of some.

In the 15th verse he says, Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. We can put great emphasis on that word Study, because it points out to us that we are not only to read the Scriptures, but we are to search them diligently, as in John v. 39—Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me. THE article on "Salvation. What is ?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 5, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each. 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to R. Juergensen, Barbarton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa, or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

It is a splendid book for the home, and for Indiana Students it is of priceless value. No library is complete without it. If your book dealer cannot supply it send as above and get a copy. The above is the title of a tract of 44 pages issued by Brother John L. Wince. It contains the subject matter of a series of twelve articles that were published some months since in THE RESTITUTION. This tract is well written, is clear and convincing. It is a living question, vital to everyone. The sole object in the mind of Brother Wince is to do good—do his part in arousing his fellowmen to a sense of duty to God, and encouraging them to do it. The price is set at 10 cents single copy, or 12 for $1.00. Those not able to pay who desire a copy will be supplied free of cost on application. Order from the Author at Pleroston, Indiana, or from this office as is most convenient.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

The price of this book is 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

WILL YOU T...

Certain persons have seen fit to find fault with the writer, have charged him with dealings that are unbecoming in a Christian, and have seen fit to publish circular letters which have been sent broadcast among the entire Brotherhood, assailing the honesty and integrity of the manager of THE RESTITUTION. At first we deemed it wise, and was advised by friends also, to let these matters pass; but the time came when we were compelled to speak, and in our issue of April 5, we gave some space to outlining our position, and giving some history of the paper as to our connection with it. We dislike to print matters of this sort in THE RESTITUTION, as it only tends to further strife, and injures the publication in the real design and scope of its service as a means of disseminating the truth, hence we give what we have to say now in a separate sheet, so that it may not injure the publication as a truth bearer.

We have been found fault with because we referred to the manner given by Jesus Christ in Matt. xviii. 15-17, for the dealing with one who has injured us. We are still unmoved in our position that the end and aim of Jesus in this instruction to his disciples was that publicity be avoided. He would have differences between brethren settled quietly and decently, without undue noise and stirring up. That is our contention, and we still maintain that much, if not all, of this disturbance could have been settled in a few moments, if it had been gone about in the quiet, private way indicated by Jesus Christ. But it was not so handled, and the persons who are responsible for it, must answer in the judgment day to God.

As has been said, when charges are general in character, they cannot be answered, but when they are made specific, then they can be, and should be. Hence we will proceed to explain a matter that has been made public by those who wish to stir up strife, and are now busy doing so. In the first place we wish to say what we have said before, that any person who will make up his mind from hearing one side only of any matter, is not a fit person to act as a judge. Any court would demand that both sides be fairly heard, before judgment could be passed.

As was set forth in RESTITUTION of April 5, we were owing some money, and among other debts was one note held by Sister Thompson, of Rensselaer, Indiana, given a number of years ago, and bearing a high rate of interest. Though slow in making payments, from being short of funds, we had not tried to run away, and had in no way disclaimed the debt, but endeavored to pay on it to the best of our ability. Being poor is unhandy, but has not yet been declared a crime, and our issue of April 5 shows the position we had taken toward paying our obligations.

In the month of July, 1909, Sister Thompson wrote a letter stating that she would accept the sum of $100.00 for the balance due on the note, and settle the account. Sister Thompson will not deny writing this letter. We did not have that much money at the time, but sent to her what we could, and promised to send more soon as possible. On December 8, 1909 she received (aside from what had been sent since she wrote in July) a draft for $100.00, which was more than she had said would satisfy her for the balance. However, no note was sent to us, nor even a word that she had received any remittances.

We met Sister Thompson at the Argos Conference in the fall of 1910, and to all appearance there was perfect good feeling on the part of us both. We had converse together, ate together at Brother Vanvactors, and no word was said that cause either to feel that there was any ill will. Since we had before met, Sister Thompson had an accident that crippled both her wrists, and I had suffered an injury to my right foot that renders that member a cripple for life. We each sympathized with the other over these misfortunes, and nothing but good will was apparent.

We sometimes have a little extra money at the end of a year, and last fall in looking over what we should endeavor to settle, this case came to mind, and I wrote Sister Thompson asking what she still held against us. On December 12, 1910 she wrote a letter, explaining she had had an expert to figure up all the interest to date, and gave the amount showing the whole accumulation of compound interest, at the high rate. She goes on to state that the high rate of interest was a worry to her mind, and that she realized that it was too much, as money was not worth so much, etc. She then says "I have decided to take stock in THE RESTITUTION for the amount now due me." She goes on and repeats, "I feel that this is too high a rate of interest for you to pay, and have decided to give up your note, and let you thus get out of my debt. This is something that I know you can do, and I make this offer, not only to relieve you of paying so high an interest, but also to relieve me of the worry this matter has been to my own mind." Further "Now as soon as you send me stock in THE RESTITUTION to cover the amount stated, I will send your note and call it square. Please see that the stock is properly transferred from you to me, sufficient to cover the amount stated."

This letter is dated Dec. 12, and on Dec. 15 Sister Thompson sent another letter stating that she had neglected to deduct what she owed for subscription account, and asking us to make the deduction. We did not get an expert to figure this up, but just took off the odd dollars and cents, and so made the shares of stock even money.

Now note a few facts:—Sister Thompson cannot, she dare not, claim that I induced her or influenced her in any way to take this stock. It was never in my mind to ask her to do so. Some years ago she was the owner and held fifty shares of this stock, and by her voluntary action had relinquished them to me for no consideration whatever—Simply would not have them. Knowing this, to have suggested to her that she settle by taking more of this stock which she then regarded as worthless, would have been an insult pure and simple. It was her own suggestion to take this stock—not ours. Again, to have questioned what she wanted with stock now, knowing her action of a few years since, would have been to show we distrusted her design, and that would have been an insult likewise. The only honorable thing for us to do was to grant her request freely and promptly, without questioning. This was done, and on Dec. 16, 1910 we sent to Sister Thompson the stock her letter called for, and on Dec. 28 she returned the note all cancelled, with a very kind letter declaring "I am very glad indeed to have this matter settled," expressing love for my wife, and wishing us the compliments of the approaching holiday season.

That, Brothers and Sisters, is the last letter we have received from Sister Thompson. We heard, however, that she was dissatisfied with the settlement she had made, but as she did not write to us about it, and as we naturally felt delicate about writing to her, we published in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 4, and of Feb. 22, items that indicated our willingness to reopen any case that had not been settled satisfactorily.

We heard nothing more until April 14, 1911, Brother Richard Railsback of South Bend, Ind. came to our office with a letter written by Sister Thompson, in which she expressed dissatisfaction with the settlement made, and while Brother Railsback sat in the office we wrote a letter to Sister Thompson, kindly, and with no harsh words, stating that we were ready to take the stock back, and pay her in money till she was satisfied. The contents of this letter was made manifest to Brother Railsback, he gave his approval, expressed himself as satisfied that our action was all that could be asked by any one. We have not yet received a line acknowledging the receipt of that letter even.

When the shares of stock were sent to Sister Thompson, a letter was sent stating that there were no more of the blanks for stock certificates to be had, and that the official "seal" had been burned when our office was destroyed by fire. It was therefore necessary to write out a certificate, copying the original form, and marking the place where the official seal was placed on the old ones, thus making the best paper we know how to make that would indicate to Sister Thompson that the given number of shares of stock were transferred from us to her. We also, in accord with the Articles of Association, made entry in the Association book that this number of shares were on Dec. 18, 1910, tranferred from A. R. Underwood to Mrs. M. E. Thompson. Being official Secretary of the Association we had a right to do this.

Now, if this certificate was not made out in proper form, and that was where the trouble was, how easy it would have been to have returned the paper, indicating what would be the proper form. Surely that would have been the proper course in any business transaction, and no one could object to such being done. Then surely our offer of April 14, to take the unsatisfactory stock back and give the money in place, showed that we were not wishing to force the stock upon Sister Thompson in any way. It was transferred to her at her request, as a means of quieting her mind. Now that her mind was no longer quieted by it, we were ready to let her name what would quiet her mind, and do that, even to paying her the cash. Pray, what more could be asked? Can any body suggest more?

Why was this not done? Why has Sister Thompson not even replied to our letter? We are informed by "one who knows" that Sister Thompson was minded to accept our offer and return the stock and take the money, but "they would not let her do so." On Thursday, April 27, 1911, a lawyer-preacher from Cleveland, Ohio, named L. E. Conner, was in the City of Plymouth, on his way back from Rensselaer, Ind., and left word with a Brother to tell me that "He had those shares of stock now." Sister Thompson was not allowed to do as she wished to do, because—mark this well—because if she did she would be partner in the fraud with me!! So it was "demanded" of her that she play the game out (even against her will) and deliver the stock to the Secretary of the Ministerial Association. We sincerely hope that this has brought peace and quiet to our Sister's mind, and that as she nears the end of life she can look back to this with pleasure and assurance that God will approve.

Brethren, keep in mind this word—Fraud. We submit to all of you this: When Sister Thompson discovered through consultation with friends, that the stock she had was of no value on the stock market, that it was not written out properly, and for other reasons was not what she had hoped it would be when she wrote asking for it, if she had only done as Jesus' instruction says, quietly told me of the matter and asked for something else that had value, all this could have been avoided.

Brethren, by searching the innermost depths of my heart, God could not find any evidence of attempted "fraud" in what we done. Brotherly love could not find any such intent. No judge on the bench would be able to discover such attempt. We are left with one other personage who would be likely to look for fraud in such a transaction, and right here is a strong argument for those who hold to the existence of his Satanic Majesty.

Brothers and Sisters, we have endeavored to make clear to you a few points:—We never tried in any way to repudiate the debt we owed to Sister Thompson, but paid her as fast as we could, hoping for a turn that would enable us to clear all up. When she said that $100.00 would satisfy her for the claim, we sent her that, and more too. When she asked for stock to a given amount we at once complied with her request. Neither way of settlement was any suggestion of ours, but was her own. We listened not to "They say" afterward, but when the statement came to us, even by a third person, over her signature, that she was not satisfied, we at once told her we would do further what she wished. Does this look like we had attempted to do any wrong? To still cry Fraud, dishonesty, etc., in this case, and at the same time claim to be the custodians of the principles of peace, unity, harmony, and brotherly love, makes a travesty on the Christian religion, and shows how far men can wander from God.

We wish to apologize for dragging Sister Thompson's name into this matter, but there was no other course open for us. We wish to say that we do not believe she is wholly to blame, and that if she had been left alone, that no such unseemly things would have occurred. We think she has been drawn into doing some things by designing men, and is made a tool of to further their schemes, and we pity her indeed.

A suggestion was made by a well meaning brother, no doubt, that we select one, "They" select one, and the two select a third person, they to be a Board of Inquiry, to hear charges and counter claims, and render decision. Fault is found with us, declaring we "refused to submit to this demand of the Church." Of all things! Is that so!!! Let us see.

By referring to our issue of Jan. 4, 1911, the article on the 2d and 3d columns, page 2, gives an outline of our way of dealing with complaints. In a few words it amounts to this:—In a case of complaint of money not credited on subscription, we always take the subscriber's word and allow time be finally claims. In tract orders that fail to reach the buyer, we try to find them, and failing to do so the order is duplicated. Now, this obviates all expense of such a committee. All such a committee could do would be to hear a complaint and say who was at fault. Inasmuch as we offer to make good any loss by our own or our customer's carelessness, or any loss through the mails, all that remains is to send in the complaints, and they will be attended to. A hundred committees could do no more. We did do one thing more—We asked that the injured ones send in their own complaints.

One thing more and we are through this time. There is a cry made that "We propose to see that 'Righteousness' is done." Good, stick to it. It will be the making of you. If there is any one thing that is needed more than all else, it is that a reign of righteousness be inaugurated. There was a man in Plymouth on April 27, who declared he was the man who originated the Ministerial Association and takes full credit to himself for bringing about the present conditions. As it now stands the Ministerial Association, begotten and brought forth by L. E. Conner, who claims the position of chief manager, is the medium by which "righteousness is to be done." Pardon me for a moment, as this is only a suggestion. How would it do to appoint a committee of say three brothers and two sisters who shall "investigate" the career of L. E. Conner from say about when he was nineteen years old, and by circular letter report their findings to the Brotherhood, and see if the Church of God wants him to act for her as the "bringer in of Righteousness."

Yours for Righteous Righteousness,

L. E. Conner, Mgr.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Grief

"I know all is true you tell me,
That God is wise and good,
That the hand which spreads the heavens
Provides the sparrow's food.
I know how sure is his promise,
Better than you can say—
But the dearest one on earth to me
Was buried yesterday.

'Tis a sin, you say, to sorrow,
God knows and does the best;
'Tis a coward's faith that falters
At trial's crucial test.
My faith is ever a hero—
I do not say you nay,
But the dearest one on earth to me
Was buried yesterday.

God loveth the soul he chasteneth,
I know is Holy Writ;
Shall clay complain to the Potter
Who molds and fashions it?
I know that the heart of the faithful
Will trust, although He slay,
Yet the dearest one on earth to me
Was buried yesterday.

Aye, what is the darkest sorrow
That clouds life's little span,
Compared with the weight of glory
And joy undreamed by man?
But leave me now in my anguish
While to my God I pray—
"Thou knowest, Lord, that my dearest one
Was buried yesterday."

The Future Doom of Russia.

The phrase, "Gog and Magog," occurs both in Ezekiel and also in Rev. xx. 7, 8, 9, which reads as follows: "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan (evil let loose) shall be loosed out of his prison, (the pronoun "his" is a personification of evil), and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."

Please notice the following points of difference between the Gog of Ezekiel and that of Revelation:

1. The two Gogs belong to different epochs, far removed from each other. Ezekiel's Gog invades the land of Israel prior to the millennium, and the Gog of Revelation when the thousand years are expired.

2. They come from different parts: the Gog of Revelation comes from the four quarters of the earth: and the Gog of Ezekiel comes from the north parts.

3. The Gog of Revelation comes up against the camp of the saints, and Ezekiel's Gog to rob Israel, to carry away silver and gold.

4. Ezekiel's Gog a sixth part of his army escape destruction; but of the Gog of Revelation none escape, fire from God devoured them all.

Other comparisons might be made, but the above is sufficient. To fail to note the difference will confuse the mind of the student.

The loss of life in that war will be something appalling, something excelling anything known since creation. Ezek. xxxviii. 9 says "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt come like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee." In point of numbers they shall be like a cloud to cover the land. Of all this great mass of people, God says, I will "leave but the sixth part of thee."

See Ezek. xxxix. 4-5, "Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee. I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured. Thou shalt fall upon the open field; for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God."

It will take seven months to bury the dead. See verses 11-15, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea; and it shall stop the noses of the passengers, and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude: and they shall call it The valley of Hamon-gog. And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may cleanse the land. Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God. And they shall sever out men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it; after the end of seven months shall they search. And the passengers that pass through the land, when they seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog."

We can hardly wonder at such a fearful destruction, when we read what God will do to them. See Ezek. xxxviii 22, "I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overwhelming rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone."

Then consider the proclamation to the Gentile nations: "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near." The preparation of war is going on on such a tremendous scale, it literally alarms the men of war themselves. When we consider the mighty destructive power of the weapons of war, the Gentile nations are preparing, we may wonder that anyone can escape from Gog's invasion of the land of Israel; as it is only a sixth part of the great cloud that cover the land will escape with their lives.

Mr. Maxim, the inventor of explosives and deadly weapons of war, has scented the war-spirit from afar, and has set himself the task, if possible to invent such fearful explosives, etc., that the very terror of them will cause the nations to dread to engage in war with each other. He is the inventor of smokeless powder. The U. S. government purchased from Mr. Maxim, his formula for "Maximite," a high explosive to be fired from a cannon with powder through armor plate.

He is now completing his "motorite" that is to be used in driving the torpedo through water at from 45 to 65 miles per hour. His small motorite-driven torpedo boat will be operated by two men, and will move so swiftly that it will be practicably impossible for the gunner of a battleship to strike it with a shot; while at the same time it will be able to throw a high explosive against a warship that will sink anything afloat.

Mr. Davis, of the United States army has invented a torpedo gun, that when it strikes the side of a vessel, it does not explode on the outside, but penetrates the ship, the shell is charged with a high explosive, and is set off with a time fuse inside the ship. In a test this shell passed through fourteen inches of steel, and ten feet of coal.

The first armor plate was made of wrought iron, but by 1891 steel began to be used. The "Harvey process" produced a steel with twice the power of resistance that iron had. After this Mr. Krupp produced a steel with ten to fifteen per cent greater power of resistance than the Harvey steel had.

In the years 1907-8, the discovery of the Vanadium steel put the Krupp process in the background. None of the large cannon have been able as yet to pierce the Vanadium steel plates. A Russian brought to the United States a small rifle, designed to shoot an improved bullet of some 44 caliber. He shot holes through Krupp steel seven-eighths of an inch thick. A piece of Vanadium steel plate half inch thick was put up. At one hundred yards distant, it required a magnifying glass to find where the bullet had struck. At twenty-one feet distant he could make but a slight mark.

General Miles said after inspecting the armies of various nations, "I have seen all the great armies of Europe, except the Spanish army. What I have seen does not indicate that the millennium is at hand, when swords will be beaten to plowshares."

Von Moltke, the German leader in military matters said: "Generally speaking it is no longer the ambition of rulers, which endanger peace, but the impulses of a nation, its dissatisfaction with internal conditions, the strife of parties, and the intrigues of their leaders. The great wars of recent times have been declared against the wish and will of the reigning powers. Today the question is not much whether the nation is strong enough to make war as whether its government is powerful enough to prevent war."

Early in 1876 Franklin Matthews wrote "The new year opened with the long roll in the armed camps of Europe. It sounded also through the United States, and its echoes reverberated against the mountains and in the valleys of Venezuela, and every other country on the American continent. The clash of arms was heard in South Africa, and the eyes of every nation were fixed intently on Great Britain. Would England fight? The great, proud, boastful England, was face to face with a great crisis as any nation in modern times has ever met. She was alone, and the war dogs of every other country were almost eager to jump at her throat. Her people had sung 'Britannia Rules the Waves' until the nation had almost felt herself invincible.

The United States early in December challenged this haughty spirit. England's mock heroics, and suppressed laughter at the audacity of this country, were soon changed to astonishment at the serious situation; and then it was seen, that no nation, England especially, could afford to conflict with this country. Then Germany practically threw down the gage of battle by an announcement that England must give up her protectorate of the Transvaal Republic. The English people, maddened almost to desperation, simply waited for a single hostile move on the part of Germany's emperor to touch a match to her guns, and let the havoc of probably such a war as the world never saw run through Europe.

Then it was that the long roll was sounded. Russia set her eyes toward Constantinople, France set hers toward Egypt, Germany toward England's colonies.

Every war office in Europe went over its plans of strategy. Every plan of mobilization was scrutinized. Every nation took account of its munitions of war, and of its financial strength."

E. H. Loecky said: "With the present gigantic armies, wars have, no doubt, become less frequent, though they have become incomparably more terrible.....To strew gunpowder on all sides may, no doubt produce caution, but it is not the best way of preventing an explosion."

Said the Review of Reviews: "The European nations are beginning to droop and totter beneath the ever-accumulating burden of military expenditure. There is hardly a country among them that is not at the present time struggling desperately to choke the deficit which is staring it in the face.....Everywhere the statesmen are seeking with feverish anxiety for new sources of revenue, but everywhere the insatiable maw of armament demands more and more millions."

Yet with all this enormous expenditure of money, in preparing for war, the cry is no more war; let us settle all national disputes by arbitration. Let us disarm our soldiers, and dismantle our warships. Yet with all this peace talk, preparation for war is not slackened in the least.

Now as late as 1908, Mr. Asquith the Prime Minister of England, expressed himself as follows: "I cannot indulge the hope that the youngest person now alive will witness the advent of the day of universal disarmament. I am not impressed by the contention that the completeness of the mechanism of destruction, and the vastness of the scale on which war is organized, will prevent statesmen and diplomats from light-heartedly indulging in war. The expenditure for armaments is now roughly estimated at $2,000,000,000 a year. The nations do not buy these things for ornament. They are intended for use, and some day they will be set loose upon the world."

Mr. Roosevelt while President said, "The best way to preserve peace is to prepare for war."

There is no power in men to make [illegible] Avely they may patch up a [illegible] peace, but some of them will soon be dissatisfied with the rulings of the arbitrators, and then the war dogs will get angry, and growl fiercely, and jump at each other's throats. This will be the condition of things when the Lord comes. See Rev. xi. 18, "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth."

After this wars will be made to cease. See Psa. xlvi. 6-9: "The heathen (nation) raged, the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted. The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolation he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder, he burneth the chariot in the fire."

The above is the only power that can make war to cease for all time. And this is the time in which it will be done.

"The king of the north" will go forth "like a whirlwind," but before the Lord gets through with him, he will doubtless think a "whirlwind" has struck him. He will enter "the glorious land" with his allied nations "like a cloud to cover the land," but the whirlwind of God's fury will leave only a sixth part of that mighty host. It will take seven months to bury the dead. That will be the last battle the king of the north will ever fight.

Look wherever you will, either in the social, political, or military world, we see that a grand and mighty upheaval is eminent. Worldly men who are ignorant as to what the Bible teaches tell us "that the present generation of men stand upon the very eve of the mightiest revolution that the annals of time have ever recorded."

Take the matter of capital and labor alone, the conflict is fierce and strong. The contractor takes a contract to accomplish a certain piece of work at a certain named price and time. He is on a nervous strain all the time. He knows not how soon some combine will raise the price of material, or his workmen will strike for shorter hours, or an increased pay; or perhaps some bank panic will occur. In fact wherever you look there is nothing stable or at rest. It is a solemn voice of warning sounding through the din and bustle of the age, proclaiming the only sure and stable thing there is—"We receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverance and godly fear."

I am bound for the one Immovable thing. What say you?

AN EXHORTATION.

Heb xii 1, "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

Paul in this verse is alluding particularly to the previous chapter, Heb. xi, as an example of mental and physical endurance unparalleled except by [illegible] believe. But note the bulwark of faith in the back of all those ancient worthies which enabled them to endure. Almost every verse commences with "By faith they endured." And this is, must be, the foundation upon which we all must build in order to rightly exercise every Christian grace, and grow in wisdom and knowledge and in all pleasing. For without faith it is impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6, for he that cometh to God must first believe that he is God, and also that he, God, is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. We know our faith is built upon the sure foundation, Jesus Christ the Chief Corner Stone, through whom all those exceeding great and precious promises God made to the Hebrew fathers must come. We have believed the gospel, the glad tidings of the kingdom of God to be established upon this earth and to be dominated by the Christ, the seed long promised. We have been adopted into the family of God by becoming Abraham's seed faithwise to whoever the promises were made, and Paul says that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs to the same promises. Gal. iii. These preliminaries have a prior and direct bearing before it would be possible for us to do the will of God as outlined in this verse, Heb. xii. 1. Were this not so, then all the so-called Christian denominations are eligible for the kingdom God has promised to set up whether in heaven or in earth, but Paul is here setting before us a great cloud of witnesses, of whom the world was not worthy, who had washed their robes and made them white by a consistent walk with God by faith in those great and precious promises, for the belief of which Paul says, If we have been planted together in the likeness of Christ's death in baptism, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Wherefore, Paul says, Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ whose name we have taken upon ourselves. Yield, he says, your members, yourselves unto God as those that are alive from dead works and your members as instruments of righteousness or right doing before God, being by baptism made free from sin ye have become the servants of righteousness and have fruit unto holiness, the end of which is everlasting life, Rom. iv.

Paul in this verse, the subject of our lesson, exhorts us to lay aside every weight, and every besetting sin which he says does so easily beset us, and switch us off that righteous and holy walk we are ever striving to maintain. I am glad to know that Paul's experience was the same as ours, and that our pattern and mediator was also tried in all points as we are. In his case without sin, but not so Paul nor us. I am also glad to know that Paul though he said what he did very often he hated, and that he would do he did not, yet after all his failings he could say, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, and that henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness, which he will receive at the return of Christ.

James says the trial of our faith worketh patience; but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. So we, dear brothers and sisters, will take Paul's advice in Heb. xii. 2, in which he says, Looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, who on account of the joy that was set before him, endured the cross and despised the shame. Though we are a despised and insignificant band of believers on the lowly Nazerine, that same joy sustains us through all trials and temptations, and may it do so to the end of life's probation, or until He appears, is my earnest wish and prayer.

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in THE RESTITUTION some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind. or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

Notice!

Those desiring Berean Booklets can get them from Alma Roose, Sac City, Iowa, for eleven cents a book, postage prepaid to any address.

Editorial Committee:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 24, 1911.

We have received an extra call for some money. The case is extremely urgent, and we want help. Brethren, Friends, can you help a little to "hold up" our hands in this emergency? If you can and will, please do so very quickly.

In response to the above call we have received some very kind replies. We thank our friends—brethren—who appreciate our past, and want to aid us when it is needed. God bless your kindness.

Inasmuch as there are five Wednesdays in the month of May, our next issue will bear date [illegible]7.

The crowded state of the past week have made preparation of the Sunday School Lessons for this issue impossible.

Word from Sister Willey says that Brother H. V. Reed is preaching some excellent discourses to the friends at San Diego, Cal.

A communication dated May 22, from Sister Lydia Railsback, asks us to state that the Bible School Board of Indiana decided not to hold any School this year.

Regarding the meeting held in this City on May 24th, we will have somewhat to say later. Right minded and justice loving people will want both sides before passing judgment.

We had the pleasure of entertaining at our home Wednesday night, our old time friend, Brother W. H. Wilson of Chicago. Come again, Brother Wilson, for you are always welcome with us.

Brother C. Musselman, of Claypool, Indiana, was in this City one day the past week looking after some property interests here. We enjoyed his visit in our home, and will welcome him any time.

By reference to our issue of last week it will be seen that at that time our neighbor was taken sick. It becomes our sad duty to tell you that on Saturday night, May 20, a little before 11 o'clock, she died without a moment's warning. Mrs. Martindale was not a Church member—she was our neighbor. She was our neighbor in the highest meaning of that term. For a period covering near twenty-five years she has lived beside us. The boys of both homes have grown up as brothers. Seven years ago the very day Mrs. Martindale died, their oldest son was buried, leaving them with one son living. This young man was away at the State University where he is a student, so was not here when his mother died, which gave an added element of distress to the case. Not alone in the now desolate home, and with those of the near neighborhood, will Mrs. Martindale be missed, but the out-most bounds of the entire community will suffer loss, for she was one who was continually doing little deeds of kindness. She was one who was thoughtful for others, quick to aid in distress and sorrow. The rarest compliment that we can pay to the memory of this neighbor whom we had grown to love, is to say We miss you. Mr. Martindale and Frank have our heart-felt sympathy.

Dear Brother Underwood,

I have returned to the Northwest country where the better part of my life was spent teaching the coming of Christ and the establishment of his kingdom. I am not here to contend, but I hope to give the best part of my energy to living pure myself and inducing others to live absolutely pure—Reader, will you do it? "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is, and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure."

I have returned with the desire that our beloved brethren here and in other places may see that there is more importance in living the practical life of Christianity than in contentions

Love to all.

Throne of David.

Now these be the last words of David. David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, The spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was on my tongue. The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God, and he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain. Although my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he made it not to grow, 2 Sam. xx. 1-5.

This is quoted from the so called King James version of the Old Testament, and shows how those old translators of the blundered deadly blow at understanding God's promises. Here is the same passage as translated from the second to the fifth verses by the late Prof. A. B. Davidson, D.D., L.L.D. The spirit of the Lord spake by me. And his word was on my tongue. The God of Israel said. The Rock of Israel spake to me. A ruler over men a just one. Ruling in the fear of the Lord. As when the morning breaketh and the sun riseth. A morning without clouds. The tender grass springeth up of the earth. From the clear shining after rain. Surely such is my house with God. For he hath made with me an everlasting covenant. Ordered in all things and sure. For all my salvation and all my desire. Surely he will make it to spring up.

This translation, which is no doubt the correct one, puts an entirely different complexion on the whole passage, and does not leave the idea that God will not fulfill his promise to David. In Psa. lxxxix. 34-37, God says, My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Notwithstanding these promises by God to David concerning the perpetual existence of his throne, the vast body of so called Christians and their preachers do not believe that God will fulfill his promise to David, when he asserts that he has sworn by his holiness that he will not lie unto David. I once cornered a popular minister of a Methodist church on this subject of Christ yet to raise up the throne of David on Mount Zion, and at last he admitted that John Wesley believed it, and preached it, and that they, the Methodist preachers of the present time, were very derelict in their duty in not preaching the gospel of the kingdom. What an admission from a man who is paid a large salary for preaching the gospel!

The angel who appeared to Mary, Luke i. 30, said Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favor with God, and behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

These are promises made by the great God of heaven, concerning this kingdom and throne, and yet how few believe them or look for their fulfillment amongst the millions who at the present profess to be rejoicing over the natal day of Christ. This kingdom promised to him by his Father was the burthen of his preaching during the whole of his ministry. Mark in his first chapter records this fact, verse 14, "Now after John was put into prison Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Matt iv 23, And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Luke xii 32, "Fear not little flock for it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Luke xxii 29, 30, And I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Humanly speaking Christ was put to death because he claimed that he was born to be a king. John xviii 37. Pilate therefore said unto Him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, "Thou sayest that I am a king to this end was I born and for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth." And when Pilate could not find any fault in him and wished to release him, the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cesaar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar. That was the position they got Pilate into by Christ's claim that he was born to be a king. If Christ had explained to Pilate as our modern preachers do who profess to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ that his kingdom was to be up in heaven, where he was going to go to presently, Pilate would not have had to fear the wrath of Cæsar and would not have had to consent to his death much against his will, for he could easily have explained to Cæsar if he had let him go and been reported for doing so, that this man was only a religious fanatic and made no claim to a kingdom on this earth. But Christ claimed to be born to be a king here as God had so [illegible] 1 Pet. [illegible] came preaching the entire Jewish world was looking anxiously for the Messiah who would set up David's throne again and drive out their oppressors from the land. In his first recorded sermon he certainly encouraged the idea that the oppression of God's people was to cease when he said, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Matt v 5. The meek certainly did not inherit the earth then and certainly never did so since, but God will give them the earth to inherit in his own good time. Christ's twelve disciples believed that Jesus was the Messiah, they fully believed that it was he who was to redeem Israel. Luke ix 1, 2. Then Jesus called his disciples together and gave them power and authority over all demons and to cure diseases and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick. Then what did, what could those men preach but what they believed, that Jesus had come and that he was the long looked for Messiah who would set up David's throne again on Mount Zion. The only thing they were mistaken in and never could comprehend until after his death and resurrection was that he had to die first for the sins of the world and rise again from the dead and then be seated at God's right hand until his foes were made his footstool. See the 2nd Psalm.

He was seen of them forty days after his resurrection and speaking with them of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. Yet, after all that instruction they still believe that he is going to establish the throne of David again on Mount Zion; for the last question they ask him was "Lord, will thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" If these apostles had been mistaken all through their ministy with Christ as our modern preachers contend that Christ's kingdom was to be in heaven, not upon the earth, surely this question has put Christ in a position to correct their great mistake in regard to the location of his kingdom, but he does not do so, his reply is "It is not for you to know the times or seasons which the Father hath put in his own power."

Surely this reply confirms their idea that he was going at some time to restore again the kingdom to Israel.

Part of the gospel or good news which Christ and his apostles preached was that Christ is to reign here personally on this earth and that rewards and punishments are to be here, "For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people, he will beautify the meek with salvation. Let the saints be joyful in glory; let them sing aloud upon their beds; let the high praises of God be in their mouth and a two-edged sword in their hand, to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people. To bind their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgments written, this honor have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord.

A very different occupation this from sitting and playing on golden harps in heaven.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Northwest 24th Annual Conference of Oregon and Western Washington, will convene at Corvallis, Oregon, from June 22 to 25, inclusive. All the brethren are earnestly requested to attend and take a hand in this good work.

Yours in hope.

Brotherly Love.

1 John, chapter two.

Verses 9-11, He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

In chosing a text for the subject of the day, we have taken the above, for in it we have both the Negative and the Positive, thus showing us the strength and power of love, and the absolute weakness and helplessness of those who have it not.

In the preceding chapter we read:—God is Light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ [illegible] us from all sin.

By this we plainly see, that if we are to be cleansed from sin by the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, our Lord, and have that fellowship with Jesus, also that fellowship with our heavenly Father, we must also have a fellowship with the brethren of the household of faith: a fellowship that can be gained only by and through Love, for he that loveth his brother abideth in the light and there is none occasion of stumbling in him; but he that hateth his brother is in darkness and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth.

In defining the word Love, the Standard Dictionary says—Love, a noun, a strong complex emotion or feeling inspired by something, as a person or a quality, causing one to appreciate, delight in, and crave the presence or possession of the object, and to please or promote the welfare of that object; the yearning or out-going of the soul toward what is apprehended and regarded as good or excellent from any point of view or in any relation; devoted affection for or attachment to; strictly applicable to persons.

But, as I understand it, our lesson for today, is not so much What love is, as the result or outgrowth of love.

We sometimes hear that there are many kinds of love; the natural love we have for our kindred, the sisterly love, the love we manifest for a sweetheart, the friendly love, the fatherly love, the motherly love, but in making this statement we err, for Love in the abstract is the same. Love is of and from God. A good deal in this world that should be called Fascination, is labelled Love. It is against human nature to love a being unless that being has some attribute that appeals to us as loveable; in other words we must know a person before we can love them, and this argument teaches us if we are to love the brethren, we must know them. We must mingle with them, we must not be content to see them for a few minutes only, while at the meeting on the Lord's day, but we must make of them our companions and friends.

This question of Brotherly Love is a serious one. Paul in 1 Thess. iv. 9, says, But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.

Again in his epistle to the brethren at Rome, as recorded in chapter xii. 9-10 he says, Let love be without dissimulation, abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another.

In this last clause we begin to see the result of brotherly love. Cause—Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love. Effect—In honor preferring one another. Giving each other preference, without personal ambition, all working together for the general good.

If this policy was practised among the brethren, would we have the kind of meetings we now have among the churches? If this policy was practiced in our own meeting, what would be the result? In honor preferring one another. Let us ponder it.

Love is not all sentiment; it has its practical side as well. The above quotation shows us that this is true, as also we learn from 2 Peter i. 5-7, where he sums up the Christian's growth in that great example of addition—Diligence, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, charity. What is the answer? For if ye do these things ye shall never fall, and an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In verse 9 we read He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his sins.

In this instance I have given both the "negative" and the "positive" teaching for I sometimes think the "negative" teaching the most powerful, and while on this theme let us quote another "negative" passage, one of the sayings of the Master as recorded in Matthew v. 22.

"I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment; and whosoever shall say to his brother Raca (Margin-Vain fellow) shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire," and in the following verses the blessed Jesus tells us, that should it so happen that we have any difference with our brother, not to bring our gift to the altar until we have been reconciled, and to my mind this would refer to the Lord's Supper today, and as we read further on in Matthew (xviii. 15-17) we find Jesus still speaking, and he says, "If our brother trespass against us, we are to go to him alone and tell him of his fault, if he will not listen, then we are to take one or two brethren with us, and we are only to make the matter public when he refuses to hear us under the above circumstances. Should we be the one in error, and refuse to forgive when our brother comes to us, according to the above plan, then we deserve the punishment that was metered out to the unforgiving servant in the Lord's parable recorded in the latter part of this same chapter. Then in Paul's letter to the Church at Galatia—he warns us—through them—(chap. v. 25, 26,) "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit." "Let us not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another" and then continuing in the 6th chapter, he says, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are Spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Do you not think that Paul is here teaching the "practical" side of brotherly love? We have more of this "practical" love taught us, by the same apostle when he writes his first epistle to the Corinthian Church (chapt viii.) when he says, That through our superior knowledge of the love and grace of God, we have liberty to do such things as we desire, but at no time must we use that liberty, if in its use, we offend or weaken the faith of the brother who is not so strong in the faith, who has not the same knowledge as us, but at all times we must curb our own desires, thus showing we really have the love of Christ and are willing to keep his command "As the Father hath loved me, so I have loved you, CONTINUE YE IN MY LOVE." Then John in his 1st Epistle, verses 15-17, writes, "That whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer, and hath no eternal life abiding in him, that we should love our brethren, even as God loved us, to the extent that we would lay down our life for each other, and that those who hath the means should assist those in need." Such a love as this would be much more than a sentimental love, and would come near fulfilling the admonition of Paul (Heb. xiii. 1) "Let brotherly love continue" and in conclusion let me quote the apostle Peter as recorded in his first epistle, chapter one, verses 22 and 23, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto UNFEIGNED LOVE of the brethren. See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently" "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

"This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." Jesus in John xv. 12.

Alex. D. Donaldson.

It has been said that todays are made up of yesterdays. The unexpected trials that come sweeping like torrents over the soul cannot be successfully withstood today if our yesterdays have been spent in careless idleness and easy inactivity. Great victories are not achieved without effort; the man is yet to be found who has been "kicked into success."

"Paul's thorn originated in the malignant hatred of the devil, but was permitted by the Lord to remain with all its resulting distress. This and all similar mysteries must be committed to the sovereign will of Jehovah who doeth all things well."

Obituary.

Henry Metheny passed away at his home in Shelby, Nebraska, on May 15, 1911, following an illness of five months. During most of this time he was confined to his bed. For the past two years his health has been failing and about the first of December, he had a severe attack of lagrippe. From his general weakened condition, he was not able to survive. Brother Metheny was born Oct. 26, 1830 in Licking County, Ohio and in 1852, was married to Sarah Moore. They settled on a farm in Carroll County, Illinois in December, 1863 and eight years later moved to Lanark on account of the illness of Sister Metheny, who was a confirmed invalid for nine years. Probably there are some still living at Lanark who remember the long struggle and hardships he went through to save the life of one who was so dear to him. In 1880, they moved to Butler County, Nebraska and located on a little farm, thinking the change of climate might improve his wife's health. This proved to be true for a while and later they moved to Shelby where Sister Metheny died in 1902.

To this union seven children were born, three of them dying in infancy. Of the remaining, one daughter, Mrs. Amanda E Bahr resides at Havelock, Neb., Daniel and George Metheny at Shelby, Neb., and Dr. Samuel Metheny at Lincoln, Neb.

Brother and Sister Metheny were baptized by Bro. J. M. Stephenson at Plum River, Ill., in 1866. Their path was strewn with many thorns, but they murmured not, ever looking forward to the peace that awaits the righteous in the glorious kingdom of God. They are now peacefully sleeping side by side in the little cemetery at Shelby awaiting the return of our Lord.

Samuel Metheny.

Martha J. McFall was born in Granville, Washington Co., N. Y., March 28, 1829.

In 1844 she came with her widowed mother and her brother to Wisconsin, and the same year was married to Caleb Preston. Two children were born of this union, Marion J. and Ella M.

She and her husband were baptized on hearing the gospel preached by H. V. Reed, J. M. Stephenson and the Allertons in the 50s. Mr. Preston died at Neenah, in 1863 and in 1877 she was married to Mr. John Sipes of Parfreyville, Waupaca County.

Mr. Sipes died in 1895. Mrs. Sipes is survived by two daughters, Mrs. J. K. Fritzinger of Appleton, Wisconsin, and Mrs. W. C. Barlow, of Waupaca, R. F. D. 2; four grand children; seven great grand children and a brother, Henry McFall, of Escanaba, Michigan.

The deceased died April 28, of pneumonia, after a two week's illness, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Barlow, with whom she had lived for the past seven years. She lived a cheerful, optimistic life and who faithful in her belief until death called her.

Mrs. M. C. Barlow.

Roy Willey was born in Arkansas County, Arkansas, June 15, 1878,—died at Ann Arbor, Michigan, May 17, 1911.

He grew to manhood in Arkansas, enjoying the educational advantages of the common and high schools of the county.

In 1901 he moved with the family to Indiana, where he graduated from the Valparaiso Business College and afterward assisted his father in his business.

At an early age he united with the Advent Christian Church and has lived a faithful Christian life, always holding family worship in his home and taking an active part in Church and Sunday School work as long as he was able to attend.

He was married to Miss Blanche Herold, Sept. 30th, 1908, and soon afterward moved to a farm near Constantine, Michigan, where he has since resided.

January 17th he went to the hospital at Ann Arbor, to take treatment for kidney trouble. He underwent two operations and suffered much during his four months stay at the hospital, in a vain hope of regaining his health.

He leaves a devoted wife, two brothers—Thos. E. of Spokane, Washington, and Ortel R. of Marion, Indiana, besides a step-mother and many relatives and friends who will sadly miss Roy from their lives.

Mrs. Anna Willey.

[Roy Willey, subject of the above sketch, is a nephew of Brother J. H. Willey, and was held in high esteem by him.—Ed.]

Life's Journey

Soon life's journey will be o'er, our trial soon will end,
When God's beloved Son the second time shall send;
When Abraham, and all the saints, shall rise to meet their Lord.
As promised to them of old, in God's most precious word.

Meet me there on Eden's plains, yes, meet me there at home;
Meet me there when Jesus comes, to reign on David's throne.

See Gabriel's trump will sound, and wake the righteous dead;
Soon they shall rise, to meet their triumphant Head;
All nations then shall be blessed, with peace and joy sublime.
Death be indeed in, and mark the end of time.

Meet me there on Eden's plains, etc.

The End of the Ages.

The end of the ages has come,
Come as the Master foretold;
For faith is fast leaving the earth,
Replaced by the love of gold.

He said, when the Son of man comes
Shall he find faith on the earth?
And this has surely come to pass
On faith there is a great dearth.

Men do not believe in a God,
Every thing just pushed along,
Just turned round and twisted and cast,
Come with a dance and a song.

No need for a Creator now,
Every thing comes of itself;
The important thing now to do
Is to gather in the pelf.

And as for God's message to man,
The sages have turned it down.
If you should say it is God's Word
They will treat you with a frown.

The end of the ages has come;
Come, come with their sinking sand;
And now the question is to all
Where, where are you going to stand?

The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship No. 5.

The apostolic teaching concerning the character of the Old Testament Scriptures is applicable also to the inspired writings known as the New Testament. The latter are equally with the former, "the oracles of God." Heb v 12. A divine oracle is either spoken or written utterance of the Deity; hence Peter's injunction, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter iv 11. The apostolic writings are an essential part of the "foundation" on which "the household of God" is "built" (Eph ii 20), and they are subject to the same definitions respecting authorship and character as are the writings of the prophets. Paul's epistles are placed on a par with "the other Scriptures" (2 Pet iii 16), and are, therefore "holy." When the apostles addressed unbelievers "they spake the Word of God." Acts iv 31; vi 2; xiii 46; 1 Cor xiv 36. To exclude the suggestion that what they said was in whole or in part their own thoughts and language, Paul says that the Thessalonians "received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God." 1 Thes ii 13. Those who believed and obeyed are described as having been "born again.....by the Word of God." Was that which was written to believers any less the Word of God than that which was spoken to unbelievers? The language of the apostle Paul precludes such an idea:—"We have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth." 1 Cor ii 12-13. The familiar character of these writings is no evidence that they were not written throughout under spirit control. It is presumption to fix on any passage—such as the allusion to Paul's "cloke" (2 Tim iv 13) and the "wine" for Timothy (1 Tim v 23)—and to say that the Spirit had nothing to do with its being written, and that, therefore, it is not a part of the Word of God. Who can, with authority, affirm that the reference to the "cloke" did not serve some purpose of the Spirit in the first century which does not now exist? No one; then none is justified in affirming that it was not inserted through Spirit guidance. The advice to Timothy about his "infirmities" is an illustration of brotherly solicitude, and thus embodies in a practical form the admonition that the members of the one body "should have the same care one for another." 1 Cor xii 25. The apostolic epistles were written not merely for the benefit of those to whom they were addressed, but also for subsequent generations. It is true of them, as of the earlier writings, that they "were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope." Rom xv 4. The personal matters contained in them are on a par with the biographical incidents of Old Testament history, and, in like manner, illustrate some of the principles of divine commands. They are all "profitable" for the "instruction" of "the man of God." Even if it could be proved that they were not written under Spirit guidance, the fact that they formed part of a Spirit-indited letter would be sufficient evidence of Spirit intention as to give them in the absence of a disclaimer, all the force of an inspired record. But such proof is not forthcoming; its place is supplied by audacious assertion.

The apostolic statement that "unto the Jews were committed the oracles of God" (Rom iii 1) suggests an enquiry: why were they so given? The answer is found in certain words of God, which Moses repeated to Israel:—"If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine; and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Exod xix 5-6. This object was not realized; for Israel failed to obey God's voice and keep his covenant. But though the nation, as a whole, failed in obedience, individual members succeeded in the exercise of faith; there was a remnant "according to the election of grace" Rom xi 5, who "obtained a good report" through listening to the voice of God as expressed in his written oracles. When those of them who were living in apostolic days substituted for the abrogated "works of the law," Gal ii 16, the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ," Rom iii 22, were they deprived of the custody of God's "oracles," or did they cease to be the depository of them? Rather did the national defection throw upon the faithful "remnant" an increased responsibility as "witnesses," Isa xliii 10, and custodians for God. The apostles and all other Jews of like mind showed by their zeal for Moses and the prophets, Acts xxiv 14; xviii 24, that they recognized this; they were in "great heaviness" and sorrow of heart for their "kinsmen according to the flesh" Rom ix 2-3, earnestly desiring that "they might be saved," Rom x 1; to effect which they "reasoned with them out of the Scriptures," Acts xvii 2, "saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." Acts xxvi 22. They recognized that the voice of God, after the appearing of Christ, was but a continuation of the voice which had spoken for the previous four thousand years, and consequently treasured the written "oracles of God" which succeeded the Pentecostal outpouring as much as those which preceded it.

When the Gentiles received "the word of the Lord" Acts xiii 48, they were placed in relation to "the oracles of God" in precisely the same position in regard to both privileges and responsibilities as were the Jewish followers of Christ. These two classes collectively constituted Spiritual Israel. Some of "the natural branches" of God's cultivated olive-tree were "broken off"—Rom xi 17-21—that branches from the "wild olive tree" "might be grafted in" ver. 19. With what object? That they might "partake of the root and fatness of the olive tree" verse 17. How were they to do this? By listening to the voice of him by whom it was planted. That "voice" was uttered to the people of Israel that they might become "a kingdom of priests and an holy nation." Jewish and Gentile believers in Christ have the prospect of becoming "kings and priests unto God"—Rev v 10—and they are even now "a royal priesthood, an holy nation." 1 Pet ii 9. Shall it be said that "the oracles of God" were "committed" to Jews after the flesh, and that they have not likewise, in their more comprehensive form, been committed to Jews after the Spirit? Previous generations have not thought so, or we should not read of "them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God." Rev xx 4. Will the present generation of inward Jews be inferior to those which have preceded it? If so, how can they expect to be among the "called and chosen and faithful," Rev xvii 14, whom John in vision saw "living and reigning with Christ a thousand years?" The "oracles of God" have been handed down to us from apostolic days through two channels, viz., the "little horn" of Daniel's "fourth beast" dominion, and the "Saints of the Most High." The little horn preserved the manuscripts but destroyed their teaching; whereas, the "Saints" preserved both. Between the two, there was continued strife; which is, in itself, a guarantee as to the genuineness of the Oracles transmitted to us. The printing press has superseded the necessity for preserving them in manuscript form, but it has not diminished the responsibility of defending their divine authorship and the whole of their contents. When there is disagreement among the brethren of Christ as to this duty, who causes the "division" which ensues? The uncompromising section are always blamed; they are always addressed in language parallel to that which Ahab uttered to Elijah; "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" 1 King xviii 17. The reply of Elijah is, in substance, their justification: "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalam" ver 18.

"The household of God" is described by Paul as "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord." Eph ii 20, 21. The essential features of this "temple" are defined by the same apostle in chap iv 4-6: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Their number is seven, which enables us to identify them with the "seven pillars" "hewn out" by "wisdom" when she "builded her house" Prov ix 1; they constitute, therefore, the perfection of revealed wisdom, they are complete and need no addition; neither must anything be taken away from them. The following may be considered to be the order of their importance: One God and Father, one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one hope, and one body. Now the body is a community composed solely of those who reject the traditions of men assembled in the creeds of Christendom, and who understand and believe the unadulterated truth of God, as revealed through the mouths of Moses, the prophets, Jesus and the apostles.

This definition of the "one body" shows that at that time the whole Bible, and not a selection from it, was recognized as the foundation on which the multitudinous body of Christ was based; a definition which is in harmony with the words of Christ concerning the twelve:—"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth" Jno xvii 17. The Old and New Testaments are the "Word of God" Jno x 35; 1 Cor xiv 36; therefore they constitute in their collective form the means by which the members of the "one body" are sanctified or made holy.

Psalm cxix is composed of a series of parallelisms, in which by a marvellous but simple variation of language divine revelation is constantly extolled; there are very few verses—perhaps half a dozen—which do not refer to it in some form. The following are a few illustrations:—"Blessed are they that keep his testimonies" ver 2; "Through thy precepts I get understanding," ver 4; "Teach me thy statutes" verse 12; "I will have respect unto thy ways" (ver 15; "I will not forget thy word" ver 16; the law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver" verse 72; "Teach me thy judgments" ver 108; "Thy law is the truth" verse 142; "All thy commandments are truth" ver 151; "All thy commandments are righteousness" verse 172. The words "testimonies," "precepts," "statutes," "ways," "word," "law," "judgments," "truth" "commandments," and "righteousness," are used interchangeably. They are sufficiently varied and comprehensive to include every feature of the Holy Scriptures; it is impossible to select any portion which does not come within the meaning of one or more—historical or prophetical, doctrinal or practical. "The truth" is the whole "Word of God;" consequently to believe the truth," 2 Thes ii 18, and to "obey the truth," Gal iii 1, requires the acceptance of that "word" in its entirety. "No lie is of the truth," 1 Jno ii 21; and therefore no error pertains to its synonym, "the Word of God"—another way of describing it as infallible.

"The truth of God," Rom iii 7, is identical with "the wisdom of God," 1 Cor ii 7, which is described as "manifold," Eph iii 10. Its first utterance was the prediction in Eden that the seed of the woman should bruise the seed of the serpent in the head, Gen iii 15. At a very early date it was the subject of rejection; the flesh, in the person of Cain "abode not in the truth," John viii 44, and became "a murderer." All subsequent revelation is but a "manifold" development of the Edenic announcement; the covenants with Abraham and David enlarge the outline, and the writings of the prophets and apostles fill in the detail. The whole is presented in type by the Mosaic law, the enactments of which are practically illustrated by the historical books of the Old Testament. The believers of "the truth" are not only "Abraham's seed," Gal iii 29, but the multitudinous "seed" of the "woman" Rev xii 17; a relationship which imposes upon them the obligation to receive and defend all that God has caused to be written in reference to that "seed" in its varied forms whether national or individual, fleshly, spiritual, mortal or immortal, [illegible] equalities a covenant each its special and distinctive clauses. Some of the promises are for national Israel, and some for Israel after the Spirit; the former are a necessary basis for the fulfilment of the latter, and, therefore, the one cannot be divorced from the other; to take away any part of their manifold elaboration is to impair their completeness. The heirs to an earthly estate would be considered foolish and blameworthy to allow the documents—whether a deed or a will—by which they were guaranteed possession, to be tampered with in the least, for fear that it might invalidate their claim; witness the care with which all such pieces of parchment are preserved and their words defended. How much more important that the written expression of the divine will, offering an everlasting inheritance, should be perused, understood, believed, obeyed, preserved, and defended, that there may be no risk of the heirs of God losing the proffered privilege.

The seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent represent two opposing elements, which have their ramifications in a variety of directions. They divide the Adamic race into two distinct classes, one of which is on the side of God and the other against him. From a national point of view, the Jewish race is the seed of the woman, and the Gentiles the seed of the serpent. From an individual standpoint these two seeds find their counterpart in the righteous and unrighteous Jews, and in the faithful and unfaithful brethren of Christ. The principles which they represent are united in each of God's sons, one being called "the old man" Eph iv 22, and the other "the new man" verse 24. The doctrinal and practical portions of the Bible set forth the means by which "the new man" may obtain the victory over "the old man;" the historical parts give illustrations of the way in which the two seeds have each, at various times, both nationally and individually, been in the ascendant; and the prophecies predict conflicts of a similar character. The gospel is glad tidings of the final triumph of the seed of the woman over the seed of the serpent, for which all the previous conflicts are in the aggregate a necessary preparation. The announcement in Eden was the germ of the "gospel preached unto Abraham" Gal iii 8, "the gospel preached" to the Israelites, Heb iv 2, and the gospel preached by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles. To believe that gospel at any stage of its development is to believe that the seed of the woman will completely bruise the seed of the serpent. The steps by which the final consummation is reached are not only of importance to the [illegible] the woman. Who can [illegible] native record be found? Nowhere but in the Holy Scriptures; they extend from the third chapter of Genesis to the end of the Apocalypse. The Bible is, in fact, the book of these two seeds. There has always been some portion of the serpent's seed which has tried to pervert or destroy the inspired description of its conflicts and final defeat. It has treated the Word of God in the same way that it dealt with the Son of God, and with a similar result; resurrection has followed crucifixion. The attempt to extinguish it has increased its power. Being incorruptible, 1 Pet i 23, it cannot die, neither can its vitality be weakened, "The Word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." ver 25. The gospel is thus synonymous with the Word of God, and the basis of fellowship for believers of the gospel is the whole of that Word, viz, the Bible.

The only occupants of Wisdom's temple are the believers of that which is variously described as the truth, the one faith, the one hope, the gospel, the kingdom, the way of salvation, the way of the Lord, and the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," etc. An essential condition of their entrance is the acceptance of "the wisdom of God" in its elementary form; without which they cannot grow, 1 Peter ii 2, in that wisdom, as did their elder Brother, Luke ii 52. Their growth, or increase, should continue until they "filled with the knowledge of God's will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding." Col i 9. If this be neglected, they fail to fulfil the object for which they entered wisdom's temple.

Among the exhortations to wisdom's children are the following: "Let their heart retain my words; keep my commandments and live" Prov iv 4; "depart not from the words of my mouth," ch. v 7, "for my mouth shall speak truth," ch. viii 7; "blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates. For whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord" chap viii 34-35. Everything in the Holy Scriptures is the voice of wisdom, uttered "at sundry times and in divers manners." Heb i 1. That voice invites all its children to hear all that it has said, and exhorts them to "depart not from" any of its "words." If dutiful they comply; if froward, they evade the obligation by perverting the words or denying that they have come from the mouth of wisdom. In this way, every thing that has been written concerning the "seven pillars" of wisdom's temple has been nullified. The "one God" has been transformed into a co equal and co-eternal member of a Trine Godhead; the "one Spirit has been treated as a person distinct from the Father; the "one Lord" has been represented as being without beginning, and as the possessor, when on earth, of a nature which could neither be tempted nor die; the "one Faith" has been defined as having reference to a land in heaven; the one Baptism has been altered from the immersion of adult believers to the sprinkling of infants; the one hope has been interpreted to mean union with Christ at death; and the one body has been identified with a miscellaneous collection of religious communities which believe and practice totally opposite things. The list of perversions might be further increased by the almost endless catalogue of heresies chronicled in ecclesiastical history. Severally, they impair one or more of wisdom's pillars; collectively, they destroy the whole. To protect the "seven pillars" from everything which mars them is an obligation imposed upon all who enter the temple.

The one Spirit is necessary to wisdom's temple from two points of view. First, in reference to Creation: and second, to Revelation. Without the Adamic creation there could be no Revelation from God to man, and without such revelation, there could be no salvation. The work of the Spirit in creation is nullified by Paganism and Darwinism; and its operation in the process of revelation and salvation is perverted by Apostasy. One section says that the "word" given by the Spirit is a dead letter, unless the Spirit operates on the mind of the hearer to produce belief; another teaches that the Spirit did not so completely control the writers under its breathing power, as to prevent them from making mistakes. The former is refuted by the declaration that "faith cometh by hearing.....the Word of God" Rom x 17, and the latter by the statement that "the Spirit is truth," 1 John v 6. The Spirit in this connection is described as a "witness;" and it is associated with the other witnesses, the water and blood. Every one professing to be a follower of Jesus Christ should be in a position to prove it by these three witnesses; he must show that he has been baptized in water, that he has been cleansed from his sin through the blood of Christ, and that he believes the writing of the Spirit. "For there are three that bear record, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one" verses 7 and 8. The belief of the Spirit's teaching requires continuance and growth, and must be accompanied by obedience to its commands; they who comply are said to "walk after the Spirit" Rom viii 4, to mind the things of the Spirit, verse 5, to be led by the Spirit, verse 14, to sow to the Spirit, Gal vi 8, and to live in the Spirit, Gal v 25. An ecclesia fulfils these conditions has the witness or testimony of the Spirit that its members are doers of the word and not hearers only," Jas i 22; and they may be described as endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, Eph iv 3. On the other hand if an ecclesia perverts, rejects, or nullifies, any portion of the Spirit's teaching, it deprives itself to that extent of the witness of the Spirit.

The expression "led by the Spirit," Rom viii 14, brings to remembrance the means which God provided for leading the children of Israel through the wilderness, viz, a pillar of cloud and a pillar of fire. Ex xiii 21-22. "Thou leadest them in the day by a cloudy pillar, and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way wherein they should go." Neh ix 12. He spake unto them in a cloudy pillar, Psa xcix 7. The pillar was a light and a guide, and God spake out of it; in these respects it was a type of the inspired word in relation to our wilderness wanderings. And what is to be said of its origin? It was wholly divine. No human hand had anything to do with providing it; its component element was doubtless spirit. To attribute a human authorship to the antitypical spirit pillar involves its counterpart in the Mosaic type, the element which can nowhere be found. If not in the type, it cannot be in the antitype. Moses desired the assistance of the flesh, in the person of his father-in-law, as a guide in the wilderness. "Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how are we to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes." Num x 31. But this was not part of the divine arrangement; the guidance must be of God only. The fact that the word is called the spirit possesses a significance which cannot be overestimated. It shows that the authorship of the inspired Word is wholly spirit, not a mixture of flesh and spirit; and that all the characteristics of the spirit which are capable of being put into words have been embodied in the inspired writings. The spirit is truth, 1 Jno v 6, in all its manifestations, and therefore the Word is truth, Jno xvii 17; the spirit is Holy, and the word is Holy; the spirit is incorruptible, and the word is incorruptible, 1 Pet i 23. Every occupant of wisdom's temple should have no difficulty in perceiving that incorruptibility and error are mutually exclusive terms. If the inspired Word contained error, it could neither be called truth nor incorruptible; and if it were the result of a combined divine and human authorship, it would be not the sword of the Spirit, Eph vi 17, but the sword of the spirit and the flesh.

The objection to defining inspired writings as infallible is an illustration of the way in which men often deceive themselves by a mere word. The non-existence of the word infallible in the English version, except in Acts i 3, is no evidence that that the idea containing in it is wanting. There is a good reason for the absence of the word; the translators, as is well known, confined themselves as much as possible to pure Saxon; infallible is from the French; it fills a useful gap in the English language; without it we should have to say errorless, incapable of error, freedom from error, or inability to commit error, etc.

The Scriptures are not silent about error, but to whom do they attribute it? To false prophets, etc., 1 Jno iv 1. The apostle John contrasts the spirit of truth with the spirit of error. Verse 6. Error and truth are mutually exclusive terms. The spirit of error is a fallible spirit, and therefore its antithesis, the spirit of truth is an infallible spirit. The infallible spirit is of God. "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." 1 Jno iv 6. When reasoning on Matt xxv 46, it is rightly contended that everlasting punishment cannot compromise the endless existence involved in its antithesis, life eternal. The same argument, when applied to this passage, excludes error from the spirit of truth.

When a statement is made by an apostle concerning divine inspiration, the character of the spirit and its workmanship is necessarily involved in what is said. Bearing in mind, therefore, the testimony already adduced, the familiar declaration of the apostle Paul's may be amplified as follows:—All Scripture given by inspiration of God is incorruptible, and an embodiment of the Spirit of truth, not of the spirit of error; and it is profitable for doctrine, reproof, etc. To contend that the word profitable is used by the apostle to limit the character of inspired writing is a mistake; it is profitable for making men God-like, because the writing itself is God-like; and it would not be so if its authorship embraced a fallible element.

The Church of God at Fonthill, Ontario, Canada, will, (D. V.) hold their 7th Annual May Meeting on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 26 to 28, 1911. Arrangements have been made with Brother L. E. Conner, of Cleveland, Ohio, to assist Brother F. L. Austin, the Pastor. A cordial invitation to all.

Fonthill is beautifully situated 12 miles west of Niagara Falls, 5 miles north of Welland. Connections from both cities, Niagara Falls Central, and N. St. Catharine and Toronto Railways Electric Roads.

J. H. FLETCHER, Sec.

The third quarterly meeting of the Illinois Evangelist Board will convene in Oregon, June 3 and 4, 1911. The business session will be conducted on Saturday evening, at which time plans for the Annual Conference will be considered, and committees appointed to make the necessary arrangements. On Sunday special services will be held, and communion observed. A cordial invitation is extended to the brethren to meet with us at that time.

At our last Conference a resolution was adopted requesting each brother to contribute one dollar, and each sister fifty cents every year to cover the expenses of the Annual meeting, said contribution to be made by each member of the Church whether they attend the Conference or not. The money raised is not to be used for evangelistic work, but is separate and in addition to the amount contributed for that purpose.

The following collectors were appointed at the various churches to receive contributions for this fund:—Oregon, F H Knodle; Lanark, J M Glotfelty; Adeline, Charles Gesin; Dixon, Miss Anna Adams; Chicago, Miss Lelia Whitehead; Antioch, J H Williams; Camden; Elder Rolla Hightower; Ripley, J W Cooper. Members not connected with any local Church should remit directly to Wm T Hardesty, Treasurer, Oregon, Illinois. All who have not sent in their subscriptions to this fund are requested to do so by June 1st.

G. ELDRED MARSH, Sec.

PLEASE don't send to this office for W. H. Wilson's works, nor for John Foore's tracts, nor for D. C. Robison's tract. We do not keep them in stock, as they are handled by the authors direct.

LOOK. LOOK.

Here Is a Good Big Chance.

We want a lot of New Subscribers, and with a little effort you can get us one or more. We do not ask you to work for us for nothing, but will pay you for what you do. Here is our offer to you:

For a New Subscriber at the regular rate of $1.50 per year, we will send to any address you name

10 copies of "A Letter to a Friend"
or
One Pound of other Tracts,
or
One-half Pound of Tracts and 5 copies of A Letter to a Friend.

This will enable you to earn a supply of tracts to distribute among your friends, and perhaps start some one on the way to the Kingdom.

LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have a number of copies of "The Word of the Kingdom" which originally sold at $1.50. This is a work gotten out by Brother John O. Woodruff before he died. Only a few copies remain, and they will make excellent presents. While they last we will mail you one Free, if you will send us

Two New Subscribers.

JUST LOOK AGAIN, PLEASE!

We have on hand some copies of the Emphatic Diaglott. All of our readers known what it is—a word for word translation of the New Testament, by Brother Benjamin Wilson. There is a column with a line of Greek and beneath it the equivalent English words so the reader may know just the word that is used. A very valuable help in Bible study. We will give you one of these books Free if you will send us

Four New Subscribers.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the doners request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

WE trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide THE RESTITUTION to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

"A Century of Indiana" is the title of a new history written by State Senator Edward A. Moore, and published by the American Book Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, price 75 cents. The volume contains 340 pages, and gives the earliest history of the State on down to the present day. Indiana today stands second to no state in the Union, and this work gives the whole history of the State in concise and attractive form, carefully indexed, so that it has an added value as a reference book. It is a splendid book for the home, and for Indiana Students it is of priceless value. No library is complete without it. If your book dealer cannot supply it send as above and get a copy. There is pleasure in reading it, for every Indianan is proud of his State, and besides enjoyment there is real profit in this work.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av, Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, postpaid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express a lower rate will be made. Brothers and sisters, if you cannot preach a series of sermons to your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, as one can hardly read this little missive and not receive benefit. Send to us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will do good and be blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued these books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should, and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for 75c each.

THE article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form, the size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. It is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are handing to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Juergensen, Barberton, Ohio.

BROTHER H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order, NOT by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind. not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams and her husband George, [illegible] and the paper is sent in the name and address of the husband the paper for a year, [illegible] no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid in us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We can not hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

The price of this book is 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS."

VOLUME LX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA JUNE 7, 1911. NUMBER 21.

Poetry.

The Sweeter Heritage.

Oh, not for heavenly mansions bright,
My heart is longing day by day:
The victor's palm, the crown of light,
Nor harp of gold, nor bright array,
But in the fields of Paradise,
Where Life's pure river sweetly flows,
Beneath eternal summer skies,
My weary soul would find repose.

Not streets of gold nor gates of pearl,
But flowery paths and woodland ways,
Where bursting buds their fragrance unfurl,
And birds pour forth glad song of praise:
Amidst the sweetness and perfume
Of Eden's flowers for aye to be,
And drink from Youth's eternal spring,
And eat the fruit of Life's fair tree.

And what is this for which I sigh?
Just the dear Earth redeemed from sin
No mansion far beyond the sky,
But Eden fair, restored again:
And there to sit at Jesus' feet
Arrayed in raiment white as snow,
And fully learn the lesson sweet
"Consider how the lilies grow."

A Review.

[This was originally written for a local paper, but was not published, probably because it did not please the Editor.]

Mr. Editor:

I noticed in the Recorder a synopsis of two funeral sermons, in which no reference is made to the second coming of Christ, or the resurrection of the dead. Why this omission of these so great events? If you will allow space in your valuable paper we will endeavor to point out why so little interest is taken today in these two cardinal doctrines that cheered the saints of old and occupy so large a space in the Sacred Page.

Many profess to believe in the return of Christ, who make what the Word of God says on the subject of none effect by holding popular traditions. The truth is such a perfect system that it will not admit of the introduction of one error without making confusion. The return of Christ is a burning and shining light throughout the Scriptures, and upon it depends the resurrection of the dead, the reward of the righteous, the fulfillment of the covenants of promise—in short the world's redemption. This important truth is nullified by the belief that all good men go to heaven when they die, and that heaven, not the earth, is the everlasting abode of the righteous, and that all the good have gone there and are saved.

Why should Christ return to the earth, if at "the end of the world" all the good of Adam's race are to be taken to heaven, and all the wicked are to be plunged into a hell of torment and the earth burned up? Where is there room left for a belief in the personal return of Christ to earth? Belief in the second coming of Christ by those who are wedded to the theory heaven-going at death, is very inconsistent. The false theory will not harmonize with the truth. It is more consistent to hold the radical orthodox theory of heaven going, and deny entirely the personal coming again of Christ.

The only safe way is to accept the whole truth and nothing but truth. What has every reader of Scripture a right to expect from the prophecies and promises we find in the Old Testament especially? The very first promise we have, that the seed of the woman would bruise the serpent's head, would surely give us to understand that Christ, who is the seed of the woman referred to, will accomplish what is implied by bruising the serpent's head.

What evil had the serpent introduced into the world? It had really been the cause of all evil in whatever form it might appear, and to bruise the serpent's head could mean nothing else than to remove all the evils of which the serpent's lie (ye shall not surely die) was the first cause. We come along down the ages until the time when the seed of the woman appears. Does he bruise the serpent's head to the extent that the promise would imply? Does he remove the evils with which the world had then become full? The only sense in which it can be said that he bruised the serpent's head is so far as it applied to himself. He gained the victory over death and the grave in himself and for himself, but death still held in the tomb all those who had died in the faith, and it was declared by the apostle it was heresy to teach that the resurrection was past already. Hence so long as death held in its grasp those who had died in the Abrahamic faith, the serpent's head had not been bruised.

Look at the world at the time that Christ was here and trace its history to the present: view it as it is today, and who can say that the serpent's head has been bruised? Who can say that sin with all its resultant evils, has been eliminated from the earth? Here is a work that Christ as the seed of the woman was to do. He came, he went, but he did not do it. Shall we say that he has failed to do the work allotted to him? Nay verily.

Again we go back and read that the whole earth was to be filled with the glory of the Lord. From numerous testimonies we may be sure that this wonderful work was to be performed in and through Christ, for whom and on account of whom all things are created. Did he, when he was here near two thousand years ago, fill the earth with the glory of the Lord? No. We have seen from the covenants of promise that the world was to be given into his hands, and that he would bless all nations of the earth, Gen. xxii 16 18. He came, but all nations of the earth are not blessed. The covenant with David was that God would give to Christ his throne, and that he would reign over the house of Jacob forever. The house of Jacob is still scattered among the nations of the earth, the throne of David is in ruins; Christ has been here, and has gone. The covenant is not fulfilled.

Will God's covenant never be fulfilled? Who would dare say that God's promises will fail? We go back again to Moses, and hear him declare, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things." The prophet came and appeared unto Israel. Did they hear him? No, they did not. They have not heard him yet. "Blindness in part has happened to Israel," and Christ has become a "stone of stumbling and a rock of offense" unto them, and yet Moses truly declared that they should hear him in all things.

He was to be a prophet like unto Moses, to do what Moses did. Moses appeared unto Israel and was refused for a time; so Christ appeared to Israel and was refused for a time. Will he yet do as Moses did, deliver Israel? Will he yet be a prophet whom they will hear in all things? He must be, or the Scriptures of truth are broken, and the word of God has failed, which is impossible.

From the prophecy of Isaiah we have learned that there was a Son to be born, and a Child to be given, and he was to be the Prince of Peace, and of the increase of his government and peace there was to be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. When he came those whose hearts had burned in contemplation of the fulfillment of these promises believed that he would fulfill them. They had a right to expect a fulfillment of what God had sworn to, and they had a right to expect that Christ would be the one who would fulfill them, for they could not be mistaken in regard to his identity. They could feel sure that he was the seed of the woman, that he was the seed of Abraham, to whom the promise was made; that he was the prophet like unto Moses, that he was the seed of David who would build up the ruins of David's throne, and reign over the house of Jacob. They could be sure that he was the very person. All the marks of identity necessary were in him.

I say again, they had a right to expect from these promises and prophecies that he would accomplish these things predicted. Had they been challenged, had some one said to them, You have no right to expect such things, they could have readily pointed them to. Thus saith the Lord "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." To thee and to thy seed will I give the land for an everlasting inheritance, and in thy seed shall all families of the earth be blessed. A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you; him shall ye hear in all things. As truly as I live the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. And David says of this, that it is "All his salvation and his desire."

To Isaiah's prophecy they could point and ask, Who is this Child that was to be born, and the Son that was to be given? The only answer that could be given is that he was the one who was born in Bethlehem. Very well, then they could say, to that son, that child, was the throne of David to be given, and that he was to reign over the house of Jacob, for in the very same passage it says that the government was to be upon his shoulders, that he was to be the Prince of Peace, and of the increase of his government and peace there should be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. What else could they expect but that he would be the one to fulfill these glorious promises? Where is the mistake?

He did not fulfill them. Did he fail? No indeed. There is a mistake that never can be corrected if Christ does not return to the earth again and fulfill these burning words of Scripture.

Zacharias saw that through Him would be fulfilled these prophecies, and declared "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercies promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham," Luke i. 68 73 At his birth angels appeared and identified him as the Prince of Peace, and proclaiming him the one that was to bring peace on the earth and good will toward all men.

The world has passed through the darkest ages of its history since that time; instead of executing judgment, justice and righteousness upon the throne of David, David's throne is still in ruins; instead of being a prophet like unto Moses, whom Israel should hear, they cry out "Away with him; we will not have this man to rule over us." Instead of receiving the land promised to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance, the land is still in desolation, and all nations are groaning underneath the burdens of cruel oppression.

Christ has been here. He has disappeared, and that behind dark and dismal clouds that hang over the earth like the pall of death. Behind a frowning providence he has hid his face. Is all a failure? Is all a failure, I ask? Is the Bible a falsehood and a fraud? Must we hand it over to the infidel, and admit that it is what he claims? Nay verily. A thousand times, nay. But if Christ has gone away to remain away; if there is no second coming of Christ to really and literally fulfill the promises, then God's word has failed. Where lies the trouble? In the word of God? Is it a failure on the part of his beloved Son, the man at his right hand? No indeed, a thousand times No!

As truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with my glory. My words shall not return to me void; it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

Where is the trouble? The trouble is in the apostate religious world. It has departed from the truth and given heed to fables which have fixed up on the minds of the people a tradition which has set Christ and all his redeemed home to heaven as their eternal abode, predicted the destruction of the earth at once, and thus the Word of God to all these grand promises is made to no effect.

He shall be [illegible] Prince of Peace; then the [illegible] heavenly host shall [illegible] fulfilment, "Glory to God [illegible] and on earth peace [illegible] men," and they [illegible] words as imperatives, [illegible] Jehovah, "As truly as I live [illegible] earth shall be filled with [illegible] Num. xiv. 21.

We wish now to consider [illegible] of the dead and resurrection [illegible] is the greatest fact in human [illegible] ence, considered in its relation to [illegible] individual. Its occurrence [illegible] ble and universal, its effects [illegible] and destructive to everything [illegible] the range of its baleful [illegible] saddening every joy, and [illegible] all the sweets of life. Who [illegible] felt its iron hand? Who has [illegible] held the loved one chilled and [illegible] by its desolating blast? The [illegible] ing child with all its prattling [illegible] ence and winning ways, the [illegible] ion of youth, rosy and healthful [illegible] gay, the cherished wife, the [illegible] husband and the tried and [illegible] friend—which of them has not [illegible] torn from our side by the iron hand of this ruthless and indiscriminating enemy? One day we have seen them with bright eye, beaming countenance, supple frame, and have heard the words of friendship and intelligence drop from their living lips; and the next we looked upon them stretched on the bier, still, cold, motionless, ghostly, dead!

What shall we say to these things? Death brings grief to the living. It overwhelms them with a sorrow that refuses consolation. It is not for themselves that they mourn; news of life would bring gladness, even if friends were far distant, and intercourse impossible. No, it is for the dead that their hearts are pained within them. Now why is this? If death be merely a change of state, and not a destruction of being, why all this heart-breaking for those who have fallen by its terrible sword? It cannot be on account of the uncertainties "beyond the grave;" because our grief is just as poignant for those who are believed to have "gone to heaven," as for those about whom doubts may be entertained. Tears flow quite as fast for the good as for the bad, and perhaps a little faster. There is something inconsistent with the popular theory here. If our friends are really "gone to glory," we ought to feel as thankful as we do when they are promoted to honor "here below;" but we do not; and why? Because the strength of natural instinct can never be overcome by a theological fiction, however hard we may try to believe it. Men will never practically believe the occurrence of death to be the commencement of life, when they see it to be the extinction of all they ever knew or felt of life. Yet, almost everybody, theoretically, believes that the dead are not dead, but "gone before," that they are praising God among the ransomed above, and therefore alive.

The popular theory will not allow that a dead man is really dead. It teaches that [illegible] changed [illegible] of God's people no being a glorious party, but the purest and best that will ever be organized, with Christ as future King. Those working for the Christ are the only politicians working for pure, honest government.

Dear Brother Underwood:

My time is just due and so I will enclose a money order to pay for it.

I have taken the dear old RESTITUTION ever since I came into the faith thirteen years ago. In fact, it was one means in the hands of Brother Foore of bringing me to see the truth. I intend to take your paper as long as we live and can pay for it, which I trust will be till the return of our dear Master.

Many thanks for carrying me over. I am your Sister in hope of life when the King comes

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE paper of May 24th, and this date, are consecutive issues.

A FAIR trial requires that the accused one be given every possible chance to defend his self of the charge made. The charge must be made distinct and clear in detail. The accused must know what he is charged with and by whom. This is necessary in order that he may arrange his defense, and have his "advocate made conversant with all the necessary details of the case, so that at the proper time he may speak for his client. If the time given is not sufficient, or there are any hindering circumstances, the judge will extend the time, so that all may be brought out that has bearing on the case. Shall he still be held in fellowship to be recognized as a brother, notwithstanding his wicked and ungodly acts, just because in past years he had "done much for the cause of Christ"? The minister above referred to goes about among our churches, and no doubt teaches that to the one who holds on to the end, the one who continues faithful, who is an overcomer, to him will be given the reward. Yet in his "private" talk he will uphold the man who depends on the observance of the law for salvation, as equal with the one who relies the grace of God for deliverance. upholds even the man who teaches our Lord Jesus Christ was the on of Joseph and not the Son of God, because at one time this man did not so teach, but years ago did much for the cause. This man is very earnest in his belief, and our minister says to the world that what a man believes is not so much difference if he is sincere and his life is clean. Some of us are so "peculiar" that if the past clean life of the now degenerate one will not suffice for him, then the past work of the gospel nullifier will not hold him. How about it brother and sister? Our "opinion" is not good—what does the Word teach?

"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man."

How shall we positively know when we shall arrive at the period of time described as "the last days?" We are informed that it would be a period of time so marked for covetousness and self-love, that it would be of common remark of worldly men, who know not God's Word.

The tremendous conflict so prevalent today as between capital and labor has its root in covetousness and self-love. Combinations called trusts (but in fact are mis-trusts,) is the merging together of capital to control the price of the necessities of life. "She hath done what she could; she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying." Mark xiv. 8.

This is one of those minute and delicate details which I have often noted as characteristic of Mark. It completes the picture. Mary had pondered, probably long and anxiously, how she could most palpably show her esteem and devotion to Jesus. She procured this precious ointment—perhaps spending her all upon her beloved Lord. She may have had some dim foresight of his death; and her act may have been one of faith as well as devotion. However this may be, she did all in her power to testify her supreme love and honor for the Messiah; so he understood and appreciated it and so he has prophesied it to all generations in these striking words recorded by Mark, "She hath done what she could."

The Wall Street Journal said: Such concentration as this, is dangerous in a political sense. The people have already been greatly disturbed by the concentration that has taken place in the industrial world.....But concentration in the industrial world is a far less menacing condition than concentration in banking. The men or set of men who control the credits of the country control the country."

You will possibly remember the bank panic of 1907, which came upon the country during a period of prosperity and abundance; the banks at this time showed heavy deposits. Did you not observe at that time the concentrated control of the money of the nation?

It is said that the cash of the nation was seized and controlled by the banking trust. The billion dollars controlled by the trusts in 1899 to in January 1901, amounted to $20,379,163,511, and in January 1908, it amounted to $31,672,160,754. 10,020 independent plants had been merged in combines.

The Wall Street Journal speaking of the wealth amassed by combines says that from 1900 to 1908, the Steel Trust made $875,000,000; and during the same period a railroad trust made $195,000,000. They are heaping up treasure together for the last days.

saic Law was given is expressed in the command to Aaron, to "put difference between holy and unholy and between unclean and clean." Lev x 10. Of Aaron and his sons it was said: "They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it." Lev xxii 9. To the Levites it was said, "Neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel, lest ye die." Num xviii 32. In ordaining an altar of stone God said to Moses, "If thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it." Exod xx 25. In prescribing a sacrifice of peace offerings "of the children of Israel," God instructed Moses that it might be eaten on the first and second day only; of him who ate any on the third day it was said, he "shall bear his iniquity because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the Lord." Lev xix 8.

The whole of the Mosaic law was "holy." Rom vii 12, hence to disregard it, pervert any of its elements was to profane it. Of this both priests and people were guilty. When charged with having "polluted the house of the Lord" they "despised his words." 2 Chron xxxvi 14-16. In Zedekiah's reign they attended for a time to the command that at the end of every seven years their servants "go free" Jer xxxiv 8-15; but subsequently they cancelled this act of liberation, and Jehovah thus addressed them: "Ye turned and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection" Verse 16. God's name was polluted by their disregarding his holy law. Writing about those whose duty it was specially to instruct the people, Jehovah says, "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned my holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane." Ezek xxii 26. When some of them offered "polluted bread upon" God's altar, they professed inability to see in it anything dishonoring to God; they said, "Wherein have we despised thy name?" in reply to Jehovah's inquiry, "If, then, I be a father, where is mine honor? And if I be a Master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of Hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name." Mal i 6, 7. "Ye have profaned it," saith God, "in that ye say, The table of the Lord is polluted," verse 12.

The inspired "Scriptures" are no less holy than the Mosaic law; they were written by "holy men," under the direction of the Holy Spirit. To say that any part is not Spirit-given is to describe as unholy; or, in other words, to profane holy writings; and the effect is to violate the Word of God, and to pollute the name of the Lord. The Bible being wholly the product of divine inspiration, those who attribute to some parts a human authorship are guilty of profanity.

Between profanity and blasphemy the difference if any, is one of degree; the latter term being somewhat the stronger. Blasphemy does not necessarily involve a wicked motive or an irreligious state of mind; it is, on the contrary, more frequently found in those who are professedly religious. It is the Apostasy, not the heathen, that is charged with being full of names of blasphemy. Rev xvii 3. The apostle Paul describes himself, before conversion, as "a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious" 1 Tim i 13; and yet at that time he was "a Hebrew of the Hebrews, as touching the law, a Pharisee.....touching the righteousness, which is in the law blameless." Though reverencing the Mosaic law, he declared Jesus Christ to be an imposter; but he "obtained mercy, because," says he, "I did it ignorantly and in unbelief." 1 Tim i 13. As a blasphemer, Saul of Tarsus was sincere and conscientious. To deny that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah is very similar to the denial that the inspired Word involves infallibility; if the former be blasphemy the latter can be no less. Whether or not it touches upon "blasphemy against the Holy Spirit" Matt xii 31, is a question deserving of consideration.

The Pharisees ascribed the Spirit's miracles to Beelzebub, and the theory of fallible inspiration attributes error to the Spirit's writing. In regard to the only manifestation of the Spirit in the present day, there could certainly be nothing more blasphemous than to represent the work of the Spirit in the Holy Scriptures as a combination of truth and error. It is sufficient to justify action similar to that of the Apostle Paul's towards "Hymenaeus and Alexander"—"Whom I have delivered unto Satan that they may learn not to blaspheme" (1 Tim. i. 20.) Discontinuance of fellowship is the only way in which we can follow this precedent.

The incorporation, under inspiration, of documents containing error involves the same principle as fallible inspiration; if the one be possible, the other is also; if there be any difference it is one of degree only and that of a very slight character. The following remarks in which are in harmony with this conclusion: "Plenary inspiration will be deeper incomparable with the beast, which modern criticism has invested with the highest probability, though it can ever carry the presumption further from the realm of the probable into the realm of the certain, that many ancient and separate documents have been incorporated into the structure of Scripture..... There is no more reason why the Holy Spirit should not have made use of human documents, than there is against the employment of human agency and human position at all. Only in such cases, the documents incorporated become vested with a new character from the new relation into which they are placed, and having the seal of the divine authority put upon them, partake of the sanction of inspiration as completely as any other portion of the Word." That which is here recognized to be unproved is and must by some to be an idle discussion. The lamentation of David over Saul and Jonathan is adduced as a still later instance; and for evidence we are referred to the words: "Behold it is written in the book of Jasher" (2 Sam. i. 18.) But who was Jasher? No one knows. It is mere imagination to describe him as the "national poet." The name means upright (see margin.) The book in question was [illegible] the book of the upright; it may have been an inspired [illegible] one, with authority, nor that it was not. But what evidence is there that David's lament was excised from such a book? None. The sentence, "It is written in the book of Jasher" is quite compatible with a duplicate record by the Spirit similar to some of the incidents recorded in the Kings and Chronicles. Furthermore, is it a justifiable conclusion to say that that which is "written in the book of Jasher" consisted of David's lamentation? We are first told that "David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son" (ver. 17;) the next verse is not only enclosed in parenthesis, but commences with a word which shows that it is treating of an additional matter:—"Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the song of (R. V.) the bow: behold it is written in the book of Jasher." What is written? "The song of the bow." But is this "song" synonymous with David's lamentation? This is not clear; but assuming that it is, what is the character of David's utterance? It makes specific reference to the death of Saul and Jonathan:—they "were lovely and pleasant in their live, and in their death they were not divided" (ver. 23.) If already "written in the book of Jasher," it was a prophecy, and, therefore, a work of inspiration. Thus, from every point of view, the conclusion based on the latter half of verse 18 is unwarrantable.

Labels.

"You can go right on talking to father, Mr. Jerrold," Madge Roberts said gaily, "but I want Mrs. Jerrold to see my Virot hat."

"I am sure, just because I happen to be a mere man, you wouldn't be cruel enough to deprive me of a pleasure," Mr. Jerrold retorted.

Madge dimpled and made him a courtesy. She could not help being happy that the hat was so becoming.

"And it cost, exclusive of the label that I begged from Cousin Adelaide, exactly six dollars and seventy cents," she explained, triumphantly, to Mrs. Jerrold. "Every girl I know, except one that I've let into the secret, really thinks it is a Virot."

"Why not let them think it a Roberts, and get the credit you deserve?" Mr. Jerrold suggested with, beneath the light words, gravity which Madge was too absorbed to notice.

"If that isn't a mere man question!" she responded. "To get looked down upon by lots of people when a simple little label can get me looked up to! I made my suit myself, and it's a big a success as my hat—and everybody thinks it came from Roberts'. It's my good luck to be a rich cousin who can furnish the funds at Roberts' shops. I'm quite willing to keep my talents in the background; it counts a great deal more to be stylish than to be talented. I must run now—and take my Virot to the recital. Goodby, both of you."

It was a careless scrap of talk—nothing was further from the girl's thought than that it would influence her life. Yet only four months later, when her father's sudden death made it necessary for her to become a wage earner, that winter evening returned to her in a way she was never to forget. She had gone to Mr. Jerrold to ask his influence in obtaining a secretaryship of which she had heard.

Mr. Jerrold was kindness itself, but he shook his head gravely.

"Miss Madge," he said, "I would rather lose a thousand dollars than say what I must say, yet I should not be fair to you if I did not say it. I cannot recommend you for the secretaryship because it is a position of responsibility, and demands a woman of irreproachable honesty and honor. It is the Virot label that stands in the way. Miss Madge, it is not that I should not trust you as far as you saw, but—I could not be sure that you would see clearly. I will do my best to help you obtain some other position, but I could not in justice to the trust imposed upon me recommend you for this."

Two minutes later a girl hurried down the street, her cheeks burning and her eyes full of tears. But she had learned her lesson.—Selected by S. Roxana Wing.

Doing One's Best.

The habit of always doing one's best enters into the very marrow of one's heart and character; it affects one's bearing, one's self possession. The man who does everything to a finish has a feeling of serenity; he is not easily thrown off his balance; he has nothing to fear and can look the world in the face because he feels conscious that he has not put shoddy into anything and that he has had nothing to do with shams and that he has always done his level best. The sense of efficiency, of being master of one's craft, of being equal to an emergency, the consciousness of possessing the ability to do with superiority whatever one undertakes, will give soul satisfaction which a half-hearted, slipshod worker never knows. When a man feels throbbing [illegible] the power to do what he undertakes as well as it can possibly be done, and all his faculties say "Amen" to what he is doing and give their unqualified approval to his efforts—this is happiness, this is success. This buoyant sense of power spurs the faculties to their fullest development.

It Takes Two.

A lad of seventeen, the apprentice of a carpenter, had been sent to a saloon to take the measure for a new counter. It was very cold weather and he arrived shaking with the cold, for his coat was thin. The saloon keeper immediately mixed a hot drink and pushed it over the counter to him. "It will cost you nothing," he said. "Drink it and you will soon stop shivering, my boy." "He meant kindly, too, and didn't mean any harm," said the apprentice, as he told the story.

"That's what made it harder to push it back and say I didn't want it."

"It must have been a big temptation," said his friend. "Well," replied the lad, "it takes two to make a temptation. There is no cold weather can make me drink what I don't want to. The temptation I'm afraid of is the one that I'm ready for before it comes, by hankering after it. I don't take much credit to myself for refusing that drink, and if I'd taken it, why, I shouldn't put all the blame on the saloon keeper, as some folks do. It takes two every time to make a successful temptation."

Excuses.

It is the everlasting finding of excuses which palsies the Christian Church. Teachers are needed in the Sunday Schools. There are many capable and available for the work, who are as well able to do it as many who are already engaged in it but when approached they all have excuses. Men and women are needed on the mission field, but when the call is sent to them they all make excuses. The Mission Boards are constantly seeking workers for specific needs and they seek for them in vain. Women, doctors, teachers and other workers have some good excuse for not responding. If we did not want to find such excuses, we would not find them.—C. E. World.

Nebraska Berean Lesson. No. 7.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

1. Do the words "come again" John xiv 3, and "appear the second time" Heb. ix. 28, imply that Christ has come once and will appear again? If so, explain what bearing his first coming has upon the second.

2 Point out the historic and prophetic truths combined as cause and effect in these texts: Isa. liii 12; 1 Cor xi. 26; Titus ii. 13-14; Phil. ii. 8-11.

3. By two texts, one selected from Acts i. the other from 1 Thess. iv. prove that Christ will come personally.

4. What should be the attitude of a believer toward the coming of the Lord? Titus ii. 11 12; Phil. iii. 20; 1 Thess. i. 9-10; Heb. ix. 28; 2 Tim. iv. 8.

5. When he comes will he find the world in a state of righteousness and peace, or of wickedness and trouble? Matt. xxiv.

6. What will be the destiny of the righteous and the wicked at his coming? Matt. xiii. 38 41; xxiv. 42-51; 2 Thess. i. 7-11.

7. Explain 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

8. (a) Who is the author of Revelations? Rev. i. 1. (b) How many times is it said in the 22d chapter "I come quickly?" (c) What is the last sentence—the last word—we have on record from Jesus Christ?

ROBT. G. HUGGINS, President.

ANSWERS.

1. The words Come again, and Appear the second time, imply that Christ was here once among men and will come again. If he had not been here once he could not say I will come again.

2. It is a very prophetic story in Isa. liii. 12, of where the Lord hath poured out his soul unto death, and numbered with the transgressors, and was there to bear the sins of many. And we keep 1 Cor. xi. 26 in memory of the Lord's death until he comes.

3. It is an evident fact that Christ will come personally, for Acts i. 11 says he will come in like manner. Some say he was only a spirit, and like doubting Thomas, they are still doubting him. If he had not been the same Jesus that went down into the tomb, he would never have said what he did to Thomas in St. John xx. 27, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless but believing. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, 1 Thess. iv. 16.

4. A believer should always be wide awake in regard to the Lord's coming as he has warned us, and should watch the signs that he has given us, and said that we should know by them he was even at the door. We should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. If we cannot overcome the worldly lusts we will not be fit for the next age.

5. He says in the Scriptures that when he comes, or rather in the last days, there will be all kinds of sorrow and suffering and wickedness. From all appearances the time is surely at the door. The darkest hour is just before dawn, and we can almost see the dawn appearing.

6. The righteous in the day of his coming shall shine forth as the sun in his kingdom, but the wicked shall be gathered by the reapers, which are the angels, and cast into the furnace of fire, and destroyed root and branch.

7. 1 Cor. xvi. 22: If any man have not the Lord he will be accursed (anathema maranatha) when our Lord cometh.

8. The Apostle John is the author of Revelations.

In Rev. xxii. it is said three times—Behold I come quickly.

The last sentence we have on record from Jesus Christ is—and they shall recover, Mark xvi. 18. Recover is the last word.

MRS ESTHER STEDMAN.

[Christ is the author of the book of Revelations, Rev. i. 1; xxii. 16 therefore the last statement we have from Jesus is "Surely I come quickly," Rev. xxii. 20. Every saint can respond with John his beloved disciple, Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus. Otherwise your replies are correct and good.—ED.]

1. John xiv. 3, If Christ had not come once, it could not be said that he would Come again. If he is to appear the second time, there must have been a first, Heb. ix. 28. He came to suffer for our transgressions, to make atonement for our sins, to redeem his people, to gain what was lost in Adam, which was life, so that by a belief in him and his word, and obedience to his commands, we shall receive our reward at his second coming.

2. Isa. liii. 12: He hath poured out his soul unto death, a historic truth. Cause. 1 Cor. xi 26. For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come. Effect. Titus ii. 13 14. Christ gave himself for us, is a prophetic truth, as cause of our looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Effect. Phil. ii 8-11, He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Cause. And that every tongue should confess that Christ Jesus is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Effect.

3. Acts i. 11: This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. His disciples saw Him ascend into heaven; therefore he must have ascended in person, a visible being. 1 Thess. iv. 16, For the Lord himself, personally, shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God.

4. Titus ii. 11-12. A believer should live soberly, righteously, and godly, denying ungodliness and all worldly lusts. Phil. iii. 20. Our conversation or behavior begins in the heavens. Heb ix. 28. Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time. He should always be on the watch. 1 Thess. i. 9 10. We should serve the living and true God, and also wait for his Son from heaven. 2 Tim. iv. 8. We love his appearing.

5. Matt. xxiv. 10. Many shall betray one another, many shall hate one another. Verse 15. Abomination of desolation. Verses 6-7. Ye shall hear of wars, nation shall rise against nation; kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines and pestilence and earthquakes.

6. Matt. xiii 38-41. The wicked, the tares shall be burned up. The righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom. Matt xxiv. 42 51. The blessed servant will be made a ruler, while the evil servant shall be cut asunder, and shall have his portion with the hypocrites. 2 Thess. vi. 11, God with flaming fire, will take vengeance on them who know not God and obey not the gospel: punishing them with everlasting punishment. The righteous, those worthy of his calling, shall fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power.

7. 1 Cor. xvi. 22. If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be anathema maranatha. Anathema is anything devoted to evil. It is a ban or curse. The curse accompanying excommunication pronounced by a religious assembly or association. The thing or person held to be accursed. Maranatha, a word used by the Apostle Paul in expressing a curse.

8 (a) John the prophet is author of Revelations.

(b) "I come quickly" is said three times in the last chapter, in verses 7, 12, 20.

(c) The last words we have on record are "Surely I come quickly" testified by the angel unto John.

Is this the last lesson this year, or do we look for one more. We shall miss them so, as we enjoy having something definite to study; it builds up and strengthens us all so much, I think.

ADA STADDEN.

1. In John xiv 3, Christ says that he will come again, and if he had not been present once he could not say "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." In Heb. ix. 28 the writer tells us that unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, and we know there cannot be a second time without a first. These two statements are as plain as the English language can make them. Christ came the first time, and had to go through all the hardships that mortal man is subject to. His life, like ours, was spent in preparing and trying to gain that crown of righteousness which is for all them that keep his commandments.

2. ———

3 Acts i. 11 tells us that this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. They certainly were not standing there with some incorporeal spirit—nothing. Nay, not so. It was the real Jesus, the same Savior we are looking for. This verse tells us that he was taken up into heaven, and 1 Thess. iv. 16 tells us that the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, etc. Plain enough it is going to be the real Jesus, not some spirit that we don't know anything about.

4. In Titus ii. 11 we are told that the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men. Verse 12 tells what it takes to gain the salvation, namely, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in the present world. In Heb. [illegible] told to look for Jesus [illegible] appear the second time. In [illegible] find now what we have been [illegible] God we are worshipping. [illegible] we are told to wait for [illegible] heaven, where he [illegible] The last part of [illegible] Jesus has done [illegible] has delivered us from [illegible] come. If we have kept [illegible] in Satan's [illegible] crown of righteousness [illegible] sincerity for us at [illegible] appearing.

5 Christ's coming and its [illegible] pected to the world as a [illegible] her would be so as now. [illegible] wholly unexpected. The words of the present time will seem to [illegible] his coming, and are [illegible] me not long ago, that he would [illegible] as soon think this world [illegible] prime, and he was a prof[illegible] tion led right to the [illegible]

6. In Matt xxiv 38 we [illegible] trous and the wicked [illegible] ket of grain, the righteous [illegible] ing the good seed into the [illegible] ture. They are [illegible] will be separated [illegible] judgment. The righteous to receive the crown, and the [illegible] the wages of sin which is [illegible]

7 Anathema maranatha [illegible] Many in the [illegible] will come in every [illegible] opinion of the [illegible] would be, if any [illegible] the Lord Jesus Christ, [illegible] ed, nor does it [illegible] judgment on him.

8 The author of [illegible] the revelator. [illegible] given in Rev. xxii three times. "Surely I come quickly" is the last sentence we have on record from Jesus, as Rev. xxii 20.

MARGARET STADDEN.

1. We understand from the words Come again, in John xiv. 3, that Christ has been here once, was going away, and would come again. The word again means return or repetition, which could not be unless he had once been here. [illegible] says unto them that look [illegible] appear the second time [illegible] not be understood unless there had been a first. In the coming was a sacrifice, [illegible] which was lost. He [illegible] will be as King and [illegible] was necessary that the [illegible] once. He could not [illegible] dom without a people [illegible] workers with him. [illegible] his life a people for [illegible] vi 20.

2 Because Christ [illegible] soul unto death, was numbered with the transgressors, and bore the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors, we have a Savior. The bread and wine is [illegible] and his blood. We eat the bread and drink the wine in remembrance of his death for us. Foreknowledge hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name, and for obedience we have the blessed hope of eternal life with him when he comes.

3 Acts i. 11 The two men who stood by the disciples, when Jesus had ascended, told them he could come in like manner as they had seen him go. They had seen him personally go in a cloud out of their sight. If he comes in the manner, it is proof that he will come personally. 1 Thes. iv. 16 is further proof of his personal coming. The Lord himself shall descend from heaven.

4 A believer is never exhorted to be accounted worthy of eternal life with Jesus when he comes unless he lives a righteous life in this present world. Titus ii. 11 12 For our consolation, our general course of untouchable patience is in heaven. Phil. iii 20 A believer must be looking for and expecting him, and love his appearing. We cannot be looking for Christ and be interested in everything in the world, in things which pertain to his coming and kingdom. A believer must live as though Christ were coming [illegible] rose to-day, [illegible] to-morrow.

5 When Christ comes he will find the world in a state of unrighteousness and trouble, Matt. xxiv. 37, as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. In Gen. vi. 5-7 we find that the wickedness of man was great, the imaginations of his heart was evil continually. So that God caused a flood to come and destroyed all but the few that served him. So also shall the coming of the Son of man be.

6. The righteous shall shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Those who are in the death state will be raised to an immortal life, those who are living will be changed and all caught away to meet the Lord, and will ever be with him. They will be rulers with him in the work of blessing the nations, and bring about a reign of peace on the earth. The wicked will be destroyed.

7. 1 Cor. xvi 22, If any man love not the Lord let him be anathema maranatha, or accursed. Gal. i 8 9, Even if man or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that which Christ and the apostles preached, let him be accursed. If we love Christ we must teach the same gospel that he taught.

8. The author of Revelations is St. John the divine, the apostle who reclined on Jesus' breast. I come quickly occurs three times in the 22d chapter. Surely I come quickly, is the last word we have on record from Jesus.

CARRIE FREE.

1 In John xiv. 3 and [illegible] Heb. ix. 28 the words Come again, [illegible] the second time, imply [illegible] has come once, and will [illegible] second time, because the [illegible] is not a repetition, and [illegible] not come a second time [illegible] had been a first coming. [illegible] of Christ's first coming [illegible] should be a living example [illegible] may pass from this imperfect [illegible] a perfect life; in setting [illegible] ample he himself reaches [illegible] life, and hence is made [illegible] ing us thus perfect life. [illegible] returns. He come the [illegible] tell us and show us we [illegible] second time he comes [illegible] punish.

2. Isa. liii 12, There [illegible] has a portion with the [illegible] shall divide the spoil [illegible] because he poured [illegible] death, and was [illegible] transgressors [illegible] and the effect. 1 Cor [illegible] often as ye eat this [illegible] this cup, ye proclaim [illegible] till he comes. Here we [illegible] are effect. Titus ii. 13 [illegible] for the blessed hope and [illegible] the glory of the great [illegible] Savior Jesus Christ; who [illegible] for us that he might redeem [illegible] all iniquity, and purify unto [illegible] people for his own possession [illegible] of good works. In the first [illegible] ing is in effect, and the [illegible] and appearing is the cause [illegible] ing. In the latter part Titus [illegible] redeem us from all iniquity [illegible] cause, not Who gave himself [illegible] the effect of the wish of God [illegible] deem us. Phil. ii. 8-11. [illegible] found in the fashion of man [illegible] [illegible]ecame obedient [illegible] death, yea the death of [illegible] wherefore God highly exalted [illegible] him, and gave him the name which is above every name, that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father. Verse 8 is the cause of the effect found in verse 9; verses 10 and 11 also contain causes of the effect in verse 9.

3. Acts i. 11, is proof that Christ will come personally; the two men in white apparel said This Jesus who was received up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven. The 3d verse of the same chapter says Christ had proven that he himself was alive, that it was the personal Christ come to life, and not a spirit. This was also proven when he told Peter to put of his wounds, and that a spirit did not have flesh and bones as he had. Since Christ had proven he was a person and not a spirit, it must have been a person who ascended into heaven, and it is of the person Christ who returns according to the angels speaking of the time of ascension. 1 Thes. iv. 11 also proves the personal return of Jesus. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout and [illegible] with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God.

4 The attitude of a believer toward the coming of Christ should be that [illegible] of one who is looking for something or [illegible] coming [illegible] His coming [illegible] of importance [illegible] made [illegible] and whatever is done [illegible] the light [illegible] should be overshadowed by the idea of his coming. This waiting must not be an idle waiting, but just such a waiting with which we wait for some longed-for event to come to pass. We do everything we can to make ready for the event and allow nothing to be done that would detract from it or hinder it. This kind of waiting results in the godly, righteous life spoken of in Titus ii. 12. This is one way in which God's Word cleanses and purifies us. His promises are so sure that they give us courage and strength to fight the evils in us. We absolutely know that if we keep trying, Christ will come and bring salvation. This encouragement and help those who do not depend on his coming cannot have. Their method of salvation is visionary, and has never been proven, except by feelings, nor promised by God. Our waiting should be as one waiting to be taken into and naturalized in a new country. Phil. iii. 20 says For our citizenship is in heaven, whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. I sometimes think of God's people as being a political party, but the purest and best that will ever be organized, with Christ as future King. Those working for the Christ are the only politicians working for pure, honest government.

5. When Christ comes he will find the world full of wickedness and trouble, a world that is asleep as far as he is concerned, just as it is today. In my Bible [illegible] touched which [illegible] one Spirit" [illegible] away every ele[illegible] of Spirit-wisdom.

2. We will wait to see such a misuse of No. 1's weapon before we interfere.

3. Then we must part company that we may not share complicity in the act of sacrilege committed by No. 1, and condoned by you. We hope that you will soon see the necessity for following us, and that No. 1 will shortly discontinue their evil work.

2. We will think of what you have said.

"Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision", Phil iii 2. The apostle who wrote these words would not have said "Beware" in reference to those whose fellowship was to be retained; he must have referred to some who were out of fellowship, or who were deserving of its discontinuance. In either case, it is an injunction which needs to be heeded in circumstances of a similar character. The workmanship of God is good; to mar it is an evil work. The Mosaic "tables were the work of God" Exod xxxii 16; and the inspired Word is likewise the Word of God. To say that any part of it did not come from him is clearly an evil work; and hence to withdraw from such is to give practical effect to Paul's injunction, "Beware of evil workers."

The evil work in the present controversy consists of a trinity of error, which may thus be briefly described:—

1. Partial Inspiration.
2. Fallible Inspiration.
3. Fallible Incorporation.

One of the objects for which the Mo-

1. This pillar is not made of Spirit; human hands were employed in its erection, and they have reported to it some of their own designs.

3. You are wrong: the men you refer to were under Spirit control, and everything they did at that time was by direction of the Spirit.

1. That is an assumption; where is your proof?

3. We prove it by the same given to the pillar; if any part of it were of human design, it would not be called the "One Spirit."

1. We see no proof in that; on the contrary, we can perceive evidence of a human workmanship in some parts; look at them.

3. We find no such evidence, and in the face of all the testimony to the contrary, we decline to accept your bare assertion.

1. Well, as you have not proved your case, we shall proceed to chip off those parts that are not Spirit.

3. You must not; we strongly object.

2 Never mind them: what little they can do, won't be any real harm.

3. Whether it does or not, that is not the right way to look at their proposed action; we object on principle.

2 Don't be so foolish as to introduce the question of principle into this matter; the Spirit-pillar is of autocratic [illegible] cannot materially weaken it.

3 How do you know? If allowed to begin, there is no saying to what length they will go. Moreover, their bad example may be followed by others with tools of a much more destructive character.

2. You are too imaginative; you theorize too much.

3. We speak about that of which we have knowledge; we remember some former occupants of the temple similar to No. 1, but not so numerous, who attempted the same thing. And where are they now? Outside; and that is where we shall all be, sooner or later, if we injure any of the pillars.

2. You are influenced by fear and credulity.

3. So you think; we certainly fear the Builder of this temple who graciously permitted us to enter it, and we believe that the conditions on which our occupancy is based will be strictly adhered to.

2. What are they?

3. That we do nothing to mar the unity which is an essential part of the temple-plan, and that we listen to the sevenfold voice of wisdom, for "whoso hearkeneth unto her shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil." Prov i 33.

2. We do not see that the action of No. 1 will violate any of the conditions of tenancy.

3. We do; and so would you if it were directed against such pillars as the "One hope," the "One faith," or the "One Baptism." The "One spirit" is more important than these, because without it, we should have no knowledge of the remaining ones.

"A Century of Indiana" is the title of a new history written by State Senator Edward A. Moore, and published by the American Book Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, price 75 cents. The volume contains 340 pages, and gives the earliest history of the State on down to the present day. Indiana today stands second to no state in the Union, and this work gives the whole history of the State in concise and attractive form, carefully indexed, so that it has an added value as a reference book. It is a splendid book for the home, and for Indiana Students it is of priceless value. No library is complete without it. If your book dealer cannot supply it send as above and get a copy. There is pleasure in reading it, for every Indianan is proud of his State, and besides enjoyment there is real profit in this work.

Will it Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has ... gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and so easy in style and convincing in argument that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, post paid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express, a lower rate will ... ly be made. When you wish your address changed give both old and new address.

In sending in names always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For if one ... per is sent to Mrs. Susan Williams, and her husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it, saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and after awhile when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable of time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his half-fed work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an official wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and he neglected to put on his return address. A nod to the wise is enough.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

The price of this book is 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible," the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught: the scholar is enthralled and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. Throw open the doors of you home; let The Bible—its Principles and Texts come in and bless you and your family. 320 pages, 5x7½ inches, durably and handsomely bound in whole cloth, with title embossed on back in gold. SOWING SEED.

I've only since informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to any person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

The following publications are doing much to enlighten the people:

God's Pathways.

God leads each dear one step by step
In pathways all unseen,
And if the thorn-paths line the way
The roses lie between;
If gath'ring storms lend to the sky
Their deep and sombre hue,
There soon is caught through rifted clouds
A glimpse of Heaven's blue.

The child of faith walks day by day
These pathways all untried
Yet dreads no plight, fears no foe,
For God is at his side.
Each sharp affliction has its balm,
Each care its blessing bright,
For if in darkness it begin,
Each pathway leads to light.

O doubting soul, lift up thine eyes
To Him who is divine,
And clasp the strong and loving Hand
That reaches out for thine;
No longer struggle on alone,
Sad-hearted and in fear,
But take the pathways marked by God
And trust: He will be near!

A Review, No 2.

[This was originally written for a local paper, but was not published, probably because it did not please the Editor.]

Now we would enquire as to the grounds of this belief. Is there any statement in the Holy Scriptures to warrant it? Anything in the testimony of nature to countenance it? No, not only is there an entire absence of testimony in its favor, but great abundance of evidence to the contrary, showing that death invades a man's being and robs him of existence, and that consequently in death, he is to us unconscious as though he had never lived. The sequel will justify this answer.

What death? It is the opposite of life. The idea of death is derived from experience of life, for death is the word that describes the interruption of life. In order, therefore, to understand death, we must have a definite conception of life. Of this we do know something, since it is a matter of positive experience. All we have to do is to bring our knowledge to bear, which the majority of people have great difficulty in doing. Their minds are so pre-occupied with established theories, that they are blind to the facts under their immediate cognizance.

Throwing the metaphysics aside, what is life as known experimentally? It is the aggregate result of the organic processes transpiring within the human structure—in respiration, circulation of the blood, digestion, etc. The lungs, the heart, and the stomach conspire to generate and sustain vitality, and to impart activity to the various faculties of which we are composed. Apart from this busy organism, life is manifested, whether as regards man or beast. Shock the brain, and insensibility ensues; take away the air, and you produce suffocation; cut off the supply of food, and death occurs. Could these effects be produced if life did not depend on the causes interfered with? If life and function were abstract attributes of an immaterial element pervading the physical organization, would they not be manifested independently of material condition? All positive as well as negative experience contributes to the same result, showing human life, with its mysterious phenomena of thought and feeling, to be the result of harmony in the working of the complicated machinery of which we are so "fearfully and wonderfully made." Thus we exist. There was a time when we did not exist. This is most important, showing the possibility of non-existence in relation to man; for what has been, can be again. The question then is, shall this state of non-existence again supervene? The answer is readily obtainable. Since human existence depends on material organic function, non-existence must ensue upon the interruption of that function. The whole matter is therefore reduced to a question of experience. By experience we know that this interruption does take place, and that man in consequence dies. Death comes to him and exactly undoes what birth did for him. The one gives him existence; the other takes it away. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," is realized in every man's experience. In the course of nature, his being vanishes from creation, and all qualities submerge in death, for the simple reason that the organism that develops them then stops its working.

Now, when we look into the Scriptures, we find its teachings in complete accord with this view of death. When they speak about the death of any body, they do not employ the phraseology of modern religionists. They do not say of the righteous that they have "gone to their reward," or that they "winged their flight to a better world;" or of the wicked, that they are "gone to appear before the bar of God, to answer for their misdeeds." The language is simple and natural, and expressive of a contrary doctrine. If the death of Abraham, the father of the faithful, is recorded, there is no heaven-going rhapsody. The chronicle is sober and literal:

"And Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years, and was gathered to his people." Gen xxv 8.

Such, also, is the description of Isaac's demise—"and Isaac gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered unto his people." Gen xxxv 29.

So of Jacob—"And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people." Gen xlix 33. Of Joseph it is simply said—"So Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt. Gen l 26.

So in the case of Moses, "So Moses, the servant of the Lord, died there, in the land of Moab, according to the Word of the Lord. And he buried him in a valley, in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor, and no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." Deut xxxiv 5, 6.

And so we shall find it in the case of Joshua (Joshua xxiv 29), Samuel (1 Sam xxv 1), David (1 Kings ii 1, 2, 10; Acts ii 29, 34), Solomon (1 Kings xi 43), and all others whose death is recorded in the Scriptures. They are never said to have gone away anywhere, but are always spoken of as dying in the absolute sense, giving up their life, and returning to the ground. The same style of language is adopted by Saul when speaking of the generations of the righteous dead. He says Heb xi 13, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off."

If we look at other parts of the New Testament, we discover the same peculiarity of language—the same utter absence of modern sentiment and phrase in regard to the state of the dead. If Jesus spoke of the death of Lazarus, he recognized the fact in its plainest sense. John xi 11, 14.

"He (Jesus) saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death, but they thought he had spoken of taking rest in sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."

When Luke records the death of Stephen (Acts vii 60), he does not indulge in any of the high flown death-bed rapture so prevalent in modern religious literature. He simply says, "He fell asleep." Or when Paul has occasion to refer to deceased Christians, he does not speak of them as "Standing before the throne of God." The words he employs are in keeping with those already quoted (1 Thes iv 13) "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not as others who have no hope."

In short, all Bible allusions to the subject of death is as unlike modern sentiment as it is possible to conceive. The Bible speaks of death as the extinction of life, and never as the commencement of another life. Not once does it tell us of a dead man having gone to heaven. Not once, except by an allowable poetical figure (Isa xiv 4) are the dead represented as conscious. They are always pictured in language that records with experience—always spoken of as in the land of darkness, and silence, and unconsciousness. Solomon says, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl ix 10.

Job, in the anguish of accumulated calamity, cursed the day of his birth, and wished he had died when an infant; and mark what he says would have been the consequence: "For now I should have lain still and been quiet; I should have slept; then had I been at rest with the kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places (tombs) for themselves; or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver; or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been as infants which never saw the light; there the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary are at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor; the small and great are there, and the servant is free from his master." Job iii 13 19. He also makes the following unequivocal statement, which ought to be well considered, by those believing in heaven going at death. Chap x 18, "Wherefore hast thou brought me forth of the womb? O, that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me; I should have been as though I had not been."

David incidentally alludes to the state of the dead in the following impressive words. Psa lxxxviii 5, 10, 12: "Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou remembered no more; and they are cut off from thy hand." Verses 10, 11, 12. Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave, or thy faithfulness in destruction" Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" These questions are answered in a short but emphatic statement, which occurs in the 115th Psalm verse 17: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

And the Psalmist gives pathetic expression to his own view of man's evanescent nature, in the following words, which have direct bearing on the state of the dead.

Psa xxxix 12, 13, "Hear my prayer, O Lord, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears; for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were. O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence and be no more." He says in Psalm cxlvi 2. While I live I will praise the Lord, I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being;" clearly implying that in David's view, his being would cease with the occurrence of death.

In addition to these general indications of the destructive nature of death as a deprivation of being there are other statements in the Scriptures which specifically deny that the dead have any consciousness. For instance Solomon says. "The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten; also their love, and their hatred, and their envy are now perished, neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." Eccl ix 5, 6.

How often we hear the remark concerning the dead, "Oh, well! He knows all now?" Now this remark is either true or not true. If Solomon's words have any meaning it is the very opposite of true, for he says, "The dead know not anything." How common, again, it is for religious teachers to say that after death, the dead will love and serve God with greater devotion in heaven, because freed from the clay of this mortal body; and curse him with more fiendish ferocity in hell, for the same reason; that, in fact, their love will be perfected, and their hate intensified; in the very face of Solomon's declaration to the contrary: "Their love, and their hatred, and their envy are now perished." David is equally decided on this point. He says, Psa cxlvi 3, 4, Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help; for his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Again he says, Psa civ 29, in death there is an removal of thee.

Hezekiah, king of Israel, gives similar testimony. He had been "sick, nigh unto death," and on his recovery he indited a song of praise to God, in which he gives the following reason for thus rejoicing: "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day." Isa xxxiii 28, 20.

This host of Scripture testimony is conclusive. It decisively settles the issue against all philosophical speculation. It shows that death is a total eclipse of being—a complete obliteration of our conscious selves from God's universe, and thus establishes the doctrine of the resurrection on the true foundation of necessity; for in this view a future life is only attainable by resurrection; whereas in the popular view, future life is a natural growth from the present, effected neither one way nor the other by the "resurrection of the body." In fact it is difficult to see any use for resurrection at all if we accept the popular idea: for if a man "goes to Heaven" at death, and enjoys all the felicity of heaven of which his nature is capable, it seems incongruous that after a certain time, he should be compelled to leave the celestial regions, and, reclaim his body on earth, when without that body he is supposed to have so much more capability of enjoyment. The resurrection seems out of place in such a system; and accordingly we find that now-a-days, many are abandoning it, and vainly trying to explain away the New Testament doctrine of physical resurrection altogether, by assuming a theory of spiritual resuscitation, and twisting the plain statements of Scripture to accord with the new born conceit.

In closing this article, I wish those who may read, to "Berean"-like search the Scriptures and see if these things are so. For says Paul, Rom xv 4, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." And Jesus said, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." John v 39. Listen to what he said concerning his future coming. Matt xxv 31. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations." Here we rest the case, and for the dawn of that glorious day, like the saints of old, in faith and patience wait.

Report.

The Church at Grand Island, Neb., is still keeping up its Bible Readings since our annual Conference at Omaha. We have our Bible Lessons every Sunday that the weather permits. We have had 32 lessons since our Conference.

Brother Allard has been with us twice and preached to us. The talks he gave were very helpful to us all, of how a true follower of Christ should live.

Each Sunday we take up a collection to help to bear our local expenses and to help in other ways of spreading the truth. It seems rather small at first but it grows very rapidly and we have several dollars in our box before long.

Our average attendance is five and six. Small in number but strong in faith. We gain a great deal from these meetings and studies together. Although we find it very hard when any of the brethren come here to preach to get any one to come out to hear them preach the Truth, we do not become discouraged, but the next time any one comes to preach ask others and the same ones to come and hear him. But it is not the Lord's will that there should be a large number so we are content.

We shall continue to meet and study the Word together, what few there are [illegible] ing to show ourselves approved unto God, that at Christ's coming we may have a small part in the kingdom.

Babes in Christ.

In Phil iii 12, we read Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. How important it is that all those looking for the coming of our blessed Lord to put in practice this text, especially to the babes in Christ, those who have just made the start by obedience and baptism. How many are there who stop here, who hear the truth, believe it, obey and are baptized, and then what? Oh, how many are there who never go any further. What do those words of the apostle mean? To whom do they refer? To just such a one, to beginners. We must go to work with fear and trembling to work out our own salvation, to overcome our selfishness, our lack of brotherly love, our desire to get even with others, to pay them back for the little mean things they say, and hundreds of other little things that a child of God must overcome before he or she be fitted themselves for the place in our Lord's coming kingdom intended for [illegible]. How I wish we might all awake to the fact and watch and exhort those who have just started on the way. How important it is that we warn them that no growth means death, that we cannot stop at being baptized. For example, a young person saw the truth, accepted it, and although they desired to do right, they stood and wait for some one to read the Word to them. Weeks and days go by with no conversation, prayer, or reading of the Word. Pleasure, cares, other stories and papers take the place of the Word of God. What is the result? A standing still, a coldness, a sagrowth, no work done for the Master when he comes. Some will say, Well I dont understand the Word of God like some and if I lived near a church or place of worship I would do differen. In Heb. v. 14, we read. "But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." "Their senses exercised." Then let us all be up and doing and exercising our senses and feed daily on his Word, for how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him. Heb. ii 3.

Everyday Life and Character.

One's everyday life is a surer revealer of character than one's public acts. There are men who are magnificent when they appear on great occasions—wise, eloquent, masterly—but who are almost utterly unendurable in their fretfulness, unreasonableness, irascibility, and all manner of selfish disagreeableness in the privacy of their own homes, to those to whom they ought to show all of love, gentleness and sweetness. There are women, too, who shine with wondrous brilliancy in society, sparkling in conversation, winning in manner, the center ever of admiring groups, resistless in their charms, but who in their everyday life, in the presence of only their own household, are the most and weariest of mortals. No doubt in these cases the common everyday, unflattering as it is, is a truer expression of the inner life than the hour or two of greatness or graciousness in the blaze of publicity.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-helps with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Couldn't Look Father in the Eyes.

Disobedience to parents is the first step in the downward path. A circus was in the town and a little boy stood watching the great tent curiously. A neighbor, coming up, said: "Hello, Johnny; going to the circus?" "No, sir," answered Johnny, "father don't 'low me." "Oh, well, I'll give you the money to go," said the man. "Father don't approve of them." "Well, go in for once. I'll pay for you." "No, sir; my father would give me the money if he thought it best; besides, I've got twenty-five cents in my box, enough to go." "I'd go, Johnny, for once; it's wonderful the way the horses do," said the man. "Your father needn't know it." "I can't" said the boy. "Now, why?" asked the man, "Cause," said Johnny, "After I'd been I couldn't look father right in the eyes, but I can now." The boy who will never do anything that would prevent him from looking straight into his father's eyes will never be a failure.

Our redemption is to be accomplished, not by changing our locality or our circumstances, but by changing the condition of the heart. It is the purpose of Christ to perfect us in holiness, not by withdrawing us from all infections, but by making us proof against it by abounding spiritual life. No one can ever become a Christian by memorizing a catalogue of things to be avoided, and things to be esteemed. If the love of the world is in the heart, we are worldly, whether we attend the theatre or not. The worldly life is bounded by the superficial and vain things of earth, its goal is success and holiness. Its eye is horizontal, never vertical. It knows nothing of the rapt and silent wonder in the secret place. It is this non-spiritual earthliness and affection for the world from which Jesus prayed that his disciples might be kept.

Bible Religion is a living power and a principle within, that gives its existence to God, its divine Author. An outward religion that consists in a series of precepts and strict observances, and is based on mere boisterous pretension, sheds a very feeble light on man's pathway, and is obeyed with feelings of reluctance. True religion is based upon the Holy Bible, and is a result of a union with Christ, who said: "Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me." From this it may be inferred, that where there is a profession without good fruit, there cannot be a true union with Christ; for he said: "By their fruit ye shall know them."

America does not need physical development. The great need of America is the preaching of moral conviction and intensity so that theft shall be known as theft and lies known as lies. And to help in accomplishing this the teacher must have the missionary spirit, the spirit which gives and asks no return but the joy of seeing fruitage from its work.—James M. Taylor.

The study of God's Word will secure peace. Take those Christians who are rooted and grounded in the Word of God and you will find that they have great peace. It is those who do not study their Bible, who are easily offended when some little trouble comes, or some little persecution. Just a little breath of opposition, and their peace is all gone.—D. L. Moody.

The Restitution.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, OFFICE EDITOR

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
JOSEPH H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 14, 1911.

"The Other Side."

It was not our intention or desire to bother the readers of our paper further with any of this contention, and we wish in the start to apologize for doing so. When the meeting was held at Plymouth, it was stated that no report would be published. We were assured by Bro. McCrory when at our home May 26, that no report would be printed. Again in conversation with him at his building on LaPorte Street this City on June 2d, we were told that he had joined in a letter with Brothers Tuttle and Barnhill, demanding that no publicity be given it. We then said we would make no comments. However, a circular letter is put out, and we are forced to speak.

We start by giving the first intimation we had of the call.

Plymouth, Ind., May 18, 1911.
Dear Brother Underwood:

This is to inform you that Brothers Tuttle, Barnhill and myself—the official board—decided last week to draw this church controversy to a close, and to that end have appointed a committee of brethren, and established a time—May 24th, 1911, at one o'clock, at the Church in Plymouth, to hear and determine the weight of evidence that may be brought against you. Said committee to be composed of the following named brethren: Bros. Wm. Huffer, T. F. Swindler, Bennett Boggs, Hugh Logan and myself, being brethren known to you. Your accusers have been notified of the meeting, and now you as well, that all may meet to close this unhappy affair.

Your Brother,
F. M. McCRORY.

Replying to this letter we wrote to Brother McCrory on May 19, stating that I noted the words "official board decided" and inferred he had reference to the official board of the Plymouth Church.

Next we noted that they had "appointed a committee" from outside churches, and called attention to the declaration made previously both by Brother McCrory and Brother Tuttle that no outsiders would be allowed to come into the Plymouth Church in this matter—that Plymouth Church herself would hear and decide her own matters—no outsider would be tolerated, etc. This had been stated before a number of witnesses.

Next we noted that this committe "will hear and determine the weight of evidence against" me, but nothing was said that they wished to consider any evidence favoring me.

Next we noted that "your accusers have been notified."

Presuming from all this that things were silted down, and definite charges were to be made, with those who had grievances there to present their cases, and having expressed a desire to meet such and adjust them so all might be satisfied and peace prevail, we stated in our reply that we wished thereby to notify the official board of the Plymouth Church that if we were expected to be at the meeting to answer charges, it will be absolutely necessary that we be informed what these charges were, in order that "my attorney" might arrange a line of defense, otherwise the "case" would have to go over to the "next term of court."

This reply asking for definite complaints so that proper books and papers might be at hand to show what had been done, and that we might arrange for some one to act as our "attorney," as our voice affection is well known—this reply was sent to Brother McCrory on May 19.

All readers will note that this was right at the time when sickness and death in the families of our very dearest friends was present with us, with all the care and distress of that sad week.

No reply came on the 20th, and it will be remembered that on that night—it being Saturday night—our neighbor died. We were up all night, busy all day Sunday, and Monday morning at four o'clock, we wrote a letter to Brother Tuttle who is the head of the official board, and told him how we were situated, and explaining how impossible under those conditions it would be to prepare any case and be at the meeting. This letter was mailed so he would get it in the early delivery Monday morning.

There came to us in the mail of May 22, the following reply to our letter to Brother McCrory:

A. R. Underwood,

Dear Sir and Brother:—Yours of the 19th to hand and I note what you say. Yes, I meant that the official board of the Plymouth Church decided when we had stood out against all for the length of time you well know, we concluded to bring this battling to a close, or show our will so to do. We did this only after much pressure had been brought to bear, and how do you know but that this will redound to your everlasting betterment. I am a member of that committee by request for Brother Tuttle. Yes, that committee are called to hear evidence against you, and you well know any evidence in your favor will be gladly heard. Also "your accusers have been notified" likewise the accused, and each will be given a respectful hearing so far as I am concerned, and the others are selected from among those anybody might be proud to call brethren. It is not likely your attorney would be permitted before that committee unless he were a brother as you well know, and as for "what the charges are" nobody knows better than yourself as you have been answering them publicly for nearly six months, and we all know well your ability to meet any charges that may be brought against you. As to there e going over "to the next term of court" I assure you there will be no "other term," and you will either be present and defend yourself or the matters will be determined in your absence. We have not sought in this matter to do anybody any injustice, but that this controversy may be ended to the lasting benefit, let us hope, of all concerned. I deem you amply able to care for yourself, and have nothing in an advisory way, unless to say I can scarcely understand how you can afford at this time to show the white feather by staying away.

Your brother in hope,
F. M. McCRORY.

After getting this letter our mind was settled that we would not appear to trial. No copy of definite and specific charges would be furnished us, making it impossible to arrange a line of defense. Our attorney or advocate—be he a brother or not—could have no intimation of what was coming or by whom accusation would be made. The case was to begin and end at one session. If a competent "attorney" was not at our call from the brotherhood no other would be allowed. We had not been consulted as to convenience of time, and our jurors were chosen for us. Evidently we had no business at such a trial, so said to wife we did not intend going.

We were then waited on by our old friend Brother Tuttle. He had on a previous occasion assured us that he knew the disposition of the men who were opposing us, that we would finally have to yield to them. That they had the money, the power, and proposed to crush us. That they were determined to "hound us to the very death." He said he knew Brothers Conner and Lindsay "like a book," and that they would never stop till we were crushed.

With this sort of talk fresh in mind Brother Tuttle came to our home, and persuaded us to go to the meeting. Declared that no line of defense was necessary, no attorney would be needed, no books or papers would be necessary—all there was to it was that they thought best to meet and talk over a few little matters in a friendly way, and no harm could come to any one, but that peace and harmony and love and joy might come back to our dear little Church, and we could again all go to the services happy and joyous as before. He was moved to tears as this bright picture was presented, and at his earnest request, to which wife added solicitation, as she was and is heart-broken over the condition of things, we finally consented to attend.

When we arrived at the meeting Brother Tuttle came from a corner consultation with Brothers Lindsay and Conner, and said that the order of business would be, that Bro. Lindsay would state their case in an opening speech, and then we might make reply. As we had been informed beforehand that no books, papers, advocate or any thing of the sort would be needed, we refused to speak.

Bro. Lindsay's effort was to show that the Ministerial Association was justified in passing the resolutions as done at their organization. It is not necessary here to go over all that was said at that meeting as it would take too much space. The point that calls for answer is the finding of the jury.

Now, it is being freely stated that "Brother Underwood made confession at that meeting that the charges made were true." We wish to state that if the wording of the finding of the jury is meant to imply that we confessed to what the Min. Assn had accused us of, viz: having taken money and appropriated it to our own use, instead of using it as directed—in short, with stealing and lying—if that is what was in the minds of the jury, then they "have another guess coming."

Just read the "report" carefully, and see such an idea is contradicted right in it. It tells of Bro. Halstead "pleading with Bro. Underwood to confess to wrong doing in these matters, but Bro. Underwood.....would NOT admit that wrong was intended."

After so "pleading" and not being able to convince us that we had done wrong intentionally, and after we had repeatedly stated before all that we were conscious of no intentional evil doing, but that IF we had unintentionally done wrong, all we asked was an opportunity to make it right. After the jury had retired, Bro. Halstead approached us in an effort to force us to confess to Intentional Wrong Doing. He labored earnestly, but we assured him again and again that if wrong had been done, we wished to make it right, but to say we had intended to wrong any person, when God knew no such intent ever existed in our heart, was to stultify our own consciousness before God, and that we could not do and dare to meet God at the judgment. Even then, with such a declaration, Bro. Halstead would not accept our word uttered with our heart bare to God, hence we refer you to Brother Halstead as proof that we did NOT own up as he wanted us to.

Now, what was "confessed"? Brother Lindsay asked us if it was known to us there was much dissatisfaction with our management of THE RESTITUTION, and to that we said Yes. No opportunity was given to say more, and so we will take a little space here and tell of one reason for this dissatisfaction.

It was at the instance and request of A. R. Underwood personally, that S. J. Lindsay was first invited to the State of Indiana to preach, and he came, and was met at the station by, and taken to the home of A. R. Underwood, where up to the time of the Bible School of June 1910 he has ever made his home when in Plymouth, always having the best and all the house afforded. When he came here he became prejudiced against us, which had been largely fostered in his he[art] by L. E. Conner. When he went [ba]ck after his first visit here, his mind was changed. He stated that he had bee[n] wide to see inside of many things, and discovered that "Underwood was more sinned against than sinning." He had then investigated the same old things that had happened years ago, and declared there was nothing to them. Now at this meeting he brings these forth once more. Most of them forgotten in the multiplying of years, and only old books could call them to mind again. At this meeting Bro. Lindsay referred to Brother O. J. Allard, and called him a "flopper"—first on one side—then on the other. Brethren, there are other "floppers."

Now, a "flopper" or one who changes his mind, is not necessarily bad, only hard to keep track of; but another statement made by Bro. Lindsay and we have done this part. He stated that the organization of this Ministerial Association with the end in view of bringing us to justice, and changing the management of THE RESTITUTION was not done hastily but the "they" (be one of the "they") had been working on the "thing" for three years.

Brethren, for each of those three years Bro. Lindsay has been an honored guest at our home, treated as a confidential friend and loving brother. Shown every courtesy and having the freedom of the house as if it were his own. Every possible opportunity has been before him to learn the inmost thoughts of our hearts. We do not consider comment necessary. We may express an opinion here, or rather suggest an idea, or ask a question perhaps, Who is it that has made much of this "dissatisfaction?"

After the close of the meeting of May 24 we presented the following to the official board of Plymouth Church:

Plymouth, Ind. May 26, 1911.
Washington Tuttle:

President of the Official Board of the Plymouth Church of God.

Dear brother:—I hereby make an appeal for a new trial in the case before you the afternoon and evening of May 24, on the ground that I was not given opportunity to prepare and give answers to the several charges preferred against me, nor to be represented by a proper advocate, and inasmuch as I was not previously informed and did not know what I should be accused of, and the nature of the charges that were brought up would require searching of books and papers for testimony to refute them.

I further demand that this notice of appeal be made a part of the published report that may be made of the meeting of May 24.

Your Brother.
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

No written reply was made, but on May 26 Brother McCrory called at our home and in the presence of wife and self, said that at this time no new trial could be had. After some discussion of the affair the question was put to him point blank by Sister Underwood: "Marion, was it fair?" He did not reply, until the question was repeated the third time, "Was it a fair trial?" and he replied "No."

We wish to add no more only to again apologize to our readers for bringing this up. We assure you that so far as we are concerned we shall not again smirch the columns of THE RESTITUTION with the affair, if you will forgive us this once.

When we informed the meeting that we had with us over a hundred letters to present from various brethren with whom we had had dealings where they expressed themselves as satisfied with our conduct of the business of THE RESTITUTION, intending in this way to present to the committee evidence favoring our conduct, as against the cases against us, we were not allowed to present any of them, but Brother Lindsay asked us if those letters were not from isolated members. To this we replied that a number of them were from members of the Oregon, Illinois Church, where he held his residence and membership. Inasmuch as we were not allowed to give any of these letters at that meeting, notwithstanding the declaration of Brother McCrory that "each will be given a respectful hearing," we wish to present a few herewith.

We wish first to give a brief account of what occurred that occasioned the writing of the first letter. At the Oregon, Ill., Conference held in August, 1908, some money was paid by various persons to Sister Phebe C. Willey to carry to this office. In the lot was $1.00 to send paper to Sister Elizabeth Sigler, of Oregon. She was credited and marked paid to Aug. 1909. In Sept. 1909 Bro. Lindsay was at our home, and handed out $1.00 asking that credit be given on account of Elizabeth Sigler, as she was old and poor and worthy. We credited the money and marked her paid to Aug. 1910, and at the same time put a private mark on also, that indicated she was poor and was vouched for by Bro. Lindsay, and we told him she would be provided for in future from the "Helping Fund" if no one else paid for her. Six weeks later, in the later part of Oct. 1909, Bro. J. E. Cross sent in $1.50 to be applied on account of Elizabeth Sigler, which was done, paying her to Aug. 1911. We supposing that Bro. Cross had generously sent this not knowing that Bro. Lindsay had paid before. It only paid it on that much further, and no harm done at all. On Dec. 12, 1910, Bro. W. T. Hardesty of Oregon sent us $1.50 to apply on this account, which paid to Aug. 1912. We sent word to Brother Hardesty of the long time advance pay of this account, so that he or any one interested might know the condition of the Sister's account.

In January 1911 we were shown a letter from a Sister in Oregon telling of how on Jan. 1, 1911 Bro. Lindsay had taken pains at the Church services to denounce us, and as a specimen of our "dirty work" pointed to Sister Sigler, and declared that we had taken money for her paper from her, a poor old woman, after he had paid it for her. That we had taken money twice over, and had so stolen money, and there was an instance of it before them.

We at once wrote to Bro. Cross and Hardesty explaining how the account stood, and what disposition had been made of the money they had sent, paying up to Aug. 1912 as the label on her paper would show. The following is Brother Hardesty's reply:

A. R. Underwood:

Dear brother, I received a letter from you a few days ago. I was sorry to hear that Bro. Lindsay denounced you in such a way. I knew nothing about it, until I got your letter, and inquired into the matter. I was out of town New Year's day, and I suppose that is when this happened. When I received the receipt showing that Sister Sigler's subscription was marked up to Aug. 1912, I told her of it so she would know how it was. I understand the way this came about was on that Sunday morning, Bro. Lindsay, Bro. Marsh and Sister Sigler were early, and she told Bro. Lindsay about this receipt. I don't suppose the dear old Sister thought that would stir him up so. Yes, you are gaining friends by what has been going on. You have the sympathy of most all the members of the Oregon Church. It always seems to me that it is poor policy to run some one else down, in order to build one's self up. It seems strange that the members of the ministerial association should so violate their own rules. Article 3 says, that it shall be for the purpose of preventing as far as possible unbecoming conduct on the part of the members of the Church, and dissensions, discord and divisions in the Church. They have condemned you unheard, it seems to me that if they were sure you were guilty of certain things, the right way would be to go to you first, and then if they couldn't get an agreement, then bring it up before the church. We are all faulty and make many mistakes, and it seems to me we ought to bear together in brotherly love, striving together for the furtherance of the gospel, not in trying to pull some brother down, but encourage him in the way of righteousness and truth. I am afraid they have run fast and lost out. So you see how I stand, and the majority of the Church here.

Submitted in love, your brother in Christ.

WILLIAM T. HARDESTY.

P. S. You may use your own judgment about printing this as it will make no difference to me either way.

Regarding this affair of the subscription of Sister Sigler, on Jan. 30, 1911, we wrote to Bro. Lindsay a full account of what had come to us about his action on Jan. 1, in denouncing us at the Oregon Church. Explained how easily he could have sent a card and found out all about how every cent paid for this Sister had been correctly applied. We told him he had wronged us in his denunciation as there was no "dirty work" about it, but all clear and fair, and that for this particular case he owed us an apology, and that if he had spread the story far and near that it was his duty to undo the wrong with all his power. It is enough to say that up to this date we have had no word of apology from him.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Just a few lines. We were so sorry so many of the brethren were sick. Now Brother Arthur you have known me a long time, you know I always speak plain, saying just what I mean. No person ever heard me say ought but good for THE RESTITUTION, or a word against its publisher. I have stood by it as a faithful friend should do. Just received a letter from one of our ministers living in Indiana, calling me down because he thought my article in late RESTITUTION reflected on the honesty of the insurgents, or that against body self-constituted without any authority from any conference or any body but their own dear selves. My, what a power to make rules and bylaws to govern the United States and British America, what a responsibility. I fear for results if persisted in, fear it will split the Church wide open. My answer to the brother's letter went this morning. Wish you could have read it. Referring to you I told him in all my dealings, for many years there had never occurred but one mistake that I could recall. I called your attention to it, and shortly got notice from the parties that all was right. All I know of other matters is by hear say; there are always fault finders and gossips.

Yours in love.
R. W. WOODWARD.

Brother Underwood:

I don't think the action of the "Big Five" at Cleveland will have any bad effect on the interest of THE RESTITUTION, only works discredit to themselves. Why is it all the hobbyists want to stay in the church and tear down if they can? Why don't they get out of the church and start for themselves? So they are passed along through State Conferences and given licenses to preach. What a state of discredit and contention. I suppose if some one would furnish the money they would start a paper. Now is it not funny how they can mix all their hobbies and get out a true church paper?

Answer,
WM. RAILSBACK.

Dear Brother Underwood,

As the time has come for my renewal for the dear old paper that is so much to me, I will send an order for $2.00, and send me a few copies of Letter to a Friend. I think your management of THE RESTITUTION is all right, and the trouble you are having will only add stars to your crown.

Your brother waiting for the kingdom to come,
HIRAM CORNELL.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I enclose money for which extend our subscription another year. We are very much pleased with THE RESTITUTION as you conduct it, and hope that you will continue to do the good work as in the past.

Yours in the one hope,
ALBERT SIPLE.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed is money for the renewal of my subscription, and I thank you for having patience with me when I was late. Send me the dear old paper as it is. I want no change made. Let THE RESTITUTION remain as at present—as yesterday, and today, and tomorrow, and forever. As now managed THE RESTITUTION is the best Church paper that has ever been in print.

Your Sister in hope of the one true calling,
MARY J. HOCKMAN.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

Enclosed you will find money for THE RESTITUTION. We ought to have attended to it before this time. We feel sorry for you in the trouble you are having, but take courage, look up. All things must work for good to them that love the Lord.

You have our heartfelt sympathy and prayers. Brother and Sister
THEO. KLINGENSTEIN.

Editor Restitution:

I desire to extend my sympathy for you on account of the recent attack made against you by designing persons. I believe you are honest, and hope you will continue to manage the good old RESTITUTION, as it is the best paper I ever read. Let it remain just where it is. I say keep THE RESTITUTION as it is, and where it is. I send you $2.00 to help you. Hoping you will be successful, I am

Yours for the one faith,
SARAH J. HOKLIN.

Editor Restitution:

I am writing to say, [illegible] you. I have not words to express my sympathy for you, but you can be sure my heart is with you. Just keep still. He that can hold his tongue is greater than he that rules a city.

Yours in the hope,
S. C. LEHMAN.

Editor Restitution:

I send you a little gift from my wife and self, with God's blessing. I am sorry to see a movement to turn THE RESTITUTION over to others, advocating peace at any price. While this is nice to talk of, yet we must uphold the faith once delivered to the saints. If the paper were turned over to some other management, and they print just what I sent in, what will we have? Why such a conglomeration of doctrines that will bewilder any young convert and make shipwreck of his faith. We want the paper to give to the trumpet a certain sound.

God bless you in your management of THE RESTITUTION, and all the entire household of faith. Come, Lord Jesus, quickly.

THOS. HAYTH.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have read what you have to say, and I want to tell you I am proud of the honorable stand you have taken, and the righteousness of all of your business with the brotherhood of the Church of God. I am satisfied those so-called charges they have made and those who made them, when weighed, will be found wanting. I will soon renew my subscription, and may you be exonerated from blame for the excellent business way you have always done with the brotherhood. If others see this as I do I pray our Heavenly Father that peace and harmony may soon be our lot, and that our Master may soon come.

I am yours truly,
HARRY EARLE.

Editor Restitution:

I improve this opportunity to say to you, and to the Household of faith, that I am well pleased with the course you have taken with regard to the accusations against you. I think you vindicated yourself, and that your enemies did not go according to Bible rule. I sincerely sympathize with you in your trouble. It is harder to bear than if it come from outsiders. May the good Lord bless and sustain you, and that you may receive a just reward, is the prayer of Brother and Sister,

J. P. LENT.

"Report of Investigation."

I have before me a printed sheet bearing the above caption. A report of what? Why simply this: Three of the "Ministerial Association of Five," came to Plymouth on May 24, to prove Brother Underwood a dishonest man, a financial crook.

Bro. Underwood said he was assured no report would be printed and circulated. They did not keep this promise, as I have one before me. This report speaks of one of these ministers as saying: "As they have gone about the country preaching the gospel these stories of financial crookedness on the part of our Editor have been poured into their ears." Another of these ministers is reported as saying: "Bro. Underwood was not conducting the office honestly." Another part of this report says: "The object of this Ministerial Association in bringing the charges made against Bro. Underwood before the committee was not to prove the charges true, etc." This report says they were, "stories of financial crookedness." I ask in all good conscience is it a commendable trait on the part of any minister, because some one tells him evil stories of another brother to by voice and press publish those stories to the world, and not prove them? Many innocent people have been made to suffer from the circulation of unproven evil stories. In civil courts the law holds the accused as innocent, until the charges are proven true.

Now, if these charges the Ministerial Association bring against Bro. Underwood amount to nothing more than "stories," it is your duty not to let these stories have the least effect on your minds.

This report further says: "Bro. W. H. Wilson has heard reports, but has never helped to circulate them."

I thank you very much for that testimony concerning me, it does me good, that you can bear record of me that I am not a tale-bearer and a scandal monger.

At the investigation one of the ministers of the Association said in substance as follows: "I denounce a man as a coward when one man tells him an evil report of another if he won't tell others." If such an one is a coward, I take pleasure in being a coward. This report further says: "One of the ministerial Association had any personal grievance against Bro. Underwood," it then goes on to give names of those that had, among which were "Bros. Wines and Wilson." It certainly was too bad to drag the dead into a controversy when he is unable to speak for himself. However, Bro. Wagoner wrote to Sister Wines, as he ought to know whether such a statement was true or not. She replied as follows:

"Bro. Wagoner:

Yes, I heard Mr. Wines state those very words as having been uttered by one who shall be nameless here. He uttered them hauntingly, and with full realization of their import. I have made up my mind to stand by the dear paper, as conducted by its present Editor. Where is there a man who could take his place? Echo answers where! But God says 'fear not.' 'Fear not' J. F. Wagoner, 'Fear not' little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. 'I shall rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him.'

Kindly,

S. R. WINES."

The testimony of this godly Sister should set that matter at rest. She is dearly loved by the brotherhood, almost reverenced for integrity and truthfulness.

The next quoted as having a "personal grievance" is myself. I was at the investigation, and publicly made this statement before the entire body. "I was personally acquainted with the father and mother of Bro. Underwood, were members of the same church, at Geneva, Ill., and that they were upright honorable honest people. Their son Arthur came to me to learn the printing business when but a youth. I never had any trouble with him. When the paper was taken to Plymouth, Ind., I continued as a correspondent, for more than a quarter of a century. I said I was always treated fairly, and had personally no trouble with him. Not one present will deny that I made the above statement, if they have any regard for truth. This being the case, why did they publish me in their "Report of Investigation" as having a "personal grievance? Do they know better than I did myself? If the rest of the names published as having a "personal grievance," should have no better foundation than the first two, very little reliance can be placed on their published statement.

Another statement in the "Report of Investigation," is as follows: "Bro. Underwood having admitted all that the Association desired to prove, it was decided not to go over any further evidence."

What did they desire to prove? Statements already quoted show that they desired to prove him to be a "financial crook," and a "dishonest man." I was present throughout all the trial and did not know of any such confession, until I read it in the "Report."

A FAIR TRIAL.

Brother Underwood asked a specified list of the offenses he was charged with, that he might prepare a defense. I am informed they refused to give them to him. One of the members of the Association is reported as saying that he had been preparing for this for three years, yet they did not give the accused three minutes to prepare. Was that fair?

The Association came with a professional lawyer to present their case. Brother Underwood asked the privilege of engaging an attorney to defend him. This was denied him. Was that fair?

I asked Brother Underwood how many men on the jury were there by his selection? He replied "Not one. I was not consulted about that matter." Was that fair?

Before the trial was over I heard two jurymen express their convictions against Brother Underwood. Was it an impartial jury when some of them believed him guilty before the trial commenced? Of what value is the verdict of such a jury?

Was it a fair trial? After the trial, Sister Underwood met one of the jury, and she tells me she asked him if it was a fair trial? and he replied "No."

After the trial one of the jurymen wrote to Brother Wagoner about the success of the Ministerial Association. Brother Wagoner ranks with Sister Wines as a person of unimpeachable character, dearly beloved by the brotherhood. He wrote me as follows: "Where are the 'Old Guards,' Adams, Robison, Huggins, Titchenal, and others? Will they come to the rescue? God's own arm hath need of the bold defense that must be made to save the truth. The fight is on, the tactics of the enemy are now plainly seen. Strike for the truth. Up! Oh, Up! brave Soldier! Don't give up the Ship! Sound the long roll! Sound it loud and deep!"—J. F. Wagoner.

Dear ones in the Lord. Brother Underwood has never claimed that he is fault-proof. He has published time and again, that if any one has a grievance, he is both willing and ready to make good any wrong he may have done. What more can any honest Christian do?

Then stop all this sinful business of trying to injure a brother's character, who wants to do right. Ministers are supposed to be spiritually minded people. The Scriptures teach that the spiritually minded should seek to restore the erring in the spirit of meekness and quietness. If they seek to do the reverse, can you believe them to be spiritually minded?

It is hoped that this is the last time the columns of THE RESTITUTION will be burdened with this grievous matter. If the Minister's Association want to continue the fight, we cannot help it, but dont pay any more attention to it. Let us double our effort in the Master's cause, and give peddlers of evil reports a severe letting alone. I would like to have personal letters sent to my address of all who sympathize with what I have written.

Stand by THE RESTITUTION as the grand old herald that comes weekly into our homes to strengthen us in the journey of life. Let every subscriber send another.

When the enemy attack the good old ship, stand by it.

In love,

W. H. WILSON.

Conference Report.

The Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Michigan was held at Dutton, Michigan, June 1st to 4th.

A goodly number were there the first evening and more familiar faces and some new ones came each day following, until Sunday the church was well filled. One sister said she had not been to Conference before for seven years, but she didn't think she would stay away seven years again, as she had enjoyed the meetings so much.

Brother F. L. Austin preached every forenoon and evening, and Sister Woodward spoke on Sunday afternoon, after which Brother Woodward conducted the Communion Service. All of these services were much enjoyed by those present and we all felt that the Conference this year was a source of great strength to us spiritually.

Brother Austin brought out so many good thoughts from both Old and New Testament, showing us how we must order our lives now if we wish to be joint heirs with him in the future.

Sunday forenoon after the morning service our young brother Milford Bolce from Champaign, Illinois, was baptized by Bro. Blakely. We all rejoiced with his mother to see him start in the Christian way thus early in life, and we pray that he may keep close to Christ and be faithful unto the end.

At the business meeting on Saturday, all old officers were elected except Secretary, Sister Rose Miller being elected to that office.

It was decided not to send a delegate to the General Conference.

We expect to have a Bible School conducted by Brother S. J. Lindsay at Coats Grove this summer, the date to be announced later.

It was decided to sell the Church at Watson and a committee was appointed to look after that business. A committee was also appointed to consider and decide as to the advisability of putting up a building for dining and sleeping purposes.

Brother and Sister Woodward were chosen State Evangelists for another year.

May we all work more diligently for the Master the coming year, and be ready to meet him in peace when he comes.

NELLIE M. BLAKELY, Sec'y.

The Annual June meeting of Indiana was held as usual at "Old Antioch" in Marshall County, June 9 to 11. In the absence of the President all meetings were presided over by the 1st Vice President, Brother F. M. McCrory. The following named churches were represented, viz: Argos, Antioch, Burr Oak, N. Salem, Plymouth, Hillsburg, and South Bend. Ministers present were J. F. Wagoner, Joseph Williams, D. E. Vanvactor of Indiana, W. H. Wilson of Chicago, and R. G. Huggins, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The Conference was opened by a short address of Welcome by the Vice President, after which Brother R. C. Railsback gave a talk on "Some Practical Needs of the Church." Greetings from our President, J. R. Willey, who is now in San Diego, Cal., were also read.

During a short general talk about church work one remarkable incident was mentioned by Sister Pressley of Plymouth. At a meeting held in 1859, five young people united with the church, all of whom are alive and all earnest workers in the church, Mrs. Samuel Pressley, E. K. Barnhill, R. C. Railsback, Mrs. Fanny Cleveland and Mrs. Sally Leek being the five baptized at that time. The ministers holding the meeting were Elder Chaplin, Uncle Hugh Barnhill and Uncle Henry Logan. The last named one officiated at the baptism.

No important business other than the regular routine of work was transacted.

Brother Wagoner preached Friday afternoon on "The Things Most Surely Believed Among Us."

Friday evening Brother Huggins spoke on "Some of God's Measuring Lines."

Saturday morning Brother Wilson spoke on "Sound Doctrine."

Saturday afternoon Brother Williams gave a talk on Prophecy.

The Berean meeting at 6:45 was led by Sister Virginia Riteuour. Her subject was "Purity." At 8:00 Brother Williams spoke on "The New Home."

Sunday Services opened at 9:30 with a Social meeting led by Brother R. C. Railsback. The morning address was given by Brother Huggins, his subject being "Perils of Weariness." At 2:00 P. M. Brother Williams spoke on "The Son of Man," which was followed by the Communion Service conducted by Brother Vanvactor. The Closing Address was given by Brother Huggins on "Some Logical Deductions on the No Death Theory."

At the Sunday morning Social meeting, greetings were read from our dear beloved Brother Halstead, who was not able to be present.

LYDIA RAILSBACK, Sec'y.

The Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus of Illinois will meet in Oregon, August 16 to 20 inclusive. A committee has been appointed to prepare a programme which will soon be published. Plan now to meet with the brethren of Illinois at the time appointed, and enjoy with them a spiritual feast about the table of the Lord.

G. ELDRED MARSH, Sec.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed please find $2.00 for the Helping Fund. All here seem well pleased with THE RESTITUTION's present stand, especially on the Divine Sonship of Christ. Simon Peter answered and said "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Matt. xvi. 16; Luke i. 32 35. There can be no gainsaying this. There is no salvation in any other name. Acts iv. 12. Paul says to the Galatians "I am astonished that you have so quickly turned away from him who called you by the grace of Christ, to other glad tidings; not that there are any other, but there are certain persons who are troubling you and wishing to subvert the glad tidings of the Anointed. But even if we, or an angel from heaven should announce glad tidings to you different from what we announced to you, let him be accursed." Surely we are living in perilous times, when iniquity is abounding and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us stand fast and strive to hold out faithful unto the end.

I have been a subscriber for THE RESTITUTION for over thirty years, and my mother before me subscribed for it. Any remittances sent to Bro. Underwood for any purpose have always been promptly receipted, and all business faithfully transacted.

May the Lord give him strength and courage sufficient for all his needs in this time of trial. May we all be kept from the spots of the world in this sifting time.

Yours in the Blessed Hope,

MRS. C. W. RUSSELL.

Dear Brother Underwood:

We are a little late sending our renewal for the good paper. We could not get along very well without its weekly visits. Our prayer is that you may be spared many years to send our good paper on its mission.

Your brother and sister in Christ,

J. E. & M. F. COOK.

Editor Restitution:

I herewith enclose my mite to help you, and hope many others will do so also. I am well satisfied with your management of THE RESTITUTION, and hope it will continue as it is, and hold up the truth as it is in Jesus, and he says God's word is truth.

Yours in hope,

GEO. MITCHELL.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find a money order to pay for another year, and a little gift to you in token of our appreciation of your labors in editing our highly prized paper. Trusting that you may by the blessing of God be able to continue your labors as Editor of THE RESTITUTION for another year.

Your brother in Christ,

C. E. HATCH.

Editor Restitution:

Dear Brother, in Christ Jesus:—I have been reading THE RESTITUTION for ten years and am so sorry that there has been such trouble brought up in our dear old paper, but it says, "Offenses must come but woe to them that doeth it."

Brother Underwood, don't get discouraged for God is on your side because you can feel that by the good loving letters that are sent to you by so many of the precious faith. I am sure I have never been cheated out of a cent from THE RESTITUTION and I have been taking it for the last ten years, and I have sent to the Helping Funds and I know they are always sent on there mission. Well I could sit here and write a lot more, but you know this is all from my heart, and Brother Underwood, may God bless you in your good work while you are on this earth. This is my prayer.

Your Sister, in Christ.

MRS. M. E. DARNELL.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I enclose $1 50 for the renewal of the paper. You have my confidence and respect for the future as you have faithfully earned in the past. May our kind heavenly Father strengthen and comfort you in this time of trouble.

Your Sister, in hope of everlasting life,

MRS. W. H. POOLE.

Editor Restitution:

As our time to the good, old paper expired about the first of May, you will find enclosed Money Order to pay our subscribtion for another year, as we think it would be impossible to do without the good writings it contains each week. We consider Brother Wilson's "The Future Doom of Russia" just grand, and would like to see many more writings on prophecy. May THE RESTITUTION live and prosper for years to come, is my prayer.

DANIEL V. DAVIS.

Editor Restitution:

I see your urgent call for help and enclose $1.00 which I hope will be a little help to you. I am afraid our people are too close with their money, they want too much of this world's goods. Why not lay up treasure in heaven where neither moth nor rust can corrupt, for we brought nothing into this world and it is sure we can carry nothing out, and if we have food and raiment we should be content, and we have a promise that he will never forsake us nor leave us. It makes me feel very sad to see brethren finding fault with the dear, old RESTITUTION, which so many of us have learned to love. I am willing for the paper to stay in the hands it is now in, and I hope and pray the Lord will help you to keep it clean and pure from all error. I hope our dear brethren will soon wake up and see where we stand. It makes me so sad to think after all these years of fighting the good fight of faith, now when our redemption is at hand, some of the brethren are trying to cause divisions among us. Wake up, dear brethren and sisters, for Jesus says, Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Let us all try to live nobler, better lives, and heavenly to meet the Lord when he comes.

Your Sister.

MRS. LUCY LACEY.

Dear Restitution:

God in his infinit mercy has brought me through a hard and long spell of sickness, and enables me to write to thank the dear brother or sister [illegible] is yet sending me the dear and precious RESTITUTION. I don't see how I can miss its weekly visits, yet I am not able to pay for it—takes all my means for medicine and the necessaries of life. I am 80 years old, and so feeble! May God bless the dear ones that are sending it to me, is ever the prayer of your Sister in the One Hope.

MRS. J. E. [illegible]

Editor Restitution:

It does not seem as if any fair-minded person can fail to pass a verdict of "Not Guilty," after reading the defense that circumstances forced Brother Underwood to make in his own behalf. Let us, the children of God, members of the Church of God, not withhold the word of encouragement needed so much at this time.

A Sister in Christ.

MRS. C. H. THOMAS.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I sympathize with you in your trials and troubles. I have been a subscriber for the paper for many years and have found no cause for complaint. I believe you are honest and sincere and hope you will continue to manage the paper.

Your Sister in Christ.

KITTIE WATT.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I thought I would write and send in my renewal for another year, as my time has run over a few days. I had just forgotten it. I did'nt aim for it to run over but it just slipped my mind. I think so much of the paper, it has such good lessons if we will only try to follow them. Dear Brother, I feel that I could not do without the paper, as I pass away so many lonesome hours reading its lessons and teachings. O! dear brother, I think that some of them that have built on that solid foundation ought to stand more firmly, for dear brother you know that the Scriptures say, Let an angel come and preach any other doctrine, let him be a curse. Dear brother, I hope you will live long and have good health and carry on your good work as before. As the old saying is "Never change the old for the new." You will find enclosed a Money Order for $1.50.

From a Sister, waiting for that blessed King from heaven.

MRS. R. C. ELLIOTT.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed please find Money Order to apply on my subscription. Will just say, I have been acquainted with THE RESTITUTION for 28 years and have always been well pleased with it. Have been well pleased with the stand the paper has taken on Bible questions, and in standing firm for the Truth. If others wish to find a paper teaching things contrary to the truth let them do so; but let THE RESTITUTION stand firm for the True Gospel in the future as it has done in the past, and I agree with what Mrs. S. J. Whitten says in the issue of May 17. I think all your readers understand the matter now, and those who believe the Truth will stand by you and THE RESTITUTION. I shall take it as long as I live if I can get the money to pay for it, if it remains the same as in the past. If some one gets control who changes the principles of the paper, and teach contrary to the Bible I will cease to subscribe for it.

Yours in hope.

NANNIE OSBORN.

Brother Underwood:

The Church at Blair take this method to extend their love and sympathy, in the stand you have taken, to keep THE RESTITUTION, the dear old paper we have known and loved so long, up to the standard of truth. We realize that it has been a work of trouble and worry, and are glad to see so many letters of encouragement. We hope that when the Church has been disciplined and in order, as it must be, each one preferring his brother in honor before himself, we will have more harmony and less of such trouble as we now have, and say with Bro. Titchenal, if ever there was a time when the Church of God needed articles of faith and discipline to guide them it is now. May God guide and direct you in all your work is our prayer.

CARRIE FREE, Sec.

After our article in reply to the organization of the Ministerial Association, Sister Woodward wrote as follows: "Say, Brother Underwood, how did you come to have verses just like what you wanted about that "tall man." Well, didn't I laugh when I saw your shrewdness in putting them where they would cut deep. Your argument was all right."

Sister Wines wrote, "I shall stand by THE RESTITUTION. If my dear Don had lived, he would have held back the rebellious factions as he did once before, but as soon as he was dead they went to work again."

Brother J. W. Frier says, "I stand for the best paper ever published, wishing you success."

As a result of meetings held at Pleasant Prairie, near Sac City, Iowa, Brother O. J. Allard reports the baptism of two more into the faith. One of the two becomes a new subscriber to THE RESTITUTION.

The Church at Blair, Nebraska, had the pleasure of an over Sunday visit from Bro. Adams, during which time we were refreshed and encouraged by three most excellent sermons, besides other profitable talks of things concerning Christ's coming and kingdom.

CARRIE FREE, Sec.

Ebenezer. 1. Sam 7, 12

The copy for this department of THE RESTITUTION is supplied by Brother Robert G. Huggins, of 10624 Lee Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Please send all letters and communications intended for this section direct to him, and save delay.

A letter dated June 5th, a son of Bro. J. M. Thorp, of Everett, Ohio, reports his death on May the 5th, age 77 years, 5 months and 10 days. Another good brother has passed away. We thank God because he has decreed the death of death.

There will not be any more Nebraska Berean lessons this year. We will be away from home, and many added duties during the summer prevent us getting up further lessons. Next year we hope they will elect a President who can serve them more faithfully than we have been able to do.

June the 7th Miss Helen Pate was baptized into Christ. She is the daughter of Bro. and Sister Robert Pate. Her parents and her brethren and sisters congratulate her upon her obedience, and pray that she will "run well" to the end of the race, and find a place among the victors around the throne.

Obituary.

The deceased, Mary Young Axe, was born in Bucks County, Penn., in 1840. She was married to Jacob Axe. She has been a resident of Cleveland for 30 years, having lived at 1800 Marion Ave. for 27 years. About 15 years ago she heard, believed, and obeyed the gospel of the kingdom of God; since then she has been an ardent advocate of the faith once delivered to the saints. Her highest joy was in conversing upon the glories to be revealed at the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Often infirmities" kept her from attending the weekly meetings but her heart was always in the assembly of the saints, among whom she was held in high esteem. She has now joined the great congregation of God's dead ones; and with these, having "died in the faith," she will rest till God's appointed time to change them and her. She sleeps in Jesus.

Notice to Illinois Brethren.

At our last Conference a resolution was adopted requesting each brother to contribute one dollar, and each sister fifty cents every year to cover the expenses of the Annual meeting, said contribution to be made by each member of the Church whether they attend the Conference or not. The money raised is not to be used for evangelistic work, but is separate and in addition to the amount contributed for that purpose.

The following collectors were appointed at the various churches to receive contributions for this fund:—Oregon, P H Knodle; Lenark, J M Gleffelty; Adeline, Charles Gesin; Dixon, Miss Anna Adams; Chicago, Miss Leila Whitehead; Antioch, J H Williams; Camden; Elder Rolla Hightower; Ripley, J W Cooper. Members not connected with any local Church should remit directly to Wm T Hardesty, Treasurer, Oregon, Illinois. "Sometimes a person's tongue gets them into trouble. Watch the tongue; it is your tongue, it belongs to you, and it is the only one for which you are responsible. Your neighbor's tongue may need care also, but that is his business. Watch your tongue; it needs watching. It is a fire- watch it. It is the helm which guides the vessel. Let the helmsman keep wide awake. It can bless or it can curse; it can poison or heal; it can pierce hearts and blight hopes; it can sow discord and separate chief friends. Watch your tongue, no one but you can take care of that tongue. Your neighbors may wish they could bridle it, but they can't do it."

SOMETHING NEW.

Brother J. L. Wince wrote a series of articles that were published in The Restitution some months ago, on the subject of the Resurrection. At the solicitation of some of the brethren, he has had the matter printed in tract form. It makes a very good appearance, and the ability of Brother Wince as a writer is so well known that no words of praise from us are necessary. The tract is now ready, and can be ordered from Brother J. L Wince, Pierceton, Ind, or direct from this Office, as you wish. The price is 10 cents single copies postpaid, or 12 for $1.00.

Brethren, this whole edition of this work ought to be in the hands of the readers in the next sixty days, and if proper energy is used this will be accomplished. Send orders in this very day.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given below, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. When left for the Publisher to decide, it will be used only for those who themselves state their circumstances, or whose case is presented by some trustworthy person.

We trust our friends in Canada will remember that the present agreement with the United States forces us to pay extra postage on papers sent to Canada. This compells all publishers to charge 50 cents a year more to the subscribers in that country. This makes our rate to you $2.00 instead of $1.50. We have said before, and now repeat, that if any brother living in Canada thinks we should not add this extra postage, and declines to pay it, send your $1.50 and we will provide The Restitution to you. We will have no quarrel with a brother about so small a matter.

"A Century of Indiana" is the title of a new history written by State Senator Edward A. Moore, and published by the American Book Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, price 75 cents. The volume contains 340 pages, and gives the earliest history of the State on down to the present day. Indiana today stands second to no state in the Union, and this work gives the whole history of the State in concise and attractive form, carefully indexed, so that it has an added value as a reference book. It is a splendid book for the home, and for Indiana Students it is of priceless value. No library is complete without it. If your book dealer cannot supply it send as above and get a copy. There is pleasure in reading it, for every Indianan is proud of his State, and besides enjoyment there is real profit in this work.

Will It Pay to Become a Christian? is the title to a well written book of 96 pages by Brother James W. Wilson. In a clear and convincing manner it sets forth the Christian faith, and answers the question indicated in its title affirmatively. The edition should be taken at once, and put out to work. It is neatly bound in cloth, and can be had by addressing W H Wilson at 625 North Willow av. Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois. The price is 25 cents, very low, and within reach of all. Send and get one.

A Letter to a Friend

On the Covenants of Promise, and connection with the "One Hope, One Faith, One Baptism." This is what it claims to be—a letter written to a friend by Sister C. C. Woodruff, who died in 1859. She was the wife of our lamented Brother John O. Woodruff, who died a short time since. This letter was not at first written for publication, but after the death of the author, it was printed, and has since gone through a number of editions. Since the death of Brother Woodruff this tract has been out of print, but there were repeated requests for it, hence we have issued a new edition which is now ready for use. It makes a 32 page tract, is plain and earnest in style and convincing in argument, that it lives as a monument to the memory of its writer through all these years, and is yet full of good for all. Singly the price is 10 cents, 12 for a dollar, post paid. Where larger quantities are taken that can be sent by express a lower rate will be made. Brothers and Sisters if you cannot spend a series of years with your friend, have a copy of this letter sent to him, and you will have done the next best thing, or one can hand it, read it in his presence and not receive a cent. Send for us and have a supply always ready to hand out when there is opportunity. You will be glad you have been blessed in the work.

THE LAST CHANCE.

We have a number of books published by our late Brother John O. Woodruff. We have only "The Word of the Kingdom. During the last years of his life Brother Woodruff issued the books at great expense. Many were supplied through his generosity. The remainder ought to be out doing the good he desired they should and to enable you to get one we will send them to you post paid for Two cents.

The article on "Salvation. What is it?" which appeared in our issue Sept. 15, has been translated into German and printed in tract form. The size to send in an ordinary envelope. The cost is 2 cents each, 50 copies for 65 cents, or 90 copies for one dollar. If it is printed in full in English so that those who do not read German can see exactly what they are sending to a German friend. Send all orders to B. Jaegensen, Barberton, O.

Brother H. A. Lehman was chosen as Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio State Conference. A number of the brethren will have business with him, and all such should mark down his address so they will know where to write—address 135 East 11th avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

IMPORTANT.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, and state, plainly and distinctly. We know a great many names and addresses, but we may not remember yours.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, post office money order, or express order. Not by personal checks. Money sent in either of these ways is safe, and without risk of loss. Stamps stick together and are useless. Money even paper money is easily detected and is at the mercy of a dishonest clerk always. Money sent in a registered letter is not guaranteed by the government.

Always examine your money order and see that it is drawn in the name of "The Restitution," and that it is payable at "Plymouth, Ind." Look and see that the post master has written Ind, not Ill. or Pa. or Ohio.

When you wish your address changed, give both old and new address.

In sending renewals always give the exact name in which it has previously been sent, and state if you wish the name changed, and we will gladly do so. The reason why this is important can be readily seen. For instance, the paper is sent to Mrs. Susan Willis as wife of husband George, gets a money order in his own name and send it saying for us to send the paper for a year. We have no reason to suppose that Susan is his wife—he did not say she was—so we enter his name and send him the paper. Susan's paper goes delinquent, and afterwards when we notify her about it both become offended. So stupid is us—everybody knows Susan and George are husband and wife.

Get the last issue of the paper when ordering books and tracts, and order from that. If a work is advertised as supplied only by the author, send to him—please not to us.

SPECIAL TO AUTHORS.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

An author frequently spends considerable time and labor on an important subject, and when it is ready picks up an envelope that has to be strained to hold it, addresses it, puts on a single stamp and drops it in the box. He has labored hard to produce his finished work, then neglected three important points—he did not enclose it in an efficient wrapper, he failed to fully pay the postage, and neglected to put on his return address. A hint to the wise is enough.

The Bible: Its Principles and Texts

As indicated by the title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a remarkable disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions: and the third expounds in a clear, impressive, and homiletic manner, particular "Texts." The knotty and perplexing texts of the Bible are untied and solved satisfactorily to the most fastidious and critical. More than one hundred and fifteen subjects of intense interest to every Bible student are formally discussed. Both simple and scholarly—the child is fascinated and taught; the scholar is entertained and instructed. Bible lovers, here is a feast for you. SOWING SEED.

I recently was informed of a lady who has been brought to a knowledge and obedience of the faith by handing her one of those small tracts offering "Five hundred dollars reward" to a person finding certain pulpit phrases, which most people suppose are in the Bible.

This lady felt certain that she could find them, and so took her Bible and concordance, and searched diligently in order to find them. She failed to find them, but found in their place, the Pearl of Great Price, which was much better.

He Leadeth Me.

I know not what the future holds,
Time's curtains intervene,
And mists and clouds, and vapors
Must forever roll between.

Grief, joy or pain, or good or ill
Whate'er my portion be
This thought must ever have power to calm
He leadeth me.

The Inspiration of the Bible a Test of Fellowship. No. 8.

It has been rightly contended that a revelation from God to man involves miracle; with equal truth it may be added that its preservation among men requires a continuance of divine intervention. History demonstrates the truth of this. The antediluvian world so corrupted the divine revelation given to fallen man (Gen vi 11-12) that a departure from the ordinary course of nature was deemed necessary to destroy the corruptors of God's way of righteousness, and at the same time save a few, who by reason of faith and obedience, have "found grace in the eyes of the Lord" verse 8. By means of that "few" God's truth was transmitted to the patriarchal age without, as far as we know, any written record of it. The items of which it was composed were not numerous compared with those we now possess. They were, doubtless, handed down by word of mouth from one generation to another. Those who appreciated them would be careful that there should be no mistake. Feeling a personal interest in the divine communications they would treasure them as of more value than pearls or rubies Job xxviii 18. The occasional angelic visitations would not lessen but rather increase the responsibility they felt to carefully guard revealed wisdom." They would esteem it as a precious jewel, Prov xx 15, the fruit of which was better than gold, yea, than fine gold, and the revenue thereof than choice silver, Prov viii 19. They would do as the mother of Jesus did in reference to the angelic utterances communicated to her through the shepherds, Luke ii 8-17. Others wondered at them, but Mary kept all these, and pondered them in her heart, verse 18-19.

There is no evidence of divine revelation having been reduced to writing until the time of Moses, who may have written the book of Genesis while keeping sheep in the land of Midian. It, as is supposed, he was also the writer of the Book of Job, he may have penned it during the same period. The books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy must of course, have been written during the wilderness journey of the Israelites. The responsibility of carefully guarding the revealed Word was not diminished by its reduction to writing.

The children of Israel were taught this lesson in the command to place the tables of the covenant inside the ark. Deut x 5, Heb ix 4. And when Moses had written the law a second time, as embodied in the book of Deuteronomy he said to the Levites which bear the ark of the covenant, "Take this book of the law, and put it by (Rev ver.) the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee. Deut xxxi 26. Possibly the scroll on which he wrote contained the previous part of the Pentateuch, and this may have been the "book of the law of the Lord given by the hand of (marg) Moses," which "Hilkiah, the high priest.....found.....in the house of the Lord" in the reign of King Josiah 2 Kings xxii 8; 2 Chron xxxiv 14.

The tabernacle in which were stored up the "two tables of testimony, tables of stone written with the finger of God," Ex xxxi 18, and the inspired book of the law written by Moses was surrounded on all sides by the children of Israel during their encampment; an illustration of the attitude to be assumed toward the Word of God by spiritual Israel during their wilderness [illegible] principle which underlie [illegible] law, including [illegible] are defined by [illegible] hearted love for [illegible] neighbor [illegible] communion [illegible] the prophets [illegible] which is given to [illegible] possessed the shadow, while [illegible] blessed with the substance [illegible] formed literally or [illegible] which we have to carry [illegible] tively and most [illegible] out of the [illegible] come out of [illegible] 8 they were [illegible] Cor x 2, were baptized into [illegible] Gal iii 27; they drank [illegible] Exod xvii 6; we drink [illegible] by Hebrews [illegible] Exod xvi 20, [illegible] church unto [illegible] 27:37; they [illegible] and terrible wilderness, wherein [illegible] fiery serpents and [illegible] and drought," Deut viii 15, [illegible] to live in an evil and [illegible] word. Gal i 4; 2 John ver. [illegible] many "comes" [illegible] evil [illegible] they were guided by a visible, cloudy [illegible] we are guided by the Spirit in the form of the revealed Word and the invisible angelic host, Ps xxxiv 7. The camp of Israel had in their midst a tabernacle; we are the antitypical camp and tabernacle combined. One is "the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man" Heb viii 2, "we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened" 2 Cor v [illegible] burdened with sin, and all the responsibilities attaching to the task of working out our "salvation with fear and trembling" Phil ii 12. Our relationship to him who is the "high priest" imposes upon us the obligation of regarding this "greater and more perfect tabernacle" Heb ix 11, in its present state, by a disinterested watchfulness over its constituent members and its conditions. We are required to [illegible] care that none enter its precincts who have not in the appointed way had their "hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and their bodies washed with pure water" Heb x 22; a condition which necessitates the application of the "blood of sprinkling" Heb xii 24, at the Christ "altar," Heb xiii 10. When within the pale of this "spiritual house" it is our duty to see that its "holy priesthood" 1 Pet ii 5 performs aright its sacred functions, to "keep," as did the Levitical priest hood "the charge of the tabernacle," and "all the service of the tabernacle," "that there be no wrath upon the children of Israel," Num xviii 5.

The details of the priestly "charge" furnish many illustrations of the contingency with which the [illegible] had to be performed. To Aaron and his sons during their consecration it was said, "Abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, day and night, seven days, and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not" Lev viii 35. They were commanded upon entering the tabernacle to "wash with water, that they die not" Exod xxx 20. They were to be clothed in the way prescribed when they came "near unto the altar to minister in the holy place, that they bear not iniquity, and die" Exod xxviii 43. They were told "not to eat of the holy things" if unclean, and the command was accompanied by a penalty. "They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die, therefore, if they profane it" Lev xxii 9. The descendant of Aaron, who had a blemish, was not permitted to "go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar," and the reason given is, "that he profane not my sanctuaries: for I the Lord do sanctify them" Lev xxi 23. And the "sons of Kohath," whose duty it was, when the camp was on the march, to bear "the vessels of the sanctuary," were forbidden to "touch any holy thing lest they die" Num iv 15.

These injunctions and the penalties attending their infraction have their counterpart in the "things in the holy place" of which they are "patterns" Heb ix 23. Separately and collectively they are designed to inculcate the sanctity of all God's appointments, and to exhibit the danger of profaning that which he has denominated holy. It is a mistake to suppose that the "grace and truth" which [illegible] Jesus Christ are less stringent [illegible] treated with greater [illegible], than the "law given by Moses" John i 17. Rather is it the reverse. [illegible] "grace" is superior to the law of "works" Rom xi 6. This is the inferential argument in Heb x 28, 29:—He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace?" The "blood of the covenant" is a part of the means by which a believer is "sanctified;" the Word of God is another part:—"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy Word is truth" Jno xvii 17. To count the blood "an unholy thing" is no more contemptuous than to say that God's written Word, or any part of it, is unholy: and this is done by those who deny the inspiration of some portions. And what can be greater "despite unto the spirit of grace" than to say that its work in the process of inspiration fails to secure infallibility? The high retribution under Christ is not so swift as under Moses, it is equally rigorous. "For we know him that hath said vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" ver. 30-31. The judicial death which is immediately followed profanation under the Mosaic law is, under Christ, merely postponed to the day of Judgment.

The Kohathites, Gershonites, and Merarites, all sons of Levi, to whom was appointed the duty of carrying the tabernacle and its contents when the camp moved forward, Num iv, were types of Christ's brethren in their present wilderness march; and the holy things which were carried and their counterpart in the Holy Scriptures and all that they teach. It was at the peril of these Levites to evade the "service" and "burden" imposed upon them, (ver. 49;) no less can be said of the sons of God and their corresponding obligation. It is, doubtless, from this point of view that the apostle describes "the Church of the living God" as "the pillar and ground of the truth" 1 Tim iii 15.

An attempt has been made to depreciate the inspirational character of the "holy Scriptures" with which Timothy was acquainted from a child, by altering that expression into "priestly records" 2 Tim iii 15. Great stress is laid on the fact that the two Greek words are not the same as those used for "holy Scriptures" in Rom i 2, and that the word rendered "Scriptures" in 2 Tim iii 15 is not the word otherwise used throughout the New Testament, where "Scriptures" are referred to. On these grounds, it is said that the Old and New Testaments consist of "priestly" or "Sacred Records" (ver 15,) and that they contain "divinely-inscribed Scripture" (ver 16;) the "Records" are described as God-given and therefore reliable, but the "Scripture" they contain is defined as God-breathed, and therefore infallible in what it reveals. The "Sacred Records" are thus represented as co-extensive with the Bible, but not so the God-breathed Scripture. This is really another way of putting the old Unitarian formula that the Bible contains the Word of God, but is not wholly the Word of God.

Assuming that the word "priestly" is more correct than "holy" (ver 15,) what is gained by the change? Does it prove that the "records" were not divinely inspired? Or, that if so, their inspiration was of an inferior character? To say so would be a pure assumption. The priests were holy, and their duties were quite compatible with God inspiring them to write Israelitish history. In that case their record of events would be as infallibly true as the predictions of the prophets. God sent unto Israel not only "prophets and wise men;" but also "scribes" Matt xxiii 34. Among the [illegible] "Scribes" were Seraiah [illegible] viii 17, Sheva 2 Sam xx [illegible] Shaphan 2 Kings xviii 37, Shaphan 2 Kings xxii 3, Shemaiah 1 Chron [illegible] Jonathan 1 Chron xxvii 32, [illegible] Neh viii 4, and Zadok Neh xiii 13. The functions of a prophet did not necessarily involve writing, though he may were commissioned to write; to the office of Scribe, writing was indispensable. The fact that scribes and prophets are associated together as God-sent, indicates that they were equally qualified by God for the work assigned to them, that the writing of the Scribe was as much God-breathed as the speaking and writing of the prophet.

The substitution of "sacred" as an alternative rendering, indicates that the word "priestly" is not considered to be the exclusive meaning of its Greek counterpart; neither indeed is it. Consequently; without confirmatory evidence, no argument can be based on the word "priestly;" such evidence is wanting. What proof is there that all the books of the Bible have been written by priests? This is not be adduced before the substitution of "priestly" for "holy" can be recognized as either prudent or necessary. What, it may be further asked, is the advantage of substituting "sacred" for "holy?" Practically speaking, their meaning is identical. The word rendered "holy" in 2 Tim iii 15, is claimed to be "holy, hallowed, consecrated, sacred, the antithesis to profane," and the word translated "holy," in Rom i 2 means "sacred, holy, pious, pure, a sanctuary." It is true that the word rendered "Scriptures" in 2 Tim iii 15 is not precisely the same as that translated "Scripture" in verse 16, but they are both from the same root, and there is no radical difference in their respective meanings. The former is defined to be "that which is written, a written character, letter, a drawing, picture, an inscription, writing state papers, accounts, written law, a book treatise;" and the latter means, "drawing, painting, writing, embroidery, a letter." It will thus be seen that both words are compatible with a record or writing of any kind. A record of events is not the exclusive idea of either word; if verse 15 mean "record," verse 16 does also. The latter is defined to be God-breathed; hence the "Scripture" referred to—whether a record of the past or predictions of the future, or doctrinal or practical teaching—is divinely inspired. The word rendered "Scripture" in verse 16 is used not only for the Psalms, Matt xxi 42, and for Moses and the prophets, Luke xxiv 27, but also for the narrative about Elijah in 1 Kings, 19th chapter, from which Paul quotes in Rom xi 2-4, styling his quotation "the Scripture." The Psalms, about which no question appears to be raised, are partly historical; nos. xxviii, cv and cvi are notably so.

The "Holy Scriptures" with which Timothy was acquainted from a child, are defined by the apostle Paul as "able to make wise unto salvation,"—an inspired definition which is worth more than many pages of lexicographical hair-splitting, as original documents, only inspired scriptures can be of value to "make wise unto salvation;" and all that the Bible contains is conducive in some way or other to this end.

Divine history is as important as divine prophecy, because of the intimate relationship existing between the two. The prophecy is based upon the history; without a record of the past, many predictions of the future would be unintelligible, and would, to some extent be deprived of their force. God gave a record of what had been, before foretelling what was to come. There is as much necessity for the infallibility of divine history as of divine prophecy and doctrine. Indeed, the doctrine and history national and personal, are so interwoven that it is impossible to separate them. To describe the record of events as "reliable," and all the rest as "infallible," is to introduce a distinction for which there is no warrant. It is virtually affirming that God-sent records may be of fallible authorship. If so, there is no guarantee that as originally given, they were free from error.

If the so-called "reliable" part be not infallible, it is either uninspired or its inspiration is fallible in its results; in which case the Bible cannot be wholly the infallible Word of God.

The belief in degrees of inspiration does not necessarily enter into the question of fellowship so long as all inspiration be recognised as infallible. Whether such degrees exist is not a matter of revelation. We are told that God has spoken "in divers manners," Heb i 1; a statement quite sufficient to account for the varied forms in which divine inspiration has operated. He who formed the human mind can breathe through any of its faculties—reason, memory, imagination, or feeling—awake or asleep—and yet secure a result free from error.

A recognition of this, and nothing less, is essential to the fellowship based "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets," Eph ii 20.

Table Talk.

To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Salem, Ohio:

Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; for it is God which worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. And beloved in the Lord, it is our will to be fruitful in every good work, and we learn a good lesson from Jas. iii. 17, 18, "But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits. Without partiality, and without hypocrisy, and the peace of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." Rom. ii. 10, tells us that "Glory, honor, and peace will be rendered to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile." And 2 Cor. ix. 8, further says, "And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye always having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work." And we will ask as Paul that you pray for us, for we trust that we have a good conscience in all things, willing to live honestly. "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen."

OWEN A. POTTORF.

Nobody loves me, said Bismark during his illness, for what I have done. I have never made anybody happy—not myself, nor my family, nor anybody else. But how many have I made unhappy! But for me three great wars would not have been fought, eighty thousand men would not have perished. Parents, brothers, sisters and widows would not have been bereaved and plunged into mourning. I have had little or no joy from all my achievements; nothing but vexation, care and trouble.

It is but our reasonable service to God and humanity that we develop the best that is in us, and do what we can and all we can. We are but stewards of God. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

"Be patient. Whatever people may say or do, the Bible remains the same. God, who existed before the world was made, changes not. Let your eyes be up to heaven, not [illegible] earth. Things on earth are more stable for you if your affections are set on heaven."

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Dear Brother Underwood:

For the benefit of isolated brethren, as we are eight miles from Springfield, and we go there as often as we can to meet with our brothers and sisters on first day of the week, and when Brother and Sister Robison come this way preaching to others, we have them stop with us a few days and we invite our neighbors to come to our home to hear them preach, and sometimes we go to our neighbor's homes to talk on the Bible. Some of them are very attentive, one especially believes it, and we hope she will obey. We procured a hall in Tremont City, and Brother and Sister Robison for almost two weeks preached there to a good, attentive audience, and they want them to come back again in the near future, which I hope they will do. One lady said the whole town was stirred up, never heard such a doctrine before in their lives. Then Brother John Beck and his Son David had been talking to a Doctor in Enon, nine miles from Springfield, and the Doctor wanted to hear our brethren preach, so they procured a church and Brother Robison and wife preached in Enon to a good audience, and they want them to come again and hold more meetings. Brother Huggins also stopped with us and preached at our home two evenings while on his way from Troy to Springfield, and our neighbors remained for two hours after services and asked questions, as they did with Brother Robison.

I hope our brethren will procure a place for our brethren to preach and teach the truth. We are cheered up, hoping there are still a few who would obey if they only have opportunity to learn the truth. Let us cast bread upon the waters, one plant and another water, and God will give the increase.

Your Brother and Sister, in hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

We love to think of Jesus as being the Son of God, and hence a divine person. We delight to honor his divinity, but on the other hand it is comforting to think of his human nature. He was a man among men. He did things that men do—except commit sin. He became tired and weary, and rested his body, see John iv. 6. There were times when he was exhausted by labor, Mark iv, 38. He became thirsty just as we do, John iv. 6. He took food as we do, and when compelled to go without for some time, he felt hungry, Matt. iv. 2. He was subject to feelings of grief and sadness, John xi. 35, though he was pure, Heb. iv. 15. It is encouraging to us to know that Jesus understands all the things that can affect our daily lives. When we go to him with our hearts sad, and needing comfort, we know he understands us perfectly. We have nothing touching our lives that did not touch his. To know that Jesus was human makes it easier for us to go to him for help. In his humanity and divinity we can find everything we need to comfort us and to save us.

To the Brethren scattered abroad:

I have decided to devote my whole time to evangelizing in a general way during the next year, and expect to be ready to begin the work Sept. 10, providing I receive enough calls between now and then for such work in different states and territories. I expect to go forth and do the best work I am capable of, depending upon support from the brethren who are interested in this kind of work. I ask no stated sum. I expect to freely give, and it will depend upon my supporters as to how freely I receive. I am offered a very lucrative position in secular work, which I shall be forced to take if the brethren do not consider that my services are worth as much spreading the gospel as they are to commercialism. Its up to you, brethren, to decide the matter. Send me no money, but send in your pledges as to how much you will give during the next year toward the work of spreading the gospel. I do not however, expect you to raise a sum equal to what I am offered in secular work. Address me at Ft. Dodge, Iowa.

Communicated.

Home, Sweet Home.

To the weary pilgrim, tossed to and fro upon the adverse billows of life, what word is there that sounds so sweet as Home. In my study of the Prophetic Word. I find so many evidences that we are nearing our Eternal Home.

The fulfillment of the following Scripture speak, as it were, in thunder tone that we are nearing that Eternal Rest.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears." "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

In the world at large, how little sound doctrine will be endured. This in our day is being fulfilled so completely, that it has invaded the Church of God itself. As an evidence of this, of recent date, Bro J. F. Wagoner and myself recently attended one of the Conferences. Brother Wagoner preached sound doctrine, after he was through, he said he was attacked as to the truthfulness of what he said, as he never was attacked before.

During the intermission we consulted together as to how to prevent, if possible, our paper passing into the hands of those who hold the truth in weakness. That resulted in the manner in which I was attacked in the last RESTITUTION. It needs no refutation by myself, the spirit in which it was written condemns it. If you wish to know more about it, address a personal letter to J. F. Wagoner, Rochester, Indiana. As to the persecution, I will say, that for years I have been the subject of a petty persecution by teachers among us who hold the truth in a light and easy manner. I felt that I must preach the truth uncompromisingly as I found it written in the Sacred Word. This never suits teachers who can teach to please; which is the practice of these last days, fulfilling prophecy so accurately.

Wherever possible they have sought to drive me from the field. They knew I had no salary, or even pledges of support, but depended entirely on freewill donation; hence if they could through their influence prevent my getting calls to preach, they would drive me from the field.

Now this has reached a point in which I am bound to put the matter plainly before you for your individual action.

Is it your wish that I should lay down my pen, and forever cease to write upon prophetic matters and things pertaining to the Blessed Hope? Is it your wish that I should cease to travel and proclaim the Glad News of the coming Kingdom? I have been pursued so closely that a change will have to come, or I will be compelled to abandon the field. You will have to give me your sympathy, moral and financial support, if I continue. If I have to resort to secular employment for a living, my work by pen and voice must stop. I cannot do both.

I can continue in the work if I can get appointments to proclaim the glad News in your respective neighborhoods. In a financial way all I ask is for you to pay my expenses and what you can afford in addition for the support of my family. I ask for nothing more than I can give an equivalent for in preaching the Word.

If it is not convenient to hold meetings at your home, there are places who want them who cannot meet the expense. You can take a share in that work.

I have an anxious call to go to Montana to preach the gospel, with prospects for additions by baptism. It is so far away they cannot meet the expense. They suggest if I could get appointments on the route until I could get within three or four hundred miles or of them they could meet the rest.

Now if brethren through Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Dakota wish service, I may be able to reach there. Let brethren in those states named who would like to hold meetings, write and let me know, and if I get sufficient I will make the trip to Montana.

If you wish me to continue my work in the Lord's Vineyard let me hear from you as it is convenient.

In the Blessed Hope.
W. H. WILSON.

Table Talk.

1 Cor x 12 to 14, Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry. What a timely admonition it is that Paul gives us and how aptly it applies to us in more than one way. Take heed lest he fall—when? When he thinketh he standeth.

When we think we are strong and can do things so well by ourselves then is the time we are most apt to loosen our hold on God by neglecting to study his Word and rely on our own strength. Then is the time we forget or neglect to go to God in prayer to keep us from yielding to temptations, to keep the things of this life from enticing us away from the things of God.

We must not forget that we are poor weak mortals, and without the grace of God we are doomed to death, and all we could do would not change it one iota. We must keep in mind also what James says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. If we only stop to think when we are tempted to do those things which we should not do, and see why we are tempted we will see at once it is to gratify fleshly desire which will bring us deeper to the things of the world and further from those things we should be as heirs of God through Christ.

We are idolators in so much as we are subject to the influences and obey them, of the things of this life which are frivolous. Some say I simply just cannot quit doing this thing or that thing no matter how hard I try. Those things are our masters then and we are idol worshipers in so far as we obey those things, no matter if it is gossip, fine clothes, fine homes, tobacco, pleasures of society or whatever it may be, in a great many cases it is money.

Some people think they will give what is left to the cause of Christ after they use what they want for themselves, and mostly it is the cause of Christ that is left, and no money. All these things are idolatry, brothers and sisters, just to the extent we allow them to govern us. Therefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry. Whether therefore ye eat or drink: or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

Reciprocal Duties.

"Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God."—Eph. v 21.

In this portion of his Epistle to the Ephesians, St. Paul deals with important reciprocal duties, and urgently presses the rules of Christian living from the facts of Christian truth.

He appeals to those who have professed their belief in Jesus Christ to "walk in love," as followers of their Lord, and to recognise that there rests on them a special responsibility to "walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise.....understanding what the will of the Lord is."

The appeal is one that we may still take with profit to ourselves, for reciprocal responsibility has not lessened as daily life has become more complex.
